McGill's offence has excellent screen and draw plays, probably the best in the league. But our defence rises to the challenge and excels under pressure.

Hargreaves does not care what the score is, just as long as "we have one more point than they do". He also hopes that neither team is injured, so that this division will have a strong contender for the Atlantic Bowl.

As usual, CFRC will carry the game on 1490 AM, starting at 1pm.

Boneman's Byline

It seems that women's sports on this campus, whether they be intercollegiate or Wic, are often ignored. The major emphasis is placed on men's athletics, and the distaff athletes are shunned somewhat as a result.

This occurrence is evident from the secondary emphasis given to the women, whether it be in the facilities or the time allotted to these programs. A prime example of this is that WIC waterpolo was recently scheduled for a Friday night at 11:30 PM as they couldn't get a more suitable time. It appears that many women's sports are given times only when they aren't in use by men's intercollegiate teams or by the Bews program. Consequently, both women's intercollegiate teams and the Wic program suffer because the facilities and available times are not suitable for a great many women, just as the men's program would suffer if subjected to this injustice.

Despite having to contend with these conditions, it is obvious that the women's athletic program has made tremendous strides in recent years, especially the Wic program. The showings of numerous intercollegiate teams, field hockey, archery and synchronized swimming in particular, is a tribute to the success of these programs. In addition, the Wic program is becoming larger and initiating a more active program every year.

However, if women's athletics are to rise to the prominence of men's athletics at Queen's, it is essential that the women be given an equal share in the use of our facilities. This is the only way that we can reasonably expect the women's athletic program to be as successful as the men's program.

Day Care facility expansion a must

An extensive waiting list has made clear to the Queen's Day Care Centre that their present facilities are incapable of meeting the needs of the university and the community. The Centre has expressed its desire to expand to the university community, and, in recognition of the pressing needs this desire arises from, it is only right this plea should be heeded.

Statistics recently compiled show that approximately 13% of students at Queen's are married or divorced, with dependents. This significant number should not be overlooked. At the Van Order Complex, where the concentration of students with children is greatest, there are 136 children, 81 of these being five years of age or younger.

Attitudes have changed considerably from the days when it was thought a woman's proper place was in the home overseeing the children and the domestic life. Motherhood and childbearing are not activities to be demeaned, but often economic and social needs militate against this being a full-time profession.

Consequently, daycare should not be perceived as a babysitting service for negligent parents. Ideally it contributes to the socialization of the children as well as providing an opportunity for enrichment by the thoughtful direction of childcare workers. Increased daycare facilities would lessen the financial and time burdens felt by many student parents, allowing them more time for their studies and, perhaps, preventing the all too often necessary status as part-time students.

An expansion of present facilities, while maintaining the present quota for community children, would be a step in the right direction toward good corporate citizenship.

This Monday, students, faculty, administrators and citizens with a stake in the expansion of the Daycare facilities will be meeting with a representative from Community and Social Services for Daycare. Their dialogue will concern the present alternatives for the expansion of the Daycare facilities. Of the three proposals presently being considered, the expansion into new facilities at the Van Order Complex would be most preferable, for it would handle the most children and it is in a prime location.

Of all the possible alternatives the expansion into Van Order would demand the greatest capital outlay and in times of shrinking budgets, expenditures of any magnitude are generally shrunk from with an almost physical aversion. However with the very real need at hand, all possible avenues of raising the necessary funds should be explored by students and administrators alike. If we are to develop the required facilities we're going to have to pay for it.

AMS denies Freedom

The group "Battered Wives" should be on campus tomorrow night. But it won't be. Queen's Entertainment Agency (QEA) and the AMS, in all their sagacity, have decided the group's sexist name is too hot for us to handle; their protective arm has drawn us in and held them out.

The decision to ban "Wives" from campus is wrong, wrong for all those cliché reasons about freedom of expression. It's not a matter of what the group stands for—incidentally, their orientation is not in the least sexist. It's just that to ban a rock group, or a book, or a lecturer, or anything on the basis of its perspective of expression is to deny some fundamental rights of which universities should be the very hallmark.

This province and this country are already filled with too many people who, in positions of authority, foist their sense of morality on us all. The Ontario Censor Board, Frank Drea; Queen's Entertainment Agency and the AMS are some—and the list goes on.

Let us make our own judgements on morality, QEA and AMS. That's the way it's supposed to work.

Outer Council approves protest

Cafe boycott tomorrow

by Sean Dewart

Outer Council passed a motion last week, supporting a boycott of the Sidewalk Cafe in the University Centre on Wednesday November 8. The motion, proposed by Vicky Steele, is to protest the new seating installed last month.

Steele said that she "is optimistic about the student interest. We're not doing anyone any harm, we're just trying to make a point." She hopes to set up pickets outside the cafe on the day of the boycott.

Ross Bartlett, who seconded the motion, said the "aim of the boycott was to discourage this type of unilateral decision in the future concerning the University Centre."

AMS President Dave Brown

confirmed this, stressing that the "students must have input in these types of decisions." The Management Committee of the Centre had refused a request from the University to help pay for the seats, and according to John Koopman who sits on the committee, was not consulted again on the matter.

Suzie Q gets Women's Centre OK

by Shelly Matson

Suzie-Q Week, which starts tomorrow, is back again by popular demand and has the grudging approval of the Queen's Women's Centre.

The women's group, which was vocal in their protest of the event last year on the grounds that it was insulting and embarrassing for women to feel confined to one week of "role reversal," is giving the week conditional approval, according to Chris McCormick, the events organizer. "The Women's Centre is not against it, as long as it is fun in nature," McCormick said.

"It's up to the Queen's students to show that they really do want Suzy-Q back," McCormick added. "Last year was the highest turnout ever for a referendum at Queen's—82% wanted it back."

"The idea of girls asking guys is emphasized but not necessary," he said. "Any money left over will go to charity."

Youthful majority lineup for ID

Gee ... waiting in line for majority cards is a lot of fun.

by Tim Greenwood
Over 1600 students resigned to the fact age of majority cards will be the only acceptable proof of age for admittance into Queen's Pubs after Christmas lined up for the cards in the John Deutsch Centre last week. The operation undertaken province wide, was run at Queen's by Kingston liquor inspectors for three days last week.

Paul Laird a liquor inspector supervising one of the stations at Queen's said the response here and at similar operations held at St. Lawrence and the Memorial Centre hockey games has been "very, very good."

Laird felt the name "age of majority card" was a misnomer however, for the cards were being issued to people of all ages even senior citizens who were desirous of identification useful for cashing checks. "It should be called the Ontario Photo Identification Card. It's the finest piece of identification you can get," he said.

Clarifying popularly held misconceptions Laird said the card was available to residents of any province or country and in no way affected their voting eligibility in the area of their permanent residence.

Students often had to spend more than an hour waiting to be processed for at times the line snaked its way past the INFO booth and all the way down the stairs. The attitude of those in line ranged from those who felt the card was necessary to others who perceived the whole operation as "stupid, and a waste of time."

Steve, Arts 82 didn't mind the wait for he felt the card was justified. "They do need some sort of ID with a picture on it. I think it's more geared toward keeping drinking out of the high schools." Cathy, Arts 82, said she wasn't complaining since she was happy having made it underneath the age cut off.

Mike, a Science 82 student voiced the opinion of many around him when he asked, "What's the point, these cards are easier to forge than any other and in a dark place nobody knows the difference. It comes down to having 7,000 pieces of ID just to get in for a beer."

While the majority of those in the lineup were younger students there were a considerable number of upper year students who decided to obtain the cards. Eric, Science '82, who is a few years older than his classmates decided to obtain the card in case his table at the Pub should be asked for proof. Chris, Arts '79 who said he has been attending bars since he was sixteen was getting a card to ensure an evening out wouldn't be spoiled by being refused admission to a night spot.

For anyone who was unable to obtain an age of majority card last week application forms are available at the beer and liquor stores in Kingston.

Thrilling commando raid seizes underwear booty

by Sheila Croft

Sixty RMC cadets performed a dramatic recreation of the "Raid on Entebbe" in a daring panty raid at Victoria Hall early last Thursday morning.

The raid began at 3 a.m. when a cadet impersonating a female was escorted into the building by another cadet in normal attire.

According to Pam Schoonmaker, President of the Women's Residence Council, the two nightmen were out sweeping the front steps when the couple entered the residence. As the door was opened, 58 black-faced cadets in full combat fatigues stormed the front door. The nightmen were held outside the building while the "troops" forced their way into rooms of at least one wing on each floor in search of fruit-of-the-loom products.

With military precision the cadets of the Frontenac Squadron banged on doors, entered rooms, and searched bureau drawers leaving many girls frightened by the incident. "It scared the life out of me, I can imagine how scared and shocked the first year students would have been," said Pam Lamb, a floor proctor.

"The whole raid was planned well in advance," said a fourth year RMC student who was involved in the raid. "We had an official orders group which supervised the attack."

Twelve of the cadets were finally caught at 3:30 a.m., after Mr. Lea, the head nightman, managed to escape to the back of the residence to contact Dean Reid who phoned the police. Headquarters until the Director of Cadets bailed them out.

Miss Schoonmaker stated that the raid was "an invasion of personal rights and privacy and shouldn't be looked upon lightly."

The stolen undergarments were all carefully labelled by the RMC students and returned shortly thereafter to their rightful owners.

The following day two cadets went and apologized to the Dean of Women and official letters of apology were also sent to the residence.

Victoria Hall was the battle ground for Thursday's panty raid.

Bookstore Committee

Student input required

by Michael Allen

The Senate Bookstore Committee will hold its annual Open Meeting at 7:30pm. on Wednesday in the Polson Room of the Deutsch Centre.

The Committee was established by the Senate several years ago to provide a channel through which users of the Campus Bookstore may have their views brought before the Engineering Society who own and are responsible for its operation.

"In the past, attendance at these meetings has been quite low—no matter how much we publicize the meeting, we never got more than a handful of students," said Principal Bater of the Theological College, a two-term Chairman of the Committee until last year.

Real dissatisfaction with the operation of the bookstore does exist, however, Principal Bater reported that one professor characterized the bookstore with the description, "as soon as you come in the door, it's a campus version of Mac's Milk." Still, Bater did make it clear that the majority of serious complaints had been, "with the trade book and magazine sections, there simply wasn't a variety of serious literature available for students and faculty to buy."

Professor Barnes, of the English Department, currently the Committee's Chairman, echoed Dr. Bater's opinion.

"We should not allow the bookstore to retreat to just selling texts, we need a comprehensive thing. The Book Merchant in the Deutsch Centre, sells trade books now, but it might not always be there for service."

"We need input Wednesday night," said Barnes, "that's the purpose of the Open Meeting, providing a forum for people to articulate their problems and complaints."

However, both Bater and Barnes praised the bookstore for its honest effort to provide students with texts in time for classes.

"They deserve full due for their text book operation," said Bater, "they do a fine job handling traffic during registration and place a high priority on efficiently ordering texts."

The World in Brief

by Jane Stirling and Paul Tinari
MADRID - In a transition from dictatorship to democracy, Spain's new constitution was formally sealed. Members of the Senate and Congress gave overwhelming approval to this charter which defines Spain as a parliamentary monarchy with King Juan Carlos as head of state.
Final approval for the charter must come from the Spanish in a December referendum.TORONTO - Dave Cooke, MPP for Windsor-Riverside expressed concern in the Toronto legislature about the delays in processing OSAP applications. For thousands of Ontario students, their OSAP awards have not been received.
500 applicants from the University of Western Ontario and 300 applicants from the University of Toronto have still not heard from the ministry. In addition, 4,733 applications have to be reprocessed because of errors.ROME - Italian hospitals face a crisis situation with the strike of auxiliary staff belonging to the country's three major labour unions. Striking workers include cleaners, medical auxiliaries and cleaning staff. Many patients, having to endure reduced services, have discharged themselves and gone home. Inquiries into the deaths of two children, possibly attributed to the reduced services, are now being undertaken.TEHRAN, IRAN - Strikes halting Iran's oil exports have led to the country's worst political crisis in 25 years. More than 100 people have died in disturbance against the Shah of Iran's oil policies.
Strikes in oil industry centres stopped exports and could affect supplies of crude to local refineries.OTTAWA - In a treasury report to the Ontario legislature, Treasurer
Frank Miller stated Ontario's net cash requirement is about $1.5billion. This budget shows an increase over the former budgetary allowance of 1 billion.
There are no government plans for outside borrowing to raise the needed money.QUEBEC - The long-expected advertising campaign of the P.Q. government encouraging French Quebeckers to vote in favour of separation in the upcoming referendum has now begun, and is expected to rise in intensity in the next few months.Over $100,000 will be spent on the media campaign according to recent estimates. The messages have played on Quebec's abundance of raw materials and natural resources.According to LeDevoir and Le Patriarch, the Separatist government is preparing a bill to lower the provincial voting age to 16 in time for the referendum, realizing that separation remains unpopular with middle-aged people with capital investments and real estate. Mr. Levesque has not made any statements one way or the other regarding the truth of this allegation.OTTAWA - Direct time loss from work stoppages due to strike and lockouts amounted to 999,850 man-days in July 1978, reports Labour Canada. The number of stoppages was 214 and the number of workers involved was 82,720. The comparative figures for June were 200 stoppages, 102,132 workers and 698,020 man-days.Thirty-four of the work stoppages in July involved 500 or more workers. Sixteen of these were in Manufacturing, nine in Construction, four in Mines, two in Transportation & Utilities, and one each in Fishing, Services and Public Administration. Together these 34 large stoppages accounted for 77 percent of all time lost in July.CARING FOR KINGSTON!!! have shortened their name to The Wives following a controversy sparked recently by the group's name.In a television interview, Toby Swan, Wives guitarist, explained the group's original name. "We're a rock and roll band called The Battered Wives. We treat it symbolically meaning, we're rock and roll wives who've been battered by the industry. We don't, nor have we ever advocated violence of any sort."Swan also cited the adverse publicity created by enraged, misunderstanding women's groups for the name change and the cancellation of many of the group's scheduled appearances with Elvis Costello. We're fed up with Women's groups getting publicity because of our name," he said.Despite the name change WAVAW (women against violence against women) staged a rally protesting the group and their name claiming that the group was still exploitive. The protest, last Friday evening at the O'Keefe Centre in Toronto, assumed near-comic proportions according to some onlookers.

Ronson to OSAP Board

positions on the Appeal Board for Ontario Student Assistance Program (OSAP).John Ronson, a third year law student, is to serve on the board under the administration of Bette Stephenson, Minister of Colleges and Universities.Ronson explained, "The function of the board is to consider special cases" where students cannot meet the full cost of their education. "A common example," says Ronson, "is when a parent refuses to contribute to their child's education, or there may be extraordinary expenses due to medical or court costs."

City election apathy disgusts reader

Learning by living

The Editor

I write this after coming home from the Meet-the-Candidates session in Ellis Auditorium, and I am Mad as Hell - mad as hell because only fifteen students showed up. Apathy is one thing, but a rejection of the community in which one resides is something else. Aren't you interested in what happens in this town? Dammit, this is your home and what City Council does has a big effect on your 3 or 4 years at Queen's. Student housing, transportation, utility rates, urban development - all these issues affect you. Surely you could have spared 2½ hours to show your concern for what is going on.

This is a university environment, and you call yourselves students. What are you learning? Do you naively believe that you only 'learn' by listening to Professor Smith spewing forth on the transformational elevations of diffuse differential equations, or whatever? You learn by 'living', by participating in all the events that constitute your existence as a social being. I am ashamed that I am a member of a student body that is so apathetic, so disinterested in what is going on, so unwilling to learn by participating in all aspects of the learning experience that it does not deserve to call itself a university.

What message do you think the candidates for mayor and aldermen got on Thursday night? Queen's students just don't care! And if this is true, then you deserve everything that Council decides to dish out to you. Just be glad that, unlike all of you, the mayor and aldermen will be responsible citizens. As for the future, if you are to be the leaders of tomorrow, then heaven help us!

Strike right threatened

by Carol Town and Richard Harris

When the government recently broke the postal workers' strike by ordering that they return to work or lose their jobs, some Canadians applauded this action believing that above all "the mail must come through" in order to "keep the economy going". But this is a very limited, dangerous attitude for it fails to recognize that there are broader issues involved. If the government can once legislate postal workers back to work because the post office is an "essential service", they can extend this argument to many other workers, thereby eroding the basic right to strike.

Before the recent strike, the inside workers were without a contract for 18 months. They continually stressed that if an agreement was not soon made, they would strike. Yet the government virtually ignored this and then "were surprised" when the union struck. Using public funds, the government put paid advertisements in the Globe and Mail which distorted the core issues. Moreover, we haven't heard much about the fact that the RCMP raided the CUPW offices to obtain the names of those postal workers who actively supported their right to strike. Yes, our "knights on white horses" are at it again! Nor has the media stressed that some of those workers who struck have been personally harassed or even fired by post office management!

Freedom of speech exists, but in this case, only for those who support the government's position or those who are willing to be arrested or fired.

The government's action against postal workers is not an isolated incident. They are setting a precedent which could ultimately deny thousands of workers the democratic right to strike. Sure, strikes are inconvenient, strikes cost money. But the right to strike is the essential instrument needed by workers to win and retain reasonable working conditions and living standards. Think about it. Without that right, today we wouldn't enjoy progressive social programs like health care and unemployment insurance.

In Canada, for too long we have perpetuated a myth that government always acts in the "public interest". The authoritarian political abuse of police and court powers which we have witnessed recently is not acceptable if we are in any way going to call our society "just" and "democratic".

If you are concerned, join The Committee to Support the Right to Strike. There will be a brief meeting tonight, Tues. Nov. 7 at 7:30pm at 136 Beverley St.

Brown explains Wives' banning

The Editor

In light of recent comments in the journal and elsewhere, I thought that I should explain our decision not to hire the band "Battered Wives".

The QUE (AMS) has a mandate to bring entertainment over campus which is suitable to the Queen's Community. In this case, we received numerous letters and phone calls indicating that the title of this group was offensive in that it played on the misfortunes of an identifiable group in our society.

What's in a name if the music isn't reflective of that attitude? Exactly, if the name doesn't reflect this attitude, why have it except for its commercial "shock" values.

If the AMS is to continue to put forward positions on the ethics of investment, surely we need to practice what we preach. The oppression of women is certainly as oppposable as the oppression of the people of Chile.

Free speech or artistic expression is not an unfettered right. It competes with other rights and here, it competes with the right of people on this campus not to have their money spent on a group that is clearly offensive to many who have taken the time to express their opinion.

This was not an easy decision, especially since it could have jeopardized out chances of bringing Costello to campus. However, I felt that we made a responsible decision, which I concur with personally, as well as in my capacity as president. As per usual, I will be pleased to speak to any student about this.

Dave Brown,
AMS President

CUPW strike a selfish power play

Editor:

I would not be surprised to discover that the author of "Back to work order a power play" (QJ, Friday Oct. 17, p. 9) had deliberately chosen to remain anonymous, his views can scarcely be popular in a country which, (thanks to our "moderate" labour movement) leads the industrialized world in time lost to strikes. It is also hard to fathom the logic behind his opinions. In what was M. Parrot forced "to adopt a radical stance" such that he had to advocate that his members ignore the highest law-making body in the land? (emphasis mine) Obviously, it was because he had the high duty of defending "collective bargaining", the great Sacred Cow of the labour movement.

Women's Centre approves of ban

The Editor:

As members of the Queen's Women's Centre we would like to comment on the implications of the name, "Battered Wives". We find it regrettable when any group capitalizes on a tragic situation such as the plight of Battered women. Regardless of the group's intentions, their name and their logo reduce a very real problem to a trivial publicity gimmick. Repeated use of a name such as the "Battered Wives" for entertainment purposes desensitizes the public to the gravity of the actual situation.

Sherry Carey, Pamela Hillen, Pam Atkinson, Terry Mitchell, Maureen Harrison, Maaret Koskinen

The government has taken the right action by refusing to allow the irresponsible CUPW executive to (yet again) deprive Canada of one of her most vital services and by arresting these men who feel their rhetoric is above the law.

"Pinko martyrs"

The Editor

I am writing in response to Daniel B. Augusta's letter preaching upon the evils of Queen's Quest and how free education will be our savior. He paints us the tear-jerking picture of the struggling student, living in a cubbyhole, eating Kraft dinner in an effort to "receive the amount of knowledge necessary to aid this ailing society we now live in".

It seems to me that this ailing society certainly does not need another demented blemish. You people who feel above the rest of us capitalists because you embrace socialism have been bombarding my eyes for four years now and I am getting rather weary. I am not attacking or supporting your Pinko ideas but I am simply saying that I do not need you to act like a martyr for your beliefs.

Queen's Quest, may come across rather pushy, but it has been partially through Alumni contributions that you have been able to eke out your existence here with an occasional cup of coffee (which should perk you up). In conclusion, I rather like Kraft dinner and you may find that it tastes better if you catch cockroaches and add them to the mixture.

Anti-cutbackers needn't aid opponents

by Dougal Macdonald

The Question of whether or not the media is inept at judging the outcome of the upcoming spring election is not important as compared to whether or not Pierre Trudeau and his party are worthy of forming the next government in Ottawa? The media in Canada has never been astute in its analyses and predictions with regards to politics, but they are good at drumming up stories in order to hold into their jobs in a country where unemployment figures are moving towards unprecedented highs.

Pierre Trudeau and his cohorts, Jim Couts and Senator Kieth Davies, have had the uncanny ability in the past two elections to mold and form the Liberal party and their valiant leader to the wishes of a large majority of the uninformed masses of Canada. There is no doubt in my mind that this will be of paramount importance once again next spring. After all, Joe Clark's strongest point is that he is not Pierre Trudeau. But do we want this country to be run by one man or by a body of elected representatives of the people?

The Liberal ship is sinking ever faster as more and more of the effective hands—John Turner and Donald Macdonald—to name two—have abandoned the pumps. The depleted ranks of the Liberal party are an embarrassment to Trudeau and the results of the October 16th by-election failed to provide any distinguished new recruits.

Thus the dichotomy faced by the Canadian public next spring is going to be one of a man versus a party. As the saying goes, many heads are better than one.

The gradual decline in almost all aspects of our country in the last ten years cannot be fully blamed upon Trudeau, but a large chunk of it can be. His policies of the last six months are too little, much too late. Politics at the federal level has stagnated, and no time is more appropriate for a spring cleaning than next spring. Joe Clark, but more importantly, the Conservative party as a whole must show that they are capable of forming the next government. They seem to be doing just that in the present parliamentary session, offering constructive, feasible alternatives to present Liberal policies. One must not forget that it is much easier to impress the public with concrete policies when in power, than when you are trying to counter that power.

I hope that in the future, the Journal will make an effort to ensure a more accurate reporting of the events which occur on campus. Misinformation such as that literature which will aid them in their battle and not pamphlets such as those of the YPCs which attempt to deny the very existence of those cutbacks which we, as a student body, are resolved to fight. If the YPCs wish to convey their view on cutbacks to Queen's students, then they should organize their own booth or vehicle for distribution of their literature on campus.

Secondly, QSACU was not displaying any information at their tables which was written by the Socialist Party. I am not even aware of the existence of such an organization here in Kingston. The only literature distributed at the booth which was not written by members of QSACU was a pamphlet by the Coalition For Full Employment. It is clearly marked on this booklet that it is published by the Coalition and not the AMS and therefore it does not necessarily reflect AMS policy.

Pierre captains a sinking ship

The Editor,

Hopefully this letter will clarify a couple of issues which were raised in an article entitled "Cattanach Removes YPC Papers From QSACU Tables" which appeared in last Friday's paper. I did not state that QSACU would not support the PC Youth as was reported in your paper. Whether or not to support the YPCs is one of the few matters which has never been considered by QSACU, let alone taking a negative stand.

What I did say was that QSACU was not required to distribute information pertaining to the cutbacks issued which was published by the YPCs. My reason for this decision is sound. The AMS Outer Council has repeatedly passed motions resolving to fight the provincial cutbacks in funding to universities. QSACU, as a committee of the AMS, was given a mandate by Outer Council to fight cutbacks. Therefore it only makes sense that QSACU distribute

This year Ontario taxpayers paid $3,770 per student for post-secondary education. Next year they'll pay $4,000 per student. Some cutback!

This figure is based on government grants to post-secondary institutions and funding for OSAP, excluding capital and maintenance grants. Ontario's 60 Campus Association

Typical Tory propaganda

Trudeau's failure to call an election this past summer is a blatant example of self-interestedness. Do we want a Prime Minister who runs the country by the polls with his own political welfare and not the welfare of the country in mind?

I feel that the Conservative party and their leader will provide the Canadian public with a viable alternative to the Liberals next spring and besides no change could be for the worse.

propagated by the article in question will only help to polarize the student body at a time when its unity is of the utmost importance.

Yours truly Rory Cattanach

Zen and the art of power politics

by Rob Reynolds

If there is an unwritten law in California politics it must surely be, "He (or she) who governs must be representative of the nut and fruitland state image." Thus enter Gov. Jerry Brown, counter-culture politician par excellence.

In his four years as governor, Brown has been a master of symbolic politics. Among his most memorable feats have been; using a 1974 Plymouth as the governor's car, abandoning the governor's mansion for an austere Sacramento apartment, and having Linda Ronstadt as his female companion. For all the world to see, the leader of perhaps the most opulent polity in the world has rejected the consumer mentality—a counter-culture wizard. Combined with his background of three and a half years in a Jesuit seminary Brown ends up looking more like Plato's philosopher-king than an American politician.

However, beneath this veneer of an anti-politician lurks the mentality of an old ward healer. His turnaround on Proposition 13, the California referendum on lowering property taxes, exposed Brown as a very crafty pol. Before the vote, Brown had virtually led the anti-proposition 13 campaign. When it passed Jerry changed, to become the pre-eminent budget cutter.

Brown took a similar stand after the Wall Street Journal ranked California as next to last as a promising location for business.

Indeed Dow Chemical shelved plans for a $500 million petrochemical plant in Northern California due to the myriad of state ecological requirements. Accordingly Brown altered his gospel of limitations - "less is more" - to apply to environmentalists who were told to consider their effect upon employment and economic well-being.

Indeed, at times Brown seems more like a character from a Kurt Vonnegut or Tom Robbins novel. Marshall Frady wrote in a recent edition of the New York Review of Books, "It became Brown's whim to play, over the loudspeakers in the park beside the capitol anthems by the Sufi Choir of San Francisco, Gregorian chants, and Beethoven's Ninth, along with ballads by Loretta Lynn, Helen Reddy, Merle Haggard."

Zen and the art of power politics? Brown's ambience is somewhat deceiving however. Pragmatic politics perhaps more than Zen inspired the Governor to impart

If Brown's political ambitions extended no further than the California borders the statement would be interesting but not earth-shattering. Brown, however, entered a few primaries in the 1976 presidential race. He won in Maryland, Nevada, inspired write-ins in Oregon, claimed some uncommitted in New Jersey and Rhode Island, and pushed Carter in California. As a result Brown is now either Carter's most formidable opponent or at least even with Senator Ted Kennedy.

Presuming Brown wins in the California elections, held yesterday, he will be in a strong position to challenge Carter in 1980. So ineffective was Brown's California opponent, Evell Younger, that Newsweek dubbed him "Pa Kettle on valium."

Looking ahead one is forced to examine Brown's possible constituency should he run for president. His refusal to be aligned on a right-left spectrum may not augur well for his securing labor support, an important pillar of Democratic Party strength. His youth appeal and philosophic nature will cause skepticism among Southern Democrats, another important pillar. Moreover, the Southern vote is one of Carter's strongholds.

On the positive side, he could well curry favor among liberal intellectuals and minority groups. The "bottom-line" may be best represented by a Carter aide who remarked, "How in hell are they going to vote for some Buddhist Jesuit out there in Indiana and East Texas or in Queen's or South Boston?"

Brown: Buddhist Jesuit populism

E. Caulfield Fleming

Cosy three; fiancée, YPC and me

Welcome back, faithful reader. When we parted on Friday I was finishing breakfast with my friend, the YPC (Young Progressive Conservative). I had just spent the night with YPC and his pretty fiancée. That should not sound too unusual; I am doing a full 24 hour study of this intriguing and multiplying species and so, in the interests of journalistic truth, I dared not leave any sheet untended.

And now, to continue my tale... 9:30-3:30 pm: Classes for YPC. He takes Economics. I don't understand a word the Professors are saying. Neither does YPC. Neither do the Professors. Then I remember that these people are called Economists. Now I understand a lot.

3:30-5:00 pm: Squash. YPC plays hard and cheats a lot. He won't let me smoke while I play. I think he's afraid that if I win, I'll start bragging to his friends as to how I beat him on one lung.

Afterwards, we shower. He uses Arid Spray-on deodorant. I don't use anything, because reporters are supposed to smell a little. It impresses people. They think we've been busy chasing down hot leads.

YPC takes a lot longer to get dressed than I. That's because he has to look perfect for his Best Friend's Fiancee, with whom we are dining this evening. If you read my column on Friday you will understand why it is YPC's Best Friend's Fiancee we are meeting and not YPC's Very Own Fiancee. If you didn't read my column on Friday, you can go to hell.

5:00-6:00 pm: The Happy Hour. YPC and I talk about lots of things, but mostly about women. If YPC's aren't talking about women, then they're talking about trust funds. All YPC's have trust funds. After diamonds, it's the quickest way to a Fiancee's heart. We also talk about movies. YPC liked "Animal House" a lot, except for John Belushi, who is fat and ugly. Since September, YPC has been to 14 toga parties. They are good opportunities for sizing up (and seizing) Fiancees.

6 pm: Dinner at Best Friend's Fiancee's house. It's a cosy little threesome again; Fiancee, YPC and me. As we are all university students, we talk about university issues. Like how it's good they're clamping down on OSAP loans because everyone was abusing the system. And how it was a good idea to raise foreign students' fees because they were just using us. We'd give them a good education and then they'd rush off home and turn into Communists. Or else they wouldn't go home at all, but rather they'd stay here in Ontario and take away our jobs.

8 pm: Dinner, which was steak, is over. YPC and BF's F make funny little coughing noises. They give little yawns. They want me to leave.

I hope my editor doesn't mind if I wasn't with YPC for the full 24 hours.

MacINTOSH - CORRY

by Joanna Dean

A maze for the frosh, a nightmare for the handicapped and second home for most of the arts and science students at Queen's, MacIntosh-Corry Hall is the largest building on campus.

Designed by architect Ron Thom, the hall was completed in 1973 at the cost of six and one half million dollars.

The construction budget was fixed and in order to stay close to the original price of six million dollars the size of the project had to be reduced.

Plans had called for an entire block to be constructed between the parking lot and the Law building. This was chopped and the facilities it was to house were reshuffled to other areas.

Other cuts resulted in two elevator shafts in the north and south ends of the hall being left empty.

This has made the building quite inaccessible to handicapped people. "There are something like 47 different floor levels in this building," said Professor Tinline, the chairman of the House Committee for MacIntosh-Corry Hall. Most are connected only by stairs.

The original hopes that the building would foster communication between faculties have had only limited realization. The "student street", the broad corridor running through the building, has fulfilled its purpose of connecting all the different elements of the hall.

"There were motherhood hopes of everyone congregating in the coffee areas," Tinline said, "but the big lounges never did get all the different faculties together."

Another change in the building will be the introduction of the Documents part of the library to the basement level of the C section. The library will take over space presently used for classes and for the extension department, as well as part of the Computer Facilities.

The Extension department will become part of the Faculty of Arts and Science and Tinline said user stats indicate that the class space taken over will not be missed.

Other smaller changes around the building, such as sound proofing of classroom doors, are often the result of action taken by the House Committee. This Committee, made up of the students, staff and faculty in the building, acts as a watch dog group advising those in control such as the Physical Plant, or University Center.

Students with a gripe can send a letter to Peter Harrell in the Computer Facilities and he will bring it to the committee's attention said Tinline.

Last year the committee received a lot of complaints about lone students taking over whole classrooms to study in. Signs were put on the doors about room use. "I've heard it worked" said Tinline.

A recent energy saving move was to put timers on the light switches. "The professor sets the timer when he enters the room for the necessary amount of time," Tinline explained.

MacIntosh-Corry was designed as a low energyconsumption building. Heat pumps transfer hot air from the inside rooms to outside ones in the winter and transfer cool air in the summer.

One thing the House Committee can't do much about is the decreasing size of the janitorial staff for the building. "There are 36 less jobs this year compared to last year," Tinline said. "Students are going to have to pitch in."

The committee is planning a campaign with the help of DSC representatives to encourage students to pick up after themselves.

Elvis Costello: abrupt but intense

by Brent Lavictore

Pigeon-toed, bespectacled, resplendent in all his anti-splendor, Elvis Costello took the stage while a group of "punks" bounced up and down hoping to attract the attention of their "King." Quickly ramming through three of his most popular numbers, "Mystery Dance," "Radio, Radio," and "Lip Service," before stopping to say hello to the audience, he gave us an indication of how the night was to be (if you can call forty-five minutes a full night).

Aside from his incredible performance, the most notable aspect of the Costello concert was his refusal to do an encore despite the ten minute ovation after a scant fourteen songs had been played. And ending that should have been entirely predictable for Elvis fans Costello has openly waged war on the music establishment, while supergroups such as Fleetwood Mac plan on as many as two or three encores in their concerts, Costello refuses to be caught up in that type of "false" professionalism. I, like most people who attended the concert, was very disappointed with the shortness of the Costello set but, if you pause to think about it, what more could he have offered us? The intensity was held at a fever pitch for the entire show and most of the material from his two albums was covered.

Let it suffice to say that when Costello and the Attractions launched into Mystery Dance for the first song they didn't come down until they left the stage, less than an hour later. Even during the more controlled songs such as "Watchin' the Detectives," there was a definite tension flowing from the stage, a feeling of maniacal speed waiting to be released. When they unleashed their faster numbers the beat became obsessive. Clearly, Costello relies heavily on the Attractions for much of his music's drive.

Appropriately, the technical effects were kept to a minimum, as always with Costello, the music comes first. When the lights were deployed in an artistic manner during the last two songs their effectiveness was optimum because of the refusal on Costello's part to overgloss his shows with peripheral features. In this way, especially, the Costello concert was a true indication of what the man and his music are all about.

The exuberant group of Costello fans who surrounded the stage's apron and rocked on throughout the concert were also an excellent example of what Costello is all about. For the most part, acne-plagued adolescents were nowhere to be seen, the age group was surprisingly centered around late teens and early twenties. Though they were all highly excited, there were no "incidents" to mar the concert.

Individual impressions will, no doubt, vary among those who witnessed the concert. Costello has never tried to impress anyone, some will claim they weren't. However, when you witness such an intense concert it's difficult to dismiss the experience. Because of this, I'm certain the concert will remain one of the year's most memorable.

Evans

Elvis and The Attractions "pump it up" and drive a relentless beat.

Waters off to Europe

by Dot Tuer

Muddy Waters' sudden cancellation of his Grant Hall appearance on November 17, 1978 was due to an opportunity for bigger and better things. Muddy cancelled twenty-five appearances in November and December in order to join Eric Clapton in a European tour. Mark Opzoomer of the QEA, however, stated that Muddy will hopefully fulfill his Kingston commitment in the spring of 1979.

A legend in the blues spectrum of the music field, Muddy Waters has been based in Chicago since the 1930's. His vigorous and earthy approach to blues has been considered as one of the roots of both rock and roll and jazz. At a recent appearance in Montreal on October 27, 1978, Muddy joined the James Cotton Band and illustrated that time cannot slow him down. Over sixty, Muddy stirred the audience to an emotional and energizing peak with such oldies as "I'm Your Hoochie-Koochie Man," "Monday Blues," and "I Feel So Good." An incredible magnet on stage, Muddy is one of the old-time kings of his field who is well-worth waiting until spring to see

Stringband: incredible versatility

by Elin Steele

Saturday night Bitter Grounds was treated to the Whilom Stringband, formerly Stringband with a couple of new faces after a splitting of the original group last Christmas. Dennis Henkle performed on the bass with the group for the first time very successfully and Nancy Ahern from Halifax demonstrated her talents in writing, singing and playing the guitar, spoons and drum. "Smiling" Terry King was back on fiddle and Bob Bossin, the mouthpiece of the group, was in great form.

Steve Adams, a Queen's student from New York, warmed up the audience with a couple of his own tunes, "The Way of Being You" and "Indiana Springtime", followed by renditions of Bradstreet (he specified the old Bradstreet!) Chris DeBurgh and James Taylor. Early in the night Steve set up an easy rapport with his listeners who sang along enthusiastically to Don McLean's "American Pie". I'm sure that Steve is welcome back at Bitter Grounds anytime.

Though there were a few amusing problems with intervening CERC sound cables, Stringband put on an impressive and varied collection of songs and anecdotes. "The Maple Leaf Dog", a somewhat altered version of Canadian history commissioned by the CBC (and never used for "unknown reasons") set the pace for an evening of several tongue-in-cheek looks at ourselves. However, it was followed by a beautiful song by Nancy Ahern about her longing for her Maritime home, revealing another side of Stringband.

The dry humour of Terry King came through in his renditions of "Won't You Tell Me Dear What Size Your Shoes Are?", a song of unrequited love, and the encore of "Canadian Capers", a ridiculous American view of the Canadian north. The band showed their admiration for Stan Rogers by playing "Eogarty's Cove" and for Robert Paquette with "Rigadon". We were also treated to fiddle tunes, Irish and Newfoundland ballads and many other old Stringband favourites. The evening ended with the ever-popular

"Daddy Was a Ball-player: I Heard a Lot of Stories and They Weren't About Baseball".

All in all the evening was a great success thanks to the talents of the performers and to the people who came to see them. We hope to have a big crowd out for David Essig next week which promises to be two excellent nights—Saturday and Sunday above the Bookstore in Clark Hall at 8:30 p.m. So...COME ON OUT!

McGill Wind Ensemble

Special

The McGill Wind Ensemble will perform in Grant Hall on Thursday, 9 November at 8:30 p.m. Admission to the concert is free.

The McGill Wind Ensemble consists of 35 to 40 students of the Faculty of Music at McGill.

For the past four years the ensemble has been under the direction of Dr. Robert Gibson and gives eight concerts during the academic year at the faculty, during which it performs a wide variety of original and arranged music for winds, which ranges from Baroque to Contemporary works for a full Wind Ensemble as well as for smaller groups.

In addition to the Faculty concerts, the Wind Ensemble plays at schools in the Montreal area and last year gave successful exchange concerts at the University of Toronto and the University of Western Ontario. On this present tour, which will take them from Kingston for two concerts in Prescott, they will perform works by Bernstein, Adler, Kurka, Riegger, Weinberger, Mozart and William Schuman.

The visit to Grant Hall on Thursday is sponsored by the Music Department at Queen's as part of an exchange concert when Queen's Wind Ensemble visits McGill next March.

Two Solitudes: an answer for Canada culture fiends

by Mark Henderson

The constant debate concerning the future direction of the Canadian film industry has approached a redundancy of the most ludicrous proportions. Should we develop a truly Canadian Cinematic Identity? What about the profitable American market to our south? Canadian movies are boring. Let's go to see

Two Solitudes concentrates upon conflict of beliefs, attitudes, and cultural differences that are painful to broach. Set mainly in a small French-Canadian town, Catholic regionalism faces the overpowering realities of growing modern industrialism brought by English Canadians representing wealth and might. It's a topical and historical problem to many Canadians, and one which would seem to have an easy acceptance in the Canadian film industry and with domestic audiences as well. Not so.

Producer James Shavick tried for many years to get Canadian backing for the film venture, turning down various foreign-backing offers in the process. When I spoke to him last week, he was very proud of the result that years of determination and frustration culminated in. He was much more guarded about the potential success of Two Solitudes, having closed after a six week run in Toronto, the most potentially profitable region for film marketing. Trying for a polished and professional look to his product on a par with Hollywood achievement, he certainly achieved his goal. The film has a visual grace which may 'look' American, but is distinctly Canadian as well. Director Lionel Chetwynd also adapted the screenplay from the novel, these aspects of Two Solitudes are admirable and deserve respect in any film making sphere.

Shavick is a young Montreal producer who got much of his experience at the NEB, CBC, and in private industry. Two Solitudes is his first major feature and 'pet' project. The dilemma of making a Canadian film with international appeal was confronted by casting 2 foreign actors (Jean-Pierre Aumont and Stacey Keach) in the lead roles, but for rather unique reasoning. Shavick felt that a more objective point-of-view could be achieved by using non-Canadian leads, as he wasn't aiming for a political statement or a one-sided approach to the French-English question. Considering this attitude, the film effectively side-steps a pointed contemporary relevance, and becomes an intriguing and thorough analysis of social conflict, one that could easily apply to any nation which creates cultural divisions.

The economic aspect of conflict is foregrounded. English entrepreneur Huntley McQueen (Stacey Keach) deviously 'plays off' any resistance to his scheme to isolate and destroy his partner/rival, Jean Claude Tallard, the respected politician who is the seigneur of the town. Tallard (Jean-Pierre Aumont) is the centre of the film with his roots deep in French-Canada and his efforts in federal politics to try to make the transition of his people into the 20th century as smooth as possible. That his efforts to succeed in this romantic and totally unrealistic notion fail totally, is the aspect of Two Solitudes which gives the film a power and depth rare in English-Canadian film.

The two major settings of the film are the exclusive private clubs of Montreal and Toronto, and the small, quiet town that becomes the focal point of the drama. In the clubs, we get a feeling of the powers involved as industrialists mix with politicians and religious figures alike. This is contrasted to the town of St. Marc striving to maintain a rural serenity while keeping pace with the modern world around it.

The damage caused by traditional allegiance and respect for figures of authority and supremacy ultimately generate the tragic outcome of the film, a sad and inescapable part of Canadian history. Two Solitudes is a really good piece of film making, its makers dealing with the material expertly and seriously. Its success is important to the Canadian film industry in the sense that, if we don't support quality Canadian films like this one, do we deserve any better?

Showcase '78 celebrates music

Special Showcase '78 is a musical first in Queen's Music Department presentations and it offers a wide variety of kinds of music performance in terms of instrumental groupings as well as choral, all in one package. Each ensemble will perform individually later in the academic year, but at this concert the audience will be offered an overview of most of the Music Department's large ensembles.

Queen's Chamber Orchestra is directed by Deszo Vaghy and features cello soloist Alex Adaman, a fourth year Bachelor of Music student. Adaman plays as well for the Kingston Symphony Association. The forty-five member Chamber Orchestra will play the well-known "Overture" to Mozart's "Don Giovanni" and the first movement of Dvorak's "Cello Concerto in B Minor, Opus 104."

Queen's Wind Ensemble is directed by its founder, Duane Bates and is now in its tenth consecutive season. The ensemble performs works mainly originally written for brass, woodwinds and percussion, and consists of fifty members selected by audition from students and faculty at Queen's. Their program on Wednesday will include Shostakovich's "Festival Overture", with its dramatically rhythmic pulse strongly featuring the percussion section, Schuller's "Meditation" an award winner which is jazz influenced; and Holst's "Chaconne", superbly orchestrated and one of the most famous of all band compositions.

Queen's Choral Ensemble directed by Denise Narcisse-Mair has one hundred and sixty voices and is popular with Kingston audiences. Their program illustrates the versatility of choral singing in that it ranges from early Classical Haydn to contemporary Canadian, represented by composer Lorne Betts, Negro Spirituals, to England's Vaughan Williams' "O Clap Your Hands" with brass quintet and percussion accompaniment.

Queen's Jazz Ensemble is under the direction of Duane Bates this term, and is now in seventh season. Full instrumentation of five trumpets, live sax's live tubas and four rhythm, allows a wide variety of styles including big-band classics, avant garde, rock and "home-grown" charts. The program features such pieces as LeGrady's "Lady Sings the Blues", Woody Herman's "The Raven Speaks" and Herbie Hancock's "Fat Mama".

Since Scarlett and MacLean started playing together just over a year ago they appear to have had some success, including a number of radio interviews on CBS and the completion of a six week tour in Britain.

The guest set was performed by Logan Murray. Though born and currently living in Ontario, Logan MacLean played last Saturday night at the Scarecrow to a small but select audience that apparently passed over the flashier attractions of Elvis Costello or the Science Fomal. The arrangements used by Scarlett and MacLean are simple but effective. Scarlett handles the lyrics and melody on guitar, complemented by MacLean with either wash-board or harmonica. Their music has a distinctive Twenties and Thirties Blues sound, owing much to old classics such as "If You Were The Only Girl, Sweet Sue or Ain't She Sweet."

Scarlett refused to categorize his particular version of Blues Music stating that he adopted his particular mixture of Blues and Ragtime from a desire for very simple but evocative tunes. Scarlett's own compositions such as "Just Friends or The U.K. Blues" well illustrate their ability to contain many lyrical and melodic images in a very simple way. The tone of the evening was one of smooth, relaxed melodies the only discordant note was the marring of the first part of Logan Murray's set with a hissing coming from monitors left on by accident. Aside from this it was a worthwhile evening.

Coming Nexus

by Julian Cunningham

Six virtuoso percussionists, a prominent Canadian poet, and a choreographer-dancer will share the stage in a concert taking place Saturday night at 8:30 p.m. in Grant Hall.

The percussionists are Nexus, a group that has already gained an international audience through its extensive tours (including Japan, England and the U.S.), offer some remarkable improvisational playing in styles ranging from Ragtime to J.S. Bach.

The poet is Earl Birney. He will read from the poetry that has made him Canadian literary phenomenon in his own lifetime.

The final dimension will be Kyra Lober, an accomplished dancer with choreography credits in New York and Toronto.

This unlikely trio will present the sort of show that one will sorely regret having missed. The show will be entertaining, illuminating, and probably very unusual.

Take the plunge

Hall on Wednesday November 8th at 8:30 p.m. Admission is free but donations at the door will be accepted.

Eastern division Champs

by Don MacKinnon

For the second year in a row, the Queen's Golden Gaels have captured the Eastern Division Championship in the Ontario-Quebec Intercollegiate Football Conference. The Gaels' convincing 23-1 victory Saturday afternoon over the McGill Redmen lands them a berth in this Sunday's Atlantic Bowl, where their opponents will be the St. Francis Xavier X-Men (12-9 winners over Acadia).

Though the Gaels entered the game with a seven and zero record, they had been struggling in their last two games. On Saturday, as quarterback Jim Rutka pointed out, "We really came together as a team."

A great deal of that cohesion was supplied by the play of Rutka himself. After being sidelined for over a month with a knee injury, and understandably apprehensive about his physical condition, Rutka's performance at quarterback was nothing short of remarkable. He threw touchdown passes of 12 and 16 yards to Dave Best and Bob O'Doherty respectively and was good on 15 of 26 attempts for a net passing total of 287 yards.

Credit to much of that yardage must go to the offensive line. Coupled with effective pass blocking served up by the backs, the line gave Rutka time to dissect the McGill secondary. Only once did the McGill rush get to Rutka, and that was after the ball had been released. Mark Roe at right offensive tackle, filling in for injured Peter Sops, "came off the bench and did a hell of a job", as offensive captain Randy Edgeworth put it.

To complement the fine play of the offense, was once again the exceptional play of the defence. McGill's allstar quarterback, Vic Pywowskuc, had four of his 41 passes picked off. Two deep backs, Ted Tyczka and Bob Mullen and two linebackers, Bruce Balson and John Vernon accounted for one each. Defensive captain Jim D'Andrea considers this year's defense, "the finest unit I've ever played with".

McGill appeared to be up for the game, but a stingy Gaels defense didn't allow them a first down until near the end of the first quarter. With Rutka throwing effectively on first down, the Gaels marched 60 yards, only to see their hopes dashed by Don Charter's first of two interceptions. Later in the first quarter, a bad exchange between Rutka and Pat Pliska led to a fumble that was recovered by McGill. Ted Tyczka's interception on the next play set the Gaels up on the 39, and Blaine Shore broke the scoring jinx shortly afterwards with a 15 yard field goal at 12:06.

Though McGill marched down field after the score, their third and one gamble from the 16 was stopped. Early in the second quarter, Bob Mullen, moved back into the secondary with Rutka at quarterback, intercepted an errant pass in the end zone to bail the Gaels out of trouble again.

Almost immediately Tony Manasterisky grabbed a short pass from Rutka and nimbly evaded would-be tacklers as he ran 33 yards down the sidelines to the McGill one. Tom McCartney crashed over from the one on the next play.

The next time the Gaels had possession, Rutka went to the air with authority. Listed as 5'9", diminutive Dave Best surprised the McGill secondary with two astonishing receptions, including a brilliant 12 yard diving catch for a touchdown. Blaine Shore's second successful convert made the score 17 to 0 for Queen's with only 1:58 to play in the half.

In the second half, the Gaels wasted no time in administering the coup de grace. McGill received the Gaels kickoff and promptly went to the air. Pywowskuc's first pass was picked off by John Vernon who rambled 30 yards with the ball before being brought down on the McGill 30. After a couple of fine runs by Marinucci, Rutka fired a 16 yard strike into the sure hands of Bob O'Doherty for a touchdown. Though the convert was missed, the game was essentially over for McGill.

Facing a 23 to 0 deficit, the Redmen could only manage a 45 yard punt single by Phil Roberts at 6:48 of the third quarter.

While the Gaels offense played conservatively, the defense opened the fourth quarter by snaring its fourth interception, a one handed catch by Bruce Balson. McGill was not only outplayed, they were punished physically in the second half. Their allstar halfback, Tom Barbeau, suffered a broken shoulder when he was crunched by linebacker Fred Prinzen. McGill met its match at the hands of a team that was finally playing up to its potential.

With six, or perhaps seven starting veterans not returning next year, this year's team feels this may be their only chance to go all the way to the College Bowl. Only one team now stands in the way of a trip to Toronto, the St. Francis Xavier X-Men. The X-Men finished the season with the best points against record in the country. The Gaels were second best. A tough defensive struggle looks to be in the offing, but the mood of the Gaels is that they are a team that will not be denied a second time.

Tom McCartney dives into the end zone for the Gaels' first touchdown.

Fine finale for Queen's rowers

by Chris McCormack

Last Saturday the Queen's Rowers came up with a solid performance in the Ontario University Rowing Championships. Queen's finished with one first and three seconds in the four races entered. The Men's Varsity rowed the 2,000 meter course in a record time of 5:40.9 minutes edging out Trent at the finish line by one foot. Western, Guelph, Brock and McMaster were outdistanced by these two crews. Western has won this eight out of the last eleven years.

The other three races were very close. The Varsity women were edged out in the last stroke by Western and finished with a time of 4:09.8 for 1,000 meters, 0.3 seconds behind the winners. Brock and Trent followed them across the finish line 2 seconds later, in a dazzling finish. The Junior Varsity Men's Four were beaten by Brock, with a time of 6:23 for 2,000 meters, in a tight finish.

The Queen's Novice Men were the surprise of the Regatta, for in one week they moved from the bottom to top contention by winning their heat by a large margin. They later came second to Trent in what proved to be a two-boat final. Trent finished half a boat length ahead of Queen's with 6:01, and several boat lengths ahead of the rest of the crews. The Queen's Men's Varsity crew set a record for the fastest time on the Henley course by a University crew. The Women's Varsity race also had their record broken on Saturday.

The Queen's rowing team is presently in their second year of competition. It is a great credit to the coaches that they have been able to make such progress in such a short time.

Western won the overall trophy for the championships, although Queen's was out of contention from the start by not having sent their full slate of crews. In most of the universities it is customary to recognize Novice and Junior Varsity crews as Varsity status in University competition. This year at Queen's, the rowing club has been able to get the Men's and Women's Varsity crews recognized. According to the regatta rules, men's crews may be entered as second teams, unlike the women's regulations. For this reason, the Women's Junior Varsity and Novice crews who finished first and second respectively last week at the Brock Invitational, over the same course, had to sit at home this weekend.

However, Queen's finished a well-rounded season and are ready to take the cup next year!

Japanese tips for V-ball Gals

by Lee Prowse

On November the 10th at 8:00 pm the Queen's Women open their Volleyball season against the second best Women's university team in Canada: Western.

Last year at the provincial finals, Queen's upset Western but lost to Waterloo and Guelph leaving them in fourth place.

After a year on sabbatical, Ronna Gallagher has returned to coach the women. She will be applying concepts learned in three months spent with the Japanese National Team as she spent the year studying the role of sport in the Japanese culture.

When asked whether there was any particular area of weakness to be overcome this season by the club, Coach Gallagher replied that the youth of the team was a critical factor. The squad is made up of eight veterans and seven rookies. At this point the first string is not set and competition is stiff for the six positions available.

Two weeks ago at an invitational meet at Brock, the women gave a promising preview to the season winning two matches and losing one. The season looks to be very impressive.

Rugby Gaels host finals in first

by Don Cameron

The Rugby Gaels' First and Second XV squads returned from Guelph last Saturday in high "spirits" with both teams beating out the Gryphons to capture the two league titles for the 1978 season. The Seconds edging the Gryphons 10-7, finished the season posting a perfect 8-0 record; the Firsts polished off Guelph by a score of 21-3, ending the regular season at 7-1. By virtue of Saturday's win over Guelph, the O.U.A.A. finals will be held at Queen's this Saturday.

The Second's game was a tough, physical match against a strong Guelph team. Queen's forwards controlled the ball for the majority of the game in a grueling series of scrums and tightly contested loose plays. Peter McQuaig, acting captain, tackled ferociously, breaking through on several occasions to harass the Gryphons' fly half. Second row forwards, Dave "Herman" Bonnet and John Corrigan intimidated the Gryphons' forwards through their animal-like play. The Gaels opened up the scoring in the first half on a dazzling inside run by scrum half Andy Boright. Guelph put their first points on the board minutes later with a drop kick by their full-back. The score at the half was 4-3 in Queen's favour.

Guelph took the initiative in the second half, outpushing the Gaels' forwards and putting Queen's on the defensive. The Gryphons scored a try (the first try scored on the Gaels all year) with fifteen minutes left in the game to give them a 7-4 lead over the Gaels. Queen's rallied and pressed heavily, forcing the play deep in the Guelph end. Several times it looked as if the Gaels would score only to be stopped yards away from the touch line. In the dying moments of the game the Gaels' forwards dug the ball out of a ruck and handed it to scrum half Andy Boright. Boright fed the ball to the backs who passed it all the way out to speedster Tim Gray. Gray, showing graceful finesse danced his way through four or five Guelph players to give the Gaels the go-ahead try. Dennis Johnston kicked the convert to end the game. The Seconds have only had one try, and a total of ten points scored against them in eight league games.

The Firsts' game, a match-up between the second-place Gaels (6-1) and the first-place Gryphons was destined to be an exciting scrimmage. The winner of the game would win the league title as well as having home field advantage for the First and Second XV's finals.

Guelph started off quickly, threatening to score early in the game. A persistent effort by Queen's refused to let the Gryphons collect any points. Nigel "the Abstainer" Costeloe took some of the pressure off the Guelph offensive surge by kicking for touch in seemingly impossible situations. The Gaels didn't catch fire until John "Rack-em up" Reid (who accounted for all of Queen's scoring) kicked the first of his three penalty kicks. The Queen's forwards started to pull together, winning most of the scrums and line outs. Dave "Lummox" Loucks played extremely well in the loose, driving into the rucks and mauls, then coming out with the ball in hand. He also showed his potential as a winger lumbering down the field for substantial gains on two occasions. Bill Payne played strongly, showing fine positional play.

The Gaels' first try came in the first half on a second phase play. The ball came out from a ruck and was passed quickly out to winger J. Reid. Reid's footwork left the whole of the Guelph team biting dust as he made his way toward the goal line. Nearly every Queen's player handled the ball before Reid brought it across for a try. John continued his monopoly of points scored by kicking a convert and two more penalty kicks to end the first half with a 15-0 lead for the Gaels.

Queen's started off slowly in the second half, giving Guelph possession of the ball. Gaels' backs, Steve "Zulu" Wilson, and Jim "Slats" Slattery marked the Gryphon centers well, giving them little ground to run. On one occasion, Guelph was stymied on a long side line run scoring attempt by a precision tackle by winger Dave Cottingham.

Larry Cook, at this point in the game, showed the Gryphons that he was a player to be reckoned with. Able to get the ball to the backs in crucial situations, "Cookie" made several key tackles throughout the game, especially in the second half.

Fly half Dan MacIntosh got the Queen's backs going in the latter part of the second half, calling several plays which moved the ball into the

Laurentian surprises Queen's 2-0 at OUAAs

Abrupt end to Soccer Gaels' year

by Benny

All the hard work, the agony of the training sessions, the good fortunes and even the bad luck came to an end on Saturday as the Soccer Gaels went down to a 2-0 defeat at the hands of the Laurentian Voyageurs. Laurentian now goes on to Montreal and the Canadian championships and as the Ontario representative with a first round bye, they stand an excellent chance of capturing national honours.

For Queen's a successful season came to an abrupt end. Their habit of laying back in the first ten minutes finally cost them as Oscar Albugurque, the province's leading scorer, licked home a shot from an almost impossible angle. The startled Gaels seemed to be moving in bits and pieces, never as a total unit. For the remainder of the first half the play deteriorated as both teams took advantage of the liberalness of the officials. Although no one knew it, the writing was on the wall after the first 45 minutes.

The interval brought no respite for the Gaels and again as the second half started they seemed to be straining. Reactions, that to this point were natural, suddenly seemed difficult and cumbersome. The quality of play fell even further as both teams strove for a goal. At one point it was survival of the fittest.

Finally Queen's started to move forward in the manner everyone knew they could. A goal mouth scramble produced the Gaels' best scoring chances but Tom Becke's and Wally Klus' shots failed to find the back of the net. In the 70th minute Laurentian scored its second goal as a glancing header bounced into the top corner.

Faced with prospects of scoring two goals in 20 minutes seemed to charge up the Queen's team. Laurentian simply filled their penalty area with 9 defenders and cleared away every chance Queen's created. Substitutes Mike Fontyn and Peter Smith came on to add fresh legs to the attack after Mark Bennett was knocked cold but their efforts went for naught. The game finally ended to the relief of Laurentian and the bitter frustration of the Gaels.

The general consensus after the match was one of disbelief. Coach John Walker spoke philosophically after the loss. "We just came up a little bit flat today," he said. "It will take a few days to sink in that we're no longer in it."

So the season is suddenly over. However positive aspects can be found in everything. This year's edition of the Gaels won the league cup and played some exciting soccer. Captain Brian Sawyers closed out his five year career with another excellent game.

Looking ahead to next year, all but three starters are returning. Sawyers, Tom Becke and Carl Saunders have all played their last game for the gold and blue.

Tom Becke waits for the ball from Alan Stewart.

Better play yet Bball game tight

by Sports Staff

Last Friday night, the Basketball Gaels took to the floor against Jefferson College of New York. After a close, action packed 40 minutes, the Gaels emerged at 73-72 with their second victory in as many starts.

As the score suggests, the game was tight and provided the 200 odd spectators in the Bartlett Gym a good look at this year's Basketball squad.

The Gaels' new head coach, Tom Frood, has a well conditioned team that will improve with game experience. The Gaels missed many good scoring opportunities but rallied when they had to and on the strength of a strong defensive effort that forced many turnovers by Jefferson, hung on to win.

Jefferson's quick paced game plan enabled them to grab an early lead which they held till half-time. After the intermission, the Gaels came out running and had a 5 point lead going into the final 10 minutes. The teams exchanged baskets until the final few seconds when Jefferson scored 4 quick points to close within one point at the buzzer.

Phil Moore was outstanding for Queens as he helped control the boards at both ends of the court and pumped in 20 points to lead the Gaels' scorers. Doran and Varsava were both defensive standouts and each contributed 10 points to the Gaels' total.

The Gaels' next home game is Wednesday, Nov. 8 against R.M.C., the Bartlett Gym at 8:15 p.m.

Bookstore Committee needs student input

The Senate Bookstore Committee. Not exactly a household name among most Queen's students. Yet this committee has the potential to correct many of the inefficiencies currently plaguing the operation of the Clark Hall Bookstore.

For several years now the committee has been holding an annual open meeting to provide a channel of communication between students using the Bookstore and the Engineering Society which owns and operates it.

But in each of those years attendance at the meeting has been very poor. As a result the committee has accomplished very little, for, like so many other organizations on campus, it requires student input to be effective.

What is needed then is student participation in this year's meeting. The frustration of being unable to obtain required text books, the lack of relevant trade books and an adequate selection of magazines are just a sample of problems encountered by many Queen's students when browsing through the Bookstore.

But, more importantly, the priorities and purpose of the Bookstore are in need of re-assessment. Should it be designed as a "campus-version of Mac's Milk" as one professor so succinctly put it, or should it first and foremost be a complete bookstore with the records, mugs, and sweatshirts assuming a secondary role.

The latter description would appear to be preferable. There are many stores in Kingston providing the assortment of sundries and items other than books. As it stands now, students must rely almost exclusively on the Bookstore for reading material.

Support boycott

Outer Council has voted to support a boycott of the Sidewalk Cafe tomorrow. The reason given for this move is simple: students were not allowed input into the decision to install the new tables, at a cost of $10,000.

Council is right. The Cafe's tables, reminiscent of a romp through McDonaldland, are uncomfortable, sterile and utterly functional; furthermore—and herein lies the rub—they were installed in spite of the Deutsch Centre Management Committee's express disapproval. Students on the Committee rightly argued that they were too expensive, and that they substituted the old casual atmosphere with an ultra-efficient, "eat and get out" aura.

Regardless, Norm Hart, Manager of the Deutsch Centre, and Saga Foods turned to the university's Purchasing Department, where they eventually secured the needed funds. Their disregard for the student interest is blatant, and warrants censure by the student body. Council's decision to hold a boycott day is, commendably, in this direction.

Frequenters of the Sidewalk Cafe, when you next pass by the glass walls of your lunchtime eatery, take pause. Do you like what you see? Do you mind that your student representatives (through the Management Committee) voiced their disapproval, yet were ignored by the administration?

If these two questions draw a "no" from you, there are two things you can do. First, join the boycott tomorrow. It's a token step, but it will get the point across.

Second, if you feel strongly, eat elsewhere from now on. If enough take this tack, food services administrators and the university administration in general may, in future, show respect for the concerns and interests of we, the student body.

Too often, Queen's administration fails to adequately incorporate students in the decisions vitally affecting us. In residence administration, in the current investment policy debate in the Board of Trustees, and now with respect to reorganizing services intended primarily for students—in all these areas, the university administration has shown, in varying degrees, a lack of interest in the student position.

It is a tendency that must be curbed. Tomorrow's boycott—followed, perhaps, by a more extensive and extended boycott—drives that point home.

Congratulations, Council, on correctly perceiving a breach of the student interest and having the guts to do something about it.

Coaches express concern

Injuries blamed on fields

by Tom Mohr

Coaches of three intercollegiate teams are up in arms over the condition of Queen's playing fields. Football, field hockey, and soccer teams all play on fields that are in bad and rapidly deteriorating conditions, according to their coaches.

Doug Hargreaves, head coach of the Gaels' football squad, points to overextensive use of the fields as the main problem. That, plus the lack of funds to subsidize adequate upkeep, spells trouble.

"We don't play hockey on a rink with cement showing through the ice. We don't allow basketball on a floor which is worn through. But it seems alright to send football players out on a field that's badly damaged," he said.

Richardson Stadium's field is not the only source of complaint. The field hockey pitch behind Grant Hall is so bad that Queen's was unable to host a scheduled league tournament this year. Eleven out of fourteen second team members had injuries at the end of season directly related to the condition of the field, according to Brian Groos, second team coach. Five players on the first team were in the same predicament, said first team coach Nanette Cuddy.

"The pitch is absolutely unplayable. It's mud, it's clumps of grass, it's potholes. That's it," she said.

Seiji Ohtake, trainer for both the field hockey team and the football team, agrees that the field has been responsible, at least in part, for many of the injuries.

"I'm sure the field has a lot to do with it. It is uneven. No attempt has really been made to fix it up properly," he said.

Ohtake fears that some of the injuries may lead to future problems.

"There are some that may become chronic, especially knee injuries. I saw two that could probably cause problems in the future," he said.

Coach Cuddy indicated that under such conditions, the quality of play inevitably suffers.

"Psychologically, it's definitely a factor. The girls just don't go all out when they realize they may be injured, or when they're already playing with an injury," she said.

Soccer coach John Walker expressed similar sentiments. "Queen's soccer field is the worst in the league, and I have constant complaints from other coaches who are reluctant to come here and play," he said.

"I think, in comparison to other Ontario universities that we visit, Queen's is not very well off—certainly not in soccer. The others appear to have more fields, for practice and games, and fields of better quality," he added.

Walker notes that the soccer field is used almost every evening throughout the spring, summer and fall. He recognizes the need for intramural sports, saying, "It's a university field, not the exclusive property of the I/C Soccer team."

But he considers the result of constant use to be a virtually unplayable field. Most of Queen's home games this year were played on the RMC field, he indicated.

Director of Athletics Al Lenard sympathizes with the coaches' complaints, but sees no immediate alternative to the present system.

"Generally speaking, I support

$10 a mug

by Eric Evans

AMS Outer Council will be considering a motion at its next meeting that proposes a $10 fine for any student caught either stealing or intentionally breaking a mug. This move was prompted by the loss of $140 worth of mugs from the Underground Pub during last week alone.

Eric Cameron, the Pub Manager, stated, "There's been a steady increase in glassware losses during the year. We're budgeted for $70 worth of glassware loss, but last week we doubled it. That works out to over $5000 a year."

Sheila Murray, QSA Director is introducing the motion to Outer Council in the hopes that losses might be cut down. The policy if approved, would go into effect at noon on Friday November 17, after which any offending students caught will be given a summons by an AMS Constable. Failure to pay the fine within a week would result in the student having to go before the AMS Court. In the past, the only recourse that Constables have had was to send a student directly to the AMS Court. This has rarely been done in the past.

Murray stated that "Constables have been lax recently." In one incident last Friday night, a birthday celebration at one table in the Underground resulted in the smashing of over thirty draught mugs. Murray, in reference to this incident and the overall increase in losses, said that Constable activity would be "stepped up." This would include Constables being more watchful for students willfully breaking glasses, more frequent collections of empty mugs, and possibly a revival of the practice of searching those leaving the Pub.

Murray also pointed out that "since only students use the Queen's Pubs, rising costs must be covered by higher prices. It's amazing that people have stolen mugs and don't realize they've stolen from themselves."

them (the coaches), just as long as they appreciate our constraints. We have hundreds of people using our fields, and that's a lot of people. I suppose we could keep off all the recreational and intramural programs, but would that solve the problems? I don't really know the solution under the present circumstances," he said.

The basic problem appears to be money. All coaches pointed out that the funds, due to current economic restraint, are just not available to either renovate existing fields, or to construct a new one.

Cuddy and Groos, the field hockey coaches, contend nonetheless that there is room for significant improvement. They have made repeated requests that the field be rolled to flatten out potholes and ridges, but the Physical Plant has refused. When Groos told them he would be willing to roll the field himself, he was again turned down.

The coaches find it particularly infuriating, when the first team is undoubtedly of national calibre, and had a crack this year at the championship.

"I would say that the condition of the field hampered our ability to reach that goal," Cuddy said.

Foreman of the Grounds Department for Physical Plant, Carl Duttie, did not agree with the coaches' complaints.

"I really don't think the complaint about the field hockey field is justified. We've fertilized it, we've sprayed it for weeds, he said.

"When you roll the field, you puddle it. There's just no way that you can flatten clay," he said.

As to football coach Hargreave's complaints, Duttie was unaware of them.

"We did a lot of work on that field over the summer, and the coach is fairly happy. As far as I know, there have been no complaints," he said.

"The fields are used very extensively. Everybody's playing a sport, and the fields just can't stand up to this kind of use," he said.

Coch Hargreaves summarized the central issue.

"Queen's needs another field, but it seems we don't have the money for one. Talk to Principal Watts," he said.

Rich british history - Forsey

by Sean Dewart

Senator Eugene Forsey said on Monday night that "the British institutions have been so spat upon and so poorly understood that it's time someone stood up in their defense."

Speaking to a group of about 70 in Watson Hall, Forsey emphasized that the British heritage does not diminish the role of the French in the Canadian identity, but he feels that "English speaking intellectuals have lauded the French share of the Canadian identity to the skies, and tend to ignore the British."

He took issue as well with what has been labelled as 'the pure Canada cult', saying "that a man attached only to the land was a rootless being." He stressed the impossibility of "finding a national identity in the North Magnetic Pole or the Laurentian Shield."

Forsey sees five integral parts of the Canadian identity as having roots in the British tradition, and enumerated them with wit and lucidity. "Our constitutional law and practice," he said, "is basically English. The Fathers of Confederation, in choosing it, were not cringing Colonials, but chose with open eyes a system based on its merits."

Forsey criticized the rigidity of a system like that in the United States, saying, "the Gaps in the B.N.A. Act are its greatest glory. It is like the skeleton, and tradition is like the flesh."

He attributed the practice of that continuing tradition to another Canadian characteristic of predominantly British origin; pragmatism.

"We tend to avoid the Cartesian logic of the French and the dogmatism of the Americans. Canadians examine issues piece by piece and avoid great cataclysmic changes."

Speaking of our Constitutional Law Forsey mentioned as well the Monarchy. "An essential part of our form of government as a protection against 'Jacks in office.' The Senator also traced the history of criminal law in all of Canada.

He mentioned finally, English speech, "which we sometimes take for granted. It is the richest, noblest and most sensitive language spoken since the time of Pericles. English-Canadians should be guarding their speech, as the French-Canadians guard theirs." Forsey mentioned people coming out of school with "pathetic vocabularies", as well as blaming the press for the disintegration of language.

"Canadians of neither French nor English origin should not ignore their own heritage in favour of the founding cultures of Canada, but all Canadians must realize that we enjoy certain things, such as democratic government, from Britain, not from a Canadianism independent of the country's history."

Sloppiness results in damages, complaints

by Shelly Matson

The customarily elaborate and expensive transformation of Grant and Kingston Halls for the Science '79 Formal last weekend left both buildings with a wide variety of damages caused by decorating and clean-up.

Monday, engineering students responsible for the formal, toured Grant and Kingston Halls with representatives of the university to assess the extent and causes of the visible damage.

The molding on the large pillars in Grant Hall was damaged, and the frames on the windows under the arcades had crumbled.

In Kingston Hall, three-quarters of the ceiling tile in the first-floor hallway had been partially destroyed and replaced in a sloppy fashion. But most evident to profs and students was the absence of doors to five classrooms and the Red Room, which caused inconveniences as noise freely drifted in from the hallways.

The emergency doors between Kingston and Grant Halls were apparently hastily replaced on their hinges, but the automatic closing mechanisms were not properly reinstalled and the doors stood agape most of the day.

The Red Room seemed to suffer a fair deal as some of the furniture was broken while being moved, and the door jamb was so badly destroyed that it will have to be replaced before the doors can once again be mounted.

Caretaking staff from the physical plant complained of the carelessness exhibited in the dismantling of the decorations, and pointed to the plaster moldings which will be costly to replace. Strands of twine and tape remained hanging from the ceilings

Graffiti removal will cost McGill

by Eric Evans

A painting spree on the Queen's campus last Saturday by over zealous McGill students will cost the McGill student council approximately $1200. McGill students, in Kingston for the Queen's-McGill football game, were responsible for the spray painting of slogans such as "McGill No. 1" and "Go Redmen Go" on a large number of buildings around campus.

Dr. Jim Bennett, Executive Assistant to the Vice-Principal of Services, estimates that about 2400 square feet of limestone and pre-cast concrete will have to be sandblasted in order to remove the paint. Dr. Bennett estimated that the cost of the sandblasting will be about $1200, and stated that "it is our intention to bill the McGill student council. We will be submitting photographs with the bill. It is standard procedure in a case like this to bill student councils," added Bennett.

The task of returning the eight buildings affected to their normal state will not be without it's problems, however. Derek Finch, Assistant Director of the physical plant, said "removing the paint is easy, it's the blending necessary to make the patch match the rest of the tone that is difficult. This is especially true on the older buildings."

This is not the first episode of painting by McGill students. The Queen's Bands buses were painted in Montreal during a Queen's-McGill game earlier in the football season.

McGill fans give Queen's yet another chance to "blast" Redmen

Aftermath of Craigellachie: built-in obsolescence at its finest of the classrooms, and some of the pictures from the rooms were missing.

The most obvious source of complaint was the huge mound of debris behind Grant Hall, which included wood, paper, corrugated roofing, trees and broken bottles.

One weary janitor commented, "If that's Engineering, I'm glad I'm a caretaker."

When contacted by the Journal, Rod Reynolds, Social Convenor for the formal pointed out that "the expense for the damages is coming totally from the Science Formal Committee. We allocated money for damages as we expected some, although perhaps not quite to this extent."

Reynolds estimated the damages at $1500 "80 percent of that is janitorial hours," he added.

"Monday morning things were not exactly right as the physical plant had problems with short-staffing, Reynolds said.

AMS takes aim against cavities

by Diana Coulter

Kingston groups working for fluoridation of water supplies gained support as Outer Council approved the idea in principle at their last meeting. Anti-fluoridationists in Kingston, however, continue to block the issue as they feel it is an unnecessary and potentially unsafe imposition on the citizens.

Research has been done with regard to the safety and efficiency of fluoridation of water supplies by the Morden commission, a government appointed committee, which demonstrated its effectiveness in preventing tooth decay.

Dr. Knight, a Kingston dentist, believes fluoridation is a "completely safe and beneficial" additive. At present, several primary schools in the area of Queen's have instigated a program whereby children are given a fluoride rinse once every two weeks.

Miliband speaks on state and capitalism

by Michael Allen

Dr. Ralph Miliband, one of the renowned Marxist political scientists and author of "The State in Capitalist Society", spoke at two separate lectures last week on the theoretical debate concerning the nature of the capitalist state and on the future of Eurocommunism.

In his Thursday night lecture Dr. Miliband addressed himself to the controversy of the capitalist state. He defined the state as one which acts in the long term interests of "the socially dominant class", (i.e. the capitalist class).

The "supreme task of the state", he said, was "the management of class conflicts", a role which, on occasion, might require it to appear to implement policy detrimental to the capitalist class.

"The Stalinist experience hangs heavy over socialist theory," he replied to one student's query, "and many still conceive that socialism equals Gulag". He explained the socialist project as "a process in which capitalism will have to be superseded by one form or more of collectivism, for want of a better word — social control. No private capital would be allowed to compete. Production would require much greater planning in ways that do not reject bourgeois freedoms".

At his second public appearance on Friday, Dr. Miliband discussed the crucial question of current Eurocommunist thought — will a Communist party elected to power be able to fundamentally alter society or will the state (the bureaucracy, the military, etc.), with or without foreign assistance, somehow be able to subvert this aim?

Professor Miliband said that he could foresee the success of the Eurocommunist route to socialism "through the exercise of direct power of council democracy by the people themselves, as opposed to through elected representatives where the state as an agent of power and force would lose its function". He admitted that while this thesis did have "Rousseauist antecedents", it was still within the context of Marxist economic theory.

He further explained that the Eurocommunist parties were facing a problem in their internal organisation which would hamper their ability to act democratically and that this would have to be overcome before these parties would succeed to fundamentally "revolutionise" the social order... without a violent revolutionary overthrow of the existing society.

Petition still circulating

by Michelle Meyer

The AMS petition demanding an end to all government cutbacks in post-secondary education has been signed by over 500 Queen's students in its two weeks of circulation. The petition has both an individual and pluralized form allowing the student the opportunity to read and sign after due consideration.

The AMS and QSACU are hoping to have over 1000 signatures on the anti-cutbacks petition to take down to Queen's Park with the Queen's students who will be going to picket outside the legislature on November 16th.

Copies of the petition and details about the Ontario Federation of Students' information picket can be obtained at the Cutbacks Booths at Mac-Corry Hall, the Phys. Ed. Center, Info Bank and the AMS Office. The AMS has arranged to pay for two buses (96 seats) to take students down to Toronto and back.

Debators place second

by Dot Tuer

Entertaining wit and quick humour prevailed last weekend as Queen's hosted the Intercollegiate National Debating Championships, in which universities from coast to coast battled for top honours. Queen's efforts won them second place as Victoria College, University of Toronto emerged as champions.

In the preliminary rounds, debaters from nine universities illustrated dexterity and ingenuity in arguing topics like "Thou shalt not covet thy neighbour's ass" and "Canada is a global obscurity." The outcome of these debates pitted Gary Boyd and Andy Taylor of Queen's against Michael McCulloch and Thomas Gough of Victoria College.

Ribald humour and wit dominated the final debate when Queen's, acting as the government, defined the resolution "That God Save the Queen as a call for the liberation of the gay world and the freedom for sexual preference." Victoria College, as opposition, called for Victorianism and proposed that individuals wearing T-shirts declaring "pat me, I'm a pansy" belonged in the privacy of the closet.

A vote from the floor swung the judges' final decision in favour of Victoria College 10-9, who were also declared the top individual speakers.

Rector candidates

These days each dollar spent is important and student concerns need be clearly articulated when budgeting decisions are made.

Students need a representative who understands how the labyrinth of committees and boards work, and is familiar with the administration. The rector should be that person.

The rector should also be a person who students will feel able to ask for help when they run into administrative red tape or other problems. Again, the rector will only be as effective as his understanding of the university structures allows him to be.

The Board of Trustees is where the university's priorities are turned into financial decisions. It is here that the rector has exclusive responsibility for stating student interests by voting on resolutions.

The rector must be informed both of the issues to be discussed at the Board meetings, and the views students have on them.

But in addition, to such information the rector must establish his credibility with the Board as a truly representative student voice. After spending a year and a half with the Board as an observer, I feel I have established such a working relationship.

My concern, then, is primarily for the type of atmosphere that sets Queen's apart from other universities — especially the quality of education.

I hope I can bring the position of rector an informed as aware perspective and a realistic understanding of student concerns.

Terrence Reynolds

by Terrence Veg Reynolds

Now that the Rector race is underway, I want you all to know that even though I am a personal passing acquaintance of the Chancellor and the Principal, this should not in any way sway your votes to my side. I was telling Flora and Pierre just the other day that there would be no name-dropping in the campaign.

One issue that is really cooking around campus right now involves the Battered Wives. It seems to me that a gross inhumanity is being perpetrated right under our noses and no one is trying to prevent this calamity—I'm talking about Saga Foods serving battered fish. That's right, they have been cashing in on the ecological and moral problem of "fish battering" and it appears that they have been cod in the act. My tireless campaign against this frytful problem may cause many a haddock, but I feel I would be serving a useful porpoise. Saga has been shellfish in their horrible actions, but they clam up and you are left to interpret things bass backwards.

Since I am discussing food, perhaps I should mention another thing that is eating me. A.M.S. made the weak effort of simply boycotting the sidewalk cafe because not only did the management change the chairs, but they turned the tables on us. Well, what happened to the good old days of riots and bedlam? Where is our school spirit? As Rector, I will turn a blind eye on such witty protest pranks as firebombing, maletov cocktails and other forms of harmlessly voicing discontent.

There are countless other issues to be discussed, so come out to the candidates' meeting on Monday, and if you can't be a Rector, vote for one.

Hugh Christie

Hugh Christie

We are all aware that the financial position of the University is in a serious state. Decisions are made almost daily which will have a profound impact on the type of University we can expect to see in the next couple of years and beyond. Only if seen in this perspective will the selection of the student's only representative to the Board of Trustees, the Rector, take on its proper position.

My overriding concern after two years of contact with university issues, can be summed up as "the protection of the uniqueness that Queen's in these times of every-dwindling resources".

Paul Tinari

The period of financial security at Queen's is now over and as a result, the next couple of years are going to be the most dynamic and challenging in the university's history. While our counterparts in the sixties staged demonstrations against a war being fought thousands of miles away, and for civil rights, we as students of the seventies face more immediate and personally damaging problems such as escalating costs for tuition and substandard housing coupled with a saturated job market.

Students are no longer willing to accept representatives whose only decision is to make no decisions. The time has ended when students can simply overlook financial mismanagement on the part of student governments. These changing attitudes must be reflected in the person of the student elected to represent student views to the Board of Trustees.

As an elected member of the Senate Committee on Student Affairs, I have worked with Moe Chocla, the former rector, and other on the committee to study matters directly affecting the interests and well being of the student including health, counselling, residences athletics and recreation. It is not a glamorous job, but like the work done backstage in a drama production, the work we do has been and will continue to be vital to the presentation of student rights and services at Queen's.

I have had, and hope to continue to have direct input into those decisions that effect all students, such as the retention of the office of university chaplain, the expansion of day care facilities, review of the counselling service, career planning and placement, student health and community services.

I therefore present myself as someone with the energy, the experience and the determination to present the views of students and present them well, with the best of my abilities. It is my intent that to make sure that the voices of the students do not fall on deaf ears, and their problems are not presented to sightless eyes.

Koopman called upon to lead all our charges

The Editor:

Mr. Koopman's raging requiem for the student movement has left me shaking with anticipation. At last we have in our midst not a leader of days gone-by or one aspiring to future deeds, but the Ontario Students' answer to Che Guevara.

Mr. Koopman, we all look to you to lead that charge upon Ottawa in the name of the stricken postal worker or unemployed women. And you, John Koopman, are destined to wield the knife which will castrate the caustic corporations and bring the bungling bourgeoisie to their weak knees. And what about the new furniture in the Sidewalk Cafe, John? Perhaps between your mission to liberate the citizens of Namibia from the oppressive South African Regime and your battle to save the baby seals of Baffin Island, you could single-handedly tear apart Saga's sterile furniture with your razor sharp teeth and spit the pieces at Richardson Hall. Admittedly, a small task for such a social giant.

In closing Mr. Koopman, there are 3 types of people in this world — those who make things happen, those who watch things happen, and those who wonder what happened. Be one of the precious few who are classified under the first category, John, and strive for the ideals which you have espoused.

Yours truly,
Rory Cattanch

Too big for the baby chair

The Editor:

Rah, rah Queen's! It is to this worthy institution of higher knowledge that we come to "broaden our minds". Here, young, bewildered high school grads are made into "social critics".

Another cheer for Queen's as we collect interest in our $250,000 worth of shares in Noranda mines — a company which supports Allende's grim regime in Chile.

We lament that our ivory tower is crumbling due to the federal government's cutbacks. Yet, isn't it ironic that we are caught up in the same sort of bureaucracy we're fighting against? It's almost a year since student voted strongly in favour of opposing Noranda's investments in Chile. What has been achieved in that year?

Like babies we look to the government to give us everything we want and we cry when it takes away some of our pabulum. From our limestone high chairs we scream, "Hey, what about us." We're unaware of the effect we can have on the rest of society. What about them?

John Koopman's article, "A Eulogy for the Student Movement" stuck an empathetic chord. Not only do very few people take a stand, they can't even be bothered to seek out information. Give it a try before you give up.

Are we going to mourn for the student movements of yesterday, or face today? The high chair is getting too small! It's time to grow up.

Sincerely,
Barb Neuwell

Poor losers

The Editor:

Congrats go to the Gaels for defeating the Redmen. However, upon arriving on campus Sunday, it seems that the Redmen are still around. Their glaring defacement of the Jock Hartly Complex and Botteroll Hall with spray paint is testimony to losers who thought they were number 1.

Let them hang signs anywhere, initiate rivalry in the press—anything but vandalism. I humbly suggest that the administration sends McGill University the clean-up bill.

On November 13, Kingston votes. Will you?

When you live off campus, you have responsibilities and problems. Garbage collection... parking facilities... snow removal... police protection... the cost of taxis... bus fares and routes... the neighbour's dog keeping you awake.

All of these are areas in which the City can help you — and in which you can help the City, by drawing attention to your problems.

CFRC listener applauds efforts

In response to the recent complaints about the broadcasting of CFRC, I would like to compliment the station for their efforts and encourage more of the same. I enjoy the jazz and classical programs very much, and would like to hear a lot more of both, especially jazz. Our radio station has the opportunity to experiment and play unusual material not found on commercial stations. I appreciate that difference, and hope that CFRC goes on with as many different programming ideas as they can. Please don't let CFRC become just another rock station. I assure you, you are not broadcasting to silent walls. Others like myself hope you maintain something we appreciate.

Wake up on all issues

The Editor:

The editorial of November 7, 1978 offers advice to the student body concerning the so-called "major issue" of the new chairs in the sidewalk cafe. It is unfortunate that the student body and the journal cannot react this strongly to other issues.

Here we have a concerted effort to "get the point across". Where were all these concerned students when it came time to voice their opinions about OFS matters, Bus-It, National Student Day rallies, AMS year elections, prejudicial treatment of foreign students and fee hikes?

From a public viewpoint, this reaction surely must indicate where Queen's students priorities lie. Granted, it was improper for the University to proceed with the purchase of the new furniture without student input. The reaction should not be a boycott. The chairs are there now, accept them. Future occurrences of wasteful spending can be avoided by strong student reaction to every facet of university life, i.e. referendums concerning fee hikes, limiting the library's budget etc. In fact, even the Editorial page asks for student input into the Senate Book Store Committee. How many of you will react as strongly to such a critical issue; the availability of required texts and having to once again endure The Mad Crush for books in September?

Obviously, student apathy disappears when the University treads on leisure time.

The Editor derogatorily accuses these chairs as being "uncomfortable, sterile and utterly functional". This writer prefers a chair, even though uncomfortable, that is free of cigarette burns in the fabric and dirt hiding the color of the original material. Has anyone considered the maintenance cost of those comfortable, cloth chairs?

In conclusion, whatever disregard the management committee had towards Outer Council, it must be brought to light that the students deserved it through past experience. The point is not that the atmosphere of the Sidewalk Cafe has been destroyed. The final outcome of this entire situation is that perhaps through avoidance of student interest in this relatively minor issue, the entire Queen's population may be awakened to discover that there are other major issues in which they can be the determining factor!!

Democracy still reigns

The Editor:

I was slightly short of infuriated upon reading the front page headlines of last Tuesday's Journal publication. Vickie Steel was diligently planning a boycott of the Sidewalk Cafe at the University Centre to protest the altered seating arrangement, installed without inquiry into student opinion on the matter.

Such trivialities thoroughly annoy me. Certainly a boycott would be more appropriate if finances were the issue but the seating installed was merely for practical purposes i.e. A more convenient form of maintenance and a larger seating capacity (as opposed to the previous pig sty arrangement).

I truly cannot see this seating installment as infringing on our rights as student. Democracy still reigns at Queen's as seen by the Noranda Mines referendum and the Susie-Q issue — examples of necessary student input. I am content with "unilateral decisions" made by the management committee concerning seating alterations in the sidewalk cafe...and, on my gosh, rumour has it that the cafe is switching to a new brand of paper napkins.

Sincerely,
C. Haley R. Hamilton

The Editor:

I heartily approve of your policy of boycotting the cafeteria in the John Deutsche Centre. My only criticism is that your gesture of protest did not go far enough. Why not return to the fervent spirit of the Buddhist monks who objected to the Vietnam War? They captured the true nobility of passive resistance which Thoreau espoused in his essay "On Civil Disobedience".

In sympathy with your protest against the capitalist enslavement of Saga Foods, I have decided to pour kerosene on myself and set myself on fire tomorrow at lunch time. ## Sadat, Begin deserve Nobel prize

by Drew Fagan

Much criticism has been directed at the Nobel Prize committee over the past number of years, on the basis that the most deserving candidates have been overlooked. In the case of this year's presentation of the Nobel Peace Prize, however, few pundits will be able to claim that those awarded were not entirely deserving. From their historic meeting in Jerusalem almost one year ago, President Sadat and Prime Minister Begin have immersed themselves in a peace process whose complexity and potential dangers have known no equal since the termination of World War II.

Sadat's mission to Israel was based on the belief that the vicious cycle of war, military rearmament, and mutual distrust needed to be broken.

The time had at least arrived for the Arab states to fully accept the existence of the state of Israel. As the Jews of Israel evolved into a truly Middle-Eastern people, the charges of imperialism and racist aggression melted into a realization that they rightfully deserve a place in the area. On this view, Sadat had hoped to find Arab consensus. Without any form of support from the Arab states, Sadat's determination to proceed places him under even heavier pressure, as he cannot remain in power for any length of time against the unanimous opposition of the Arab League. Yet, Sadat has remained true to his goal of peace with Israel. Having been forced to abandon his effort at a comprehensive settlement, Sadat has ensured that he will lead his own country to peace. His refusal to give in to the collective pressure of the Arab League makes him fully deserving of the honour bestowed upon him.

The charges against Begin that he was unwilling to make the concessions necessary to bring about peace have largely evaporated with the success of Camp David and the current round of negotiations. To the Jews, having been landless for centuries, and having been on the brink of annihilation on a number of occasions in Palestine over the past sixty years, the mere suggestion of land concessions was strongly associated with greatly reduced national security. To them, land is the only true method to minimize the potential for terrorism and invasion. Nevertheless, understanding Egypt's refusal to abandon its right to sovereignty over the Sinai, and realizing fully that peace could not be achieved without concessions of this sort, Begin authorized a release of Israel's hold over the Sinai, including the Israeli settlements, the oil fields and the defense posts. For the short term, the decision reduces Israel's security. Begin, however, grasped the need for such gestures and realized that the decision would ultimately lead, with the advent of a real peace, to a secure Israel. As such, he too is fully deserving of the Nobel prize.

Without any initiative or support from the other Arab states, these two men have carried on their effort to achieve peace and overcome all obstacles separating the two nations. They have realized the necessity of breaking open a new period in Middle-Eastern relations, and history will judge them to be two of the great leaders of our time.

increasing mass of trivial "human interest" gossip which tends to push little items like the Mid-East peace talks off page one. Household hints, personality sketches, disco lifestyles — much of journalism today is aimed, to quote Charles Gordon, "at people who move their hips while they read." And we accept it because its easy to read, cute, cozy material which never challenges our mind nor jars our sensibilities.

The next time you pick up a paper, see if it measures up. You need no special credentials to make your judgement, because the media is working for you. It is their duty, a duty which must be continually challenged if it is to have the slightest impact.

by Colin Brown

Charles Taylor thinks complacency is a dirty word. As one of our most distinguished journalists, he looks at Canada today and does not like what he sees. He does not hesitate to blame many of our ills on the fifth estate itself. Just as it is the media's duty to question and criticize society, so too is it our right to question the job they are doing. In Canada there are some very disturbing facts surrounding our free press.

Firstly, more-so than most countries in the free world, we have a government actively engaged in trying to control and restrict the media. For example, the federal government is pursuing its prosecution of Peter Worthington and the Toronto Sun for publishing "top secret" documents of which no less than 67 copies had been made and distributed before reaching that paper. Bill C-51 is returning to the order paper this fall, and on it rides the government's hopes to broaden the definition of the word "obscenity" to anything they see fit. Canada is slowly moving towards its own Freedom of Information Act, yet the government's proposal will leave final disclosure rights to the cabinet and not the courts, as in the United States.

Finally, let us not forget the see-saw soap opera of the McDonald Commission's attempts to obtain vital documents for their R.C.M.P. investigation. The government is stonewalling the process of justice for purely political reasons, and has so far been able to keep the most embarrassing details hidden. We have our Watergate. The question is: does anybody out there really give a damn?

It is difficult to find much tough investigative reporting in Canadian newspapers these days amongst the

Unwilling to swallow fluoride panacea

The Editor:

It is certainly clear that the upcoming November 13 municipal referendum regarding fluoridation of Kingston's water will provide an excellent opportunity for Queen's students to make a positive contribution to the future health of this city. What is not clear, however, is whether or not fluoridation will be a "positive" contribution.

Admittedly, sodium fluoride is very effective in reducing the incidence of tooth decay - that is not the issue. The question we should be asking ourselves is not whether or not fluoride reduces tooth decay, or if our civil rights are at stake, but whether or not we should be deliberately adding another chemical to our already polluted waters. We are already paying dearly for our society's willingness to pump chemicals into the air we breathe and into our food (and water) supply. Our society thinks little of burying chemical wastes from industry, ignoring the fact that eventually, these same chemicals will seep their way into our water resources. Our foodstuffs are being treated with chemical preservatives in small quantities, but levels of these chemicals build up inside the human body and the long term effects of this policy are only beginning to be known. Like fluoride, these chemicals are naturally present in the food we eat - but it is the increased intake of them which makes them harmful.

The pro-fluoride group would like to increase the concentration of fluoride to one part per million. It is claimed that this is a non-toxic level that is standard in similar programs across North America. Yet studies by the American Dental Association into the effects of existing fluoride programs have shown that a non-toxic level for well nourished individuals can be toxic for those who are malnourished (and anyone who thinks that the problem of malnutrition is not present in Canada had better wake up to face the volumes of evidence which document malnutrition among Canada's poor). So much for seeing a vote for fluoridation as a "charitable act".

Since sodium fluoride is already present in our environment, we might well look at our current intake of fluorine. Unfortunately, most studies of fluoride intake consider only the concentration of fluoride in drinking water. The industrial emission of fluorides into the atmosphere, the presence of fluorides in insecticides and crop fertilizers and the fact that food and beverages processed in areas which fluoridate their water have an increased level of fluoride, are not taken into consideration.

Hence any talk of raising the fluoride content of our drinking water to one part per million does not mean that we will be ingesting a controlled amount of fluoride nor

Right to strike: abuse and forfeit

by S.A. Lalonde

To Carol Town and Richard Harris

Your article certainly does raise pertinent issues (re Strike Right Threatened Nov. 7). Had the article and situation concerned any other "union" but the CUPW, I likely would have carried your banner.

I cannot, however, bring myself to support this organization in this case. The sheer inconvenience the public has suffered from past Christmas postal strikes alone is justification enough for the return-to-work order. Briefly I mentioned other innocents more harmed such as mail order businesses, fixed income people (pension, disability, welfare), and yes, student grants. Even big business can be inconvenienced by a mail strike.

The postal unions have degraded and misused the "right" to strike. Would it be pretentious in saying that the misuse of any right forfeits that right? Surely the "right-to-strike" does not include threatening others or using innocents as pawns in a self-centered, horse-blinded game.

You mentioned the governments action as "not an isolated incident" and "setting a precedent". I suggest that it is the postal unions who have been trend-setting and their last strike could hardly be called "isolated". The action of the government was in the interest of a majority of the people, late, long-coming and needed.

As far as settling the contract, there are 780,000 unemployed people in this country. How many of them do you think would have taken the "work" at the last contract offer? Less than four per cent of these unemployed are needed to totally replace the inside workers. Tell me why they can't have a chance to work for the Canadian people?

What hurts me the most is the principle involved. As bad as our postal service is, when it runs it is the third best in the world. With a little effort, not change, it could be the best in the world.

To The Students Of Sydenham Ward

As a member of the business community here in Kingston, I would like to express my sincere thanks to you for your contribution of over 24 million dollars annually to the economy of the City in goods and services.

As it is physically impossible for me to visit each and everyone of you, I am taking this opportunity of requesting your support for my candidacy as alderman for Sydenham Ward.

The Editor:

I feel I must comment on the quite unprovoked, rather pointed remarks made towards the Queen's Women's Centre in Shelley Matson's somewhat less than accurate article, "Susie-Q Gets Women's Centre O.K.", published in Tuesday's Journal. It is my sincere hope that this piece was not, as it seemed, deliberately biased and sensationalistic, but merely a bit under-researched.

I would also like to clear up a couple of misconceptions that may have arisen from the article. Even though the Women's Centre is not approved of the philosophy behind Susie-Q Week, we certainly aren't against "fun", as Ms. Matson put it, nor for that matter are we against raising money for charity. It escapes me, though, why we need an excuse like Susie-Q Week to have fun or help charities, but that is not the issue here. True, this year's Women's Centre has not been, up until now, especially vocal about Susie-Q, mainly because we felt there were more important issues to deal with. To infer, however, that the absence of loud public disapproval means that the Women's Centre has given its approval is nothing more than jumping to some pretty far-fetched conclusions - something no responsible journalist can afford to do. Perhaps in future if the Journal wishes to report the Women's Centre's stand on an issue they will ask the W.C. what their position is first.

Pat and Chris meet at the pub, things really 'click' for them. When the pub closes, they go their separate ways. The following week finds Chris and Pat daydreaming of one another, yet neither attempts to contact the other for fear of rejection, intruding, or of having their intentions misinterpreted.

But as another weekend fast approaches Chris' persistent daydreaming brings about the decision that taking those risks would be better than perhaps never seeing Pat again.

Chris looks Pat up in the Who's Where but when attempting to dial gets the shakes. Chris finally gets through all seven numbers after a cold shower and a few beers.

Pat answers the call, is delighted to hear Chris' voice once again and abandons the most recent plan of looking for Chris at the pub that night; they go together.

WHAT SEXES ARE THE ABOVE CHARACTERS?

It's important to consider how many of us assumed Chris to be male and Pat to be female. Read the story through once again, reversing the sexes of Chris and Pat.

The present social conditions may increase the degree of anxiety experienced by a woman in the role of Chris. With this in mind it is suggested that Susie-Q Week not be looked at merely as a limited opportunity to exchange roles, (which would only serve to reinforce present restrictive social patterns) but rather as an invitation to break through the already too long tolerated systems of social interaction—a system in which men are continually forced into the role of the pursuer and women into the role of the pursued (or what may be worse for some, the unpursued.)

Strikes and the "national interest"

Worshipping the sacred cow

The Editor:

I am writing in response to Steve Watson's article, "CUPW Strike a selfish power play" (QJ Tues. Nov. 7, 78). It seems that Watson's remarks directed at the 'sacred cow' of the labour movement merits some response, particularly concerning the 'interests of the country'.

Once labour has withheld their services, the next response by management involves an attempt to bring into action all the hegemonic force that can be brought to bear on society at large. Systematically, public opinion is turned against labour by the collective efforts of the media apparatus. If this unofficial social pressure is not sufficient in ending the strike, the State apparatus is called into play, amid passionate cries of 'national interest'. (translated, that means corporate interest).

What we see here is an attempt to generate the idea, that the corporate interest are in fact the interest of all Canadians. This is carried even to the point that the whole question of State representation is rendered as non-problematic. We are encouraged to believe that the struggle before us is not between business and labour, but between the Canadian people

We remember

The University suspended classes and laboratories for one hour today in honour of those who sacrificed their lives, specifically 362 Queen's men in two World Wars; and engaged in a service which was both remembrance of sacrifice and resolution for peace in our time. The twofold nature of this service was indicated by the quotation from Stephen Spender standing alone on the front page of the Service folder: "They travelled a short while towards the sun and left the vivid air signed with their honour." And the quotation from Omar Bradley standing alone on the back page: "It is easy for us who are living to honour the sacrifice of those who are dead. For it helps to assuage the guilt we should feel in their presence. Wars can be prevented just as surely as they are provoked and, therefore, those who fail to prevent them must share in the guilt of the dead."

Municipal Election '78

Mayor

Ken Keyes

It's municipal election time 1978! On Monday, you and I have the opportunity to voice our opinion, by means of the secret ballot, on several important issues, including the future administration of this city.

First - There is a ballot entitling you to decide whether or not the water supply of this city should be fluoridated. Consider carefully the information available to you, consider the benefits to present and future generations and vote accordingly.

Second - Gas, water, electricity and public transit are provided by the Public Utilities Commission. You have the right to choose 4 representatives who, along with the Mayor, are charged with the responsibility of providing the citizens and businesses of this city with the most efficient services at the most economical cost. As students, you are vitally interested in the current "bus it" programme, its cost and its service, as well as a possible alternate system of a shuttle system. Don't miss the opportunity to choose those persons who are experienced in such matters and can best meet the needs of the citizens, including our students.

Third - A sound educational system requires the input from an informed and representative group of publicly elected school trustees. For the first time, election to this office is on a ward basis, therefore you have only to familiarize yourself with the candidates in the ward in which you live and then vote accordingly.

Fourth - Our democratic electoral system provides for the election of two aldermen per ward. As a student, you are interested in selecting someone who can communicate with you easily and effectively, and carry your concerns to committee and council in order to find resolution. Review the literature and individual stand of the candidates on the issues and vote accordingly.

Finally, you have the opportunity to decide who will be Mayor of Kingston for the next two years. It has been my privilege to serve in that capacity for the past 2 years, a time that has been challenging, productive and beneficial to the interests of Kingston in general and her citizens in particular. I solicit your support, I urge you to exercise your right to vote on all ballots on Monday, November 13th.

Industry today is the most important aspect of society. Around it we build our lives depending on what job we have and the pay to go with that job.

GREG FORBES

169A PRINCESS ST. 13.

With a great deal of control maintained on industry at the local level much development will never be achieved.

Much industry has been going to the Township thus people and housing have also been going in that direction. Eventually all development whether office space or housing moves from the city in a shift westward. The city then slows to a crawl with most positive motion ceasing.

When this happens businessmen in the city attempt to increase the amount of business, but their lack of funds puts an extreme limit on the advancement capacity. Many years are required to stabilize the condition once more. Industry is then extremely difficult to attract.

An exact example is a small town 18 miles east of here. They decided about twenty years ago to limit industry drastically, thus maintaining the town for the people. Soon many young people began moving out looking for jobs and homes.

It did not take many years to realize their town error on industry, but they did not change their direction sufficiently to head off the end result.

Today they scream for industry, but cannot attract it in sufficient amount. People still remember the old policy and do not care to run the risk of a future occurrence. Local businessmen were unable to increase any sizeable new businesses due to their lack of funds. This of course meant they had to rely more and more on the tourists which sustains only temporary employment.

The shift of people and industry was westward. After twenty years the population has increased by only two hundred.

Gentlemen we have the potential, the capability and the technology. We can rebuild sufficiently with new industry.

You're a student. And maybe Kingston's municipal election doesn't mean much to you. You may not even know you're entitled to vote. You may not feel able to vote.

Here are a few points to consider. Most students live off campus, renting private housing. What kind of housing they can rent depends largely on how Kingston controls the housing market.

When you live off campus, you have responsibilities and problems—garbage collection, parking, snow removal, police protection, taxi fares, bus routes. All of these are areas in which the City can help you and in which you can help the City by drawing attention to your concerns.

I have represented Sydenham Ward, the area which includes Queen's since 1974, helping to protect its historic character and its neighbourhood life. I have helped to promote Kingston's tourism industry, based on its historic and architectural heritage; to revitalize its commercial downtown; to develop new industries and create new jobs.

A Queen's graduate (MA, 1971), I work as development officer for Queen's in the office of the Vice-Principal for Development and Information.

Bill Knapp aldermanic candidate in Sydenham Ward encourages students to actively participate in the upcoming civic election by exercising their right to vote. Bill says that because Kingston is slated as a growth area students may well find themselves as future permanent residents with the increased job potential. Bill supports architectural preservation and upgrading of the existing inner-city residential core. He feels better by-law enforcement would benefit student housing and the surrounding neighbourhoods. He would also like to see more serviced land made available for clean industry.

Bill has served the community as a member of the Mayor's Waterfront Committee and as President of the Sydenham Ward Tenants and Ratepayers Association of which Science '44 Co-Op is now a member.

Bill Knapp resides in the ward with his wife Margaret (a student at Queen's) and their three children and is employed by Du Pont Research.

I started in politics as the President of Kingston Ratepayers Association and later served on the Kingston Township Council and the Frontenac City Council. I have had twelve years of experience as an alderman of Ontario Ward as well as being the Vice Chairman of the Public Works Committee, the Parks and Recreation and Chairman of the Social Services Comm.

During my campaign I have heard many complaints about the traffic situation in Ontario Ward. We must do traffic studies to find a way to remove the heavy traffic from residential streets such as Brock and Johnson.

The snow removal system is another frequently mentioned problem. I hope to improve it as well as the lighting of the streets.

I would like to do something about the exorbitant rents that students pay for housing in the ward. Queen's University and the Ontario government should co-operate to provide more economical student housing.

As a student at Queen's Law (Law 73), I found an artificial barrier between the university students and the community at large. In order to build better communication, understanding and cooperation between the two, Deputy Reeve John Smale and myself formed a committee that was instrumental in the designation of Community - University Day. In conjunction with this, a program was organized under the name of "Guess Who's Coming to Dinner?", whereby about six hundred students were invited to Kingston area homes in 1977. This year on Sunday, November 19th this program is being repeated.

My immediate concern is the apparent apathy of the citizens of this city, including the students, with respect to the municipal elections. I am of the opinion that since this is the 'grass roots' level of government and affects the residents' day-to-day activities, it should be accorded a higher priority. Students must realize that such things as higher property taxes affect them indirectly in the form of higher rents. Municipal by-laws such as the Property Standards

Yuri Tarnowecky

By-Law deal with the matter of adequate housing.

Decisions made at the municipal level affect an individual's life more directly than those made at any level of government. As in my case, your three years at Queen's might result in a lifetime in Kingston. I, therefore, urge you to exercise your franchise - vote November 13th.

Ontario Ward

Tom Clements

Tom Clements has been alderman for Ontario Ward for the past two years. He's been director of the Ontario Games and chairman of the Canada Games. In addition, he has served on the transport commission, Planning board, Parks and Recreation committee, and the Queen's University/City liaison Committee.

Mr. Clements is concerned about the development of the downtown through increased transportation, better parking and better shops.

Another issue is the need for better definition of the relationship between single family areas and multiple density areas designed to serve students and others who must or wish to locate in the downtown areas.

These particular concerns are being presently considered and it would be my objective to insure the development of medium cost student housing while maintaining the integrity of residential neighbourhoods.

Peter Fountas

I am running for alderman for Ontario Ward. I feel we need workers for council, not managers, as our present system shows that we are falling behind. If you feel, as I do, that there hasn't been any responsible development in Kingston, please give me your support. I want to encourage industry to increase our city's tax base, which would in turn reduce ward taxes.

We should also work to build a more efficient snow-removal system, which includes keeping sidewalks clear. There should be improved street lighting and traffic control and better maintenance of streets and sidewalks.

We also should re-order priorities to increase support for Senior Citizen activities and cutbacks to benefit them financially.

D. Geiger

My experience includes membership on the City Planning Board, the Mayor's Waterfront Committee 1977, and the Housing Sub-Committee. I am a past president of the Waterfront User's Association, and helped to organize the Canada Work's Project to build the waterfront walkway in MacDonald Park. At present, I am working part-time at the Faculty of Education at Queen's University.

I see the 5 major issues of this election as: 1) A sound economy achieved economically by supporting our present industries and encouraging new ones. We need a strong downtown. 2) Stability in residential areas. Our residential areas must be good places to live, so that people don't want to move. A stable population helps to reduce crime. 3) Monitor restructuring of city government. Two big changes are being proposed - administration and committees. 4) Plan ahead. Redevelopment is expensive. Consult with citizens about their downtown, so developers may put their money where a project will be welcomed. 5)

Queen's University has always played an important role in the history of the City of Kingston. Without the University and the Royal Military College, Kingston would simply be another small Ontario town. The University, its staff and students, give the community a unique and special character. Kingston derives tremendous economic benefits from having the University located here in terms of employment as well as obvious educational, cultural and social benefits.

At the same time, however, a large segment of the student population feels isolated from the normal day to day activities of our City and does not get involved in the long range issues which arise in the City. Much has been accomplished especially in the last four years by the City/Queen's Liaison Committee in dealing with any problems which have arisen from time to time particularly problems which are of a concern to students. A prime example is the new Property Standards By-Law by which City Council

A balanced approach to working together. The city is people, jobs, housing, factories, stores, schools, university, parks, air, lake, rivers and land. These people and things must operate together to make a good city.

As a challenger to two sitting aldermen, I believe that I can offer a new and different approach to government.

Dorothy Geiger

has shown its concern over the question of inadequate housing including student accommodation in private homes. This by-law intends to guarantee for each one of our citizens a decent and comfortable place to live. The enforcement of this by-law eventually will eliminate all substandard housing units in the City.

Crime and Punishment

By Dick DeShaw

Anglican Lay Chaplain
Criminals and murderers are the Screw version of society. If you have lived in polite society all your life, you may never have seen Screw. Screw is a raunchy and explicit sex newspaper which is sold above the counter in New York City and below the counter in Toronto. Now Screw deals with essentially the same subject as Playboy and Penthouse with this difference: their models are taken from the neighbourhood of one night stands, rather than the girl next door.

Screw presents its version of exploitation in newsprint (a grown-up version of Golden Words?) where Playboy and Penthouse present their version of exploitation in high gloss. Media has taught us that high gloss can make anything acceptable.

There is only one cardinal sin in advertising - poor reproduction (bad copy). Polite members of our society like to think criminals and murderers are other than, and different than, themselves. But criminals and murderers are not different and other than us. They have just created poor reproductions of the values of our present society. (I use the word "poor" on purpose, to suggest that there is an element of class stigmatization in the distinction).

If criminals and murderers were truly different and other than ourselves, polite members of our society would not hate them so. But they do. Currently, in our society, REVENGE is another word for PUBLIC OPINION about criminals and murderers. We have forgotten Christ's admonition -

"He that is without sin among you, let him first cast a stone..."

The criminal is the under-the-counter version of what is hawked over-the-counter in the everyday commerce of our society. Acquisition, as a goal, and possessions as self-identity, differ only in method and not in kind, in a world where clothes make the man.

One can be born into, buy into, or steal into status. Stolen status is only stigmatized when the complication of caught enters into the situation. And if an individual has stolen enough so that he won't have to steal again when he is released into polite society, he won't be denied status upon his re-entry. He can even own a football and hockey team as an expression of his rehabilitation. Most criminals don't steal enough to get into the high gloss neighbourhood. They remain in the newsprint neighbourhood. That is why they are Screwed.

Murder is the value system of a society gone wrong. Murder is the alter-ego possibility of exploitation. Individuals can carry Exchange and Power too far (Peter M. Blau is one of the great cynical realists of our age). So can nations. Murder can result, either in the process of exploitation, or as a result of exploitation.

One of the saddest facts of visiting prisons, is the individuals who reacted to an act of violence (either physical or mental violence) with a one-time act of violence, and will spend most of their lives in prison afterwards, trying to understand why they reacted this way.

As anyone knows who goes into prisons, these individuals are often a better class of prisoner. They are often very sensitive and intelligent people. To know an individual like this is to know the pain of reality that carries you beyond the abstractness of labels like "murderer".

Polite society has a titillating fascination with murder. The under-the-counter potential of our natures both attracts and repels us. Polite society denies the humanity of the murderer in order to take an inhumane delight in his act. To acknowledge the murderer as human is to acknowledge this human potential in ourselves.

And so we place the murderer's act in abstraction. We are afraid of our own potential. This is why the emotional revenge called CAPITAL PUNISHMENT is again gaining vogue. If CAPITAL PUNISHMENT has any ethical reason for existing, certainly REVENGE would not be a justifiable reason.

It is time to turn the discussion around. I suppose some of you are saying by now - "Well, this is just another bleeding-heart liberal, espousing theories which don't apply in real life." But, if you want to live in the abstract safety of polite society, that high gloss version of society that fails to distinguish the scars and needle tracks which newsprint cannot cover up, there is little I can say to bring you out of your illusions.

However, when you leave the suburbs - the streets are mean! The world cannot be abstract when you must step over winos, pass by pill poppers and hustlers on your way to the corner grocery store, instead of driving an insulated car to the supermarket mall.

But I do want to change the emphasis from mean streets to what the hard-boiled detective novelist, Raymond Chandler described as the focus of the man who goes down mean streets, "who is not himself mean". A criticism of false universals in our society is always onesided. This kind of criticism forgets the fact that an individual can determine his own destiny.

Collins Bay Penitentiary: is punishment serving the needs of society or the needs of the criminal?

Social critique gets too caught up in the coerciveness of social forms and forgets the individuals who make up this society. This is why sociologists are often pessimists. Our humanity is carried forth because, as Chandler says, "some very determined individual makes it his business to see that justice is done."

None of this discussion, however, is meant to justify the criminal or the murderer. Today there is a tendency for prisoners to take up the rhetoric of revolution and to see themselves as victims of our society. This is especially true now that there are more middle-class prisoners in prison, due to drug arrests.

Any discussion of crime that forgets the analytical difference between social universals and individual responsibility, loses the tensions that must remain in this discussion. The victim notion of crime is just as much of an abstraction as is the labeling process of polite society.

How can we do justice to the issues of crime and murder? There is an important distinction that is peculiarly Christian, in the history of man's ideas. By Christian, I am not talking about dogma, or the form of rule behaviour that is classified as religion, but rather the distinctive truth that entered into our conceptual armory via Christianity as an historical event. Christianity ushered into the historical scene a new conception of the individual.

Christianity stated that the individual is worthwhile in his own right and not just as a member of the social. This may be described as the Conciliation of Christianity. However, with this conception of the worth of the individual, came a new definition of individual responsibility.

The individual was no longer a victim of the forces of destiny, but must instead forge out of often contradictory circumstances, an ongoing rationale of his humanity as meaningful. This forging is done in community and is therefore more than just individual expression and desires.

In other words, humanity is the expression of the community of man or spirit. Justice is the relational aspect of individuals one to another that treats each individual as worthwhile in his own right.

Let's apply this to punishment. The Philosophy of Punishment has taken several distinct forms: RETRIBUTION (dessert) REVENGE, DETERRENT, REFORMATIVE, (of which rehabilitation is just an expression). Now all of these approaches have one common denominator - each of them treats punishment as an expression of the need of society and not a need of the individual. There are varying degrees of humanity expressed in these versions of punishment with REVENGE being the least human expression.

Down through history, rational men have pointed out the fallacies of each of these reasons for punishment. For example Montesquieu calls on historical evidence to show that RETRIBUTION, no matter how harsh, has never had a noticeable effect on the amount of crimes committed.

Now, if we lay aside the social rhetoric of reasons for punishment and consider the individual and the human community of spirit which is more than just the present norms of our society, we can suggest the purpose for punishment is reconciliation.

The individual needs to be reconciled with the reasonable purposes of the community against which his act is a violation. The community needs to be reconciled to the individual who has breached the community. And most important of all, the individual needs to be reconciled with his own self, since his act not only denies the community, but also denies himself, since his humanity is tied up with the community.

Unfortunately, this is not the case today in our Canadian prisons. Public opinion is being dictated to by REVENGE and our current laws express this spirit.

Our prisons do not offer reconciliation but dehumanization; a dehumanization where even the well-meaning members of the institutional staff are ground under public opinion, and the more immature, revengeful members of the staff are all too often setting the example.

The prisoners react with a spirit of REVENGE both while they are in the institutions and when they hit the street. This is a war in which we all get Screwed. This is the under-the-counter truth that is hidden in the high gloss discussions on our prisons. Our public opinion is in many ways, responsible for this state. The place to begin is by re-introducing the notion of RECONCILIATION into our own opinions.

"Murder and Public Opinion" will be the topic of this Friday's Noon Discussion at the Grey House. Dick DeShaw, who is leading the discussion, said that everyone is welcome to drop in during the afternoon to take part in the conversation. Coffee, tea and desserts are provided.

Next Friday the discussion will be on "The Macho Rejection of Nurturing", and will consider the relationship between the nurturing professions and the Women's Movement. The last discussion of the series, on Nov. 24, will be asking, "Should you study the subject or the professor?" - "Are good grades a con game?"

1837: Warming up our historical leftovers

by Julian Cunningham

"Where is the Canadian identity?" goes the interminable lament of the pseudo-intellectual issue seekers which, despite my love for Canadian literature, I find inevitably repellent. In classrooms, coffee shops, and living rooms, they seek ad nauseum to define what it is that distinguishes them from their counterparts in the United States, along with every other form of life in the universe.

The Canadian "identity" was and is being defined on the battlefields, the streets, and in the courts; a living thing, not an inert blob of residual matter reserved strictly for high-brow intellectual dissection.

Only through historical reflection and action comes a country's "identity" (a term I use with reeling hesitancy).

It is with delighted relief, then, that I announce the opening of the Queen's Drama Department's production 1837: The Farmer's Revolt in Convocation Hall tonight.

This fascinating study of the 1837 rebellion in Upper Canada provides both the history lesson and the conflict that made it history.

Its original version was created cooperatively by Rick Salutin and Theatre Passe Muraille in a largely improvisational attempt to recreate the social and political climate of this period; from William Lyon Mackenzie to the farmers whom he championed, to the incestuously oligarchic rule of The Family Compact, and the greed of the "loyalists" who comprised it.

The playscript developed through this original venture is a foundation from which other companies must develop a version peculiar to themselves.

Shades of Degas apparent in art exhibit

Madeline Mills

Light comes in through the window onto the figure of a young girl. The somber, reflectiveness of her face creates a contrast to the warmth of what appears to be, morning light. Susan Paloschi, the artist, says of this painting of her daughter, "I do my children from memory - I see them - she didn't pose - oh, maybe for five minutes. She was looking out the window and I became intrigued with the light falling on her shoulder and how the stripes of her shirt dissolved in the light."

This painting of Paloschi's daughter and other of her recent works are currently being shown at the Brock St. Gallery. She is a local artist who studied in Florence and Paris where she became influenced by Degas and Cezanne.

The body of her daughter is very sculptural and Cezannesque, especially the right hand that hangs at her side. The influence of Degas is very apparent in her gymnast series. Her moving children's bodies, which are carefully studied and drawn, merge and dissolve in light in a way which is very reminiscent of late Degas' dancers. The soft pastel colours are also typical of late Degas. Paloschi combines these Impressionist influences with her own personal charm.

Susan Paloschi Exhibition: "New Paintings", Nov 7-Nov. 25. The Brock Street Gallery, 73 Brock St., Kingston.

Derek Sewell and Joe Wheeler in rehearsal of battle sequence from 1837.

(and a personal friend of Rick Salutin), says that he has been quite liberal in his revision of the script, even to the point of rewriting an entire scene (with the playwright's permission, of course).

Each of the six actors in the show will be required to create several roles, as the play moves swiftly through a series of vignettes, the collective effect being a sort of dramatic mosaic of a critical period in Canadian history.

In an effort to render a faithful representation of their subject, 1837 cast members have arduously researched each detail. They have visited Toronto, and all the pivotal locations from which the 1837 phenomenon took shape.

Apart from its historic value, 1837 is a highly entertaining piece of drama, as it makes merciless parodies of the "colonialists", most particularly Sir Francis Bond Head (or "Bone Head", as Mackenzie calls him), and John Strachan. This humour is balanced by the severity of the rebellion, and its effect on every level of society.

So come revel in your past as 1837: The Farmers' Revolt plays tonight and Saturday, plus Nov. 14-18 (Tues-Sat. of next week). Tickets are $1.50 for students, $3.00 for non-students. Curtain time for all shows is 8.30 p.m., at Convocation Hall in the Theology Building. Reservations and info: 547-6291.

David Essig at Bitter Grounds

by Colin Hunt

For any of you who missed David Essig last year you have one more chance to redeem yourselves this weekend at Bitter Grounds. Essig is well-known as a guitarist, mandolinist and songwriter with more than a slight debt to Blues. Essig has produced three albums, Redbird Country, High Ground, and Stewart Crossing by his own Woodshed Records Inc., and mixes his own compositions with those of John Hurt and Leadbelly. Essig's music has a solid, earthy attraction all its own and contains a wide variety of styles. Essig has been variously described as "The man with lightning fingers" or "the folkie's pipe dream".

In the quiet atmosphere of Bitter Grounds you won't have to compete with noise from the rabble to appreciate the subtlety of Essig's lyrics. You can expect to see both slide-picking and classical styles demonstrated. You can sit back with your favourite drink and count on hearing some of the finest folk music found almost anywhere.

Up in Smoke: Cheech and Chong pinch a new loaf

Mark T. Henderson

Cheech and Chong at the movies! Great idea man. If 80 minutes of drugs, bathroom humour, and hippies versus the police appeals to your conception of comedy, Up In Smoke is the thing for you. There isn't much of a storyline to speak of, and it functions only to lend coherence to a string of situations that give the stoney duo an opportunity to go through both their old and new routines.

Their approach to humour which (for the most part) works quite well, is outrageous, vulgar, and admirably anarchic. Up In Smoke will have you rolling in the aisles, or wondering why you paid three bucks for such trash.

An important message has appeared in all the ads and posters of Up In Smoke, a command that states: "Don't Go To This Movie Straight." This is a point to ponder upon, for the film is much like their albums, something to be related to in a euphoric state of mind. Cheech and Chong are very likeable and funny men who seem completely detached from any form of conventional reality. It's total nonsensical hedonism. They smoke joints bigger than cigars, get pulled over by the police constantly, and join a would-be punk rock band that can't get its act together between eating, screwing, and smoking their brains out.

Stacey Keach (who stars in Two Solitudes, also at the Capitol), pops up here as a super-straight cop who always seems to be picking at his teeth. He is on the trail of the biggest 'dope bust' in U.S. history, uncovering a new smuggling process in which automobiles and television sets can actually be constructed from marijuana. Of course Cheech and Chong end up driving a strange green van made of the stuff, and miraculously elude every attempt to catch them. They never get captured and end up competing in a Rock Fight of the Century at the Roxy Theatre in Los Angeles, with everyone in the hall incredibly stoned due to another absurd plot twist!

Curiously the film is visually quite grainy and blurred, and I'm not too certain whether it was intentional or not. Up In Smoke has a suspicious air of being a cultish exercise (in the Saturday Night Fever vein), appealing only to the heavy smokers of society. But a more concrete aspect of the film is contained in some of its racial humour and attacks upon establishment figures. For instance, the police attempt to bust the duo and end up arresting a group of nuns who are indecently searched for clues.

For some, scenes like this may be shocking and disgusting, but it's just Cheech and Chong's manner of weird social criticism. Depending on your beliefs and moral leaning, it should be easy to make up your mind about Up In Smoke. The talent is there, and the film is more than adequate technically and artistically. Therefore, search within yourself and ask: Do I find two obliterated human beings smoking dog shit really funny? Or how about Tommy Chong urinating in a clothes hamper? Oh well.

Wavelength: Van Morrison
Produced by Van Morrison Warner Bros. Records
reviewed by Brent Lavictore

Van Morrison's absence from the music scene over the last few years did not pass unnoticed. Rumours raged, ranging from his total retirement to stories of a solitary confinement in an attempt to "dry out". Last year Morrison startled his audience and silenced his critics with the release of Period of Transition, taking, as the title implies, a new musical direction. Earlier this year he put in a surprise appearance (and show stealing performance) at The Band's "last ever" concert, captured faithfully on the movie and album Last Waltz. With the release of Wavelength Van Morrison appears to have shifted into high gear once again, even if it is in a different world entirely.

So much has gone down in the music industry over the last five years that an attempt to retain his solid blues style could have ended in bitter disappointment and popular rejection for Van Morrison. Wavelength, if nothing else, demonstrates that he is fully aware of market trends and popular tastes in music.

Though Wavelength is obviously a commercial tempered product, it is not without its merits. The album is soothing. It could calm even the most savage brow. Strangely enough, the album I feel it most resembles from Morrison's past is Moondance. It has that same ebb and flow and is presented with such art that it creates a class of its own. If Wavelength can do as well as the classic Moondance commercially it will be a real tribute to the pulse recording ability of its composer.

Morrison has always been in a class of his own as a modern, white, blues artist. His lyrics reflect the road, the street and the lives to be found there. Wavelength continues this rare insight for the pain, suffering and joy of life.

Foremost on the new album is the light at the end of that long, hard road. On the songs "Change" and "Santa Fe", there is an overwhelming optimistic note, saddened by the losses of experience but hopeful and closer to a goal just the same. This bittersweet tone dominates the album though moments of pain and, in turn, great joy break through at times.

"Kingdom Hall" begins the album and establishes its up-beat attitude: "Good body music/Brings you right here/Free flowin' motion now/When we're shakin' it out on the floor/Good rockin' music/Down in your shoes/And when we dance like this/Like we've never been dancin' before". The album's diversity emerges on the reggae/blues fusion "Venice USA" and "Checkin' it out"; two songs that represent the soulful Morrison at his best and the finger snapping polished rocker Morrison, respectively.

Musically, Wavelength is a masterpiece. The influence of Garth Hudson, former Band keyboards player, is remarkable considering how far into the background Morrison presses the instrumentals. Generally, his production enhances the overall effect of the album by presenting a very flat surface, there isn't much highlighted vocally or instrumentally (sorry disco fans, no booming bass lines or shrill synthesizers). Herbie Armstrong's guitars are precise and also contribute to the album's flow. The background vocals, likewise, are kept simple and melodic. Morrison's vocals are ridiculously garbled on some tracks, however; I suppose it's one aspect of his past style which he has refused to compromise on.

Morrison has not really changed much over the years since his first albums on Bang records. The embittered Morrison of "TB Sheets" and other early songs is still very much in evidence. Perhaps the easiest explanation for his new direction may lie in his "maturation". He's the same old rebel with a different, more experienced outlook on life. As he says in "Take it Where You Find It", "I see it all now/Through the eyes of

Who Are You: The Who Produced by Glyn Johns and Jon Astly
MCA Records
reviewed by Mark Henderson

Every so often, an album comes along that immediately takes on added significance above the music it contains. It may be the timing of the release, or a conscious effort on the part of the musicians to say something about music, or society in general. In the case of Who Are You by The Who, both of the above explanations are true.

Little more than a week after the Canadian release of Who Are You, drummer Keith Moon died, a shroud of mystery surrounding his demise. This unfortunate occurrence quickly brought extra attention to the new album which, above all else, spoke to many people about their place in modern society and the role of rock music in expressing the fears, anger, and joys of living and loving.

The Who's hard driving rock really sounds defiant, and is offset with tracks which emphasize the acoustic guitar and synthesizer of Pete Townshend. Loud and raunchy cuts such as "Sister Disco", "Had Enough," and "Trick of the Light" attack and ridicule the disco phenomenon, apathetic individualism, and male neurosis respectively. The Who definitely express male feelings in a male dominated world. The "Softer" tracks (all written by Pete Townshend) call for a higher spirituality and the will to break away from repressive social restrictions. For me, the highlight of the album is "The Music Must Change", a magnificently structured work in which Roger Daltrey's vocals beautifully reflect the feeling of Townshend and the band to continue playing rock music in accordance with the changing social and economic situation of the working class. The first stanza makes the point clear:

"Deep in the back of my mind there's an unrealized sound, Every feeling I get from the street says it soon could be found,
When I hear the cold lies of the pusher, I know it exists,
It's combined in the eyes of the kids emphasized with their lists,
The mosquito sting brings a dream, but the poison's deranged,
The music must change."

On the front of the album cover, four aging men are standing, surrounded by their equipment, their way of life. They look serious, dedicated. It accurately connotes the thrust of Who Are You, not to accept a passive role in society, or within oneself. An excerpt from the title track is evidence enough. "Eleven hours in a tin can, God there's got to be a better way. Come on, tell me who are you, Oh, well, who the f--- are you."

For the Who, this is what rock is all about, a defiant anarchism enhanced with the desire for a freedom to express and do what you want. The pessimism of "9 05", written by John Entwistle, warns of the fate of a society with no active resistance to authority, an automated lifestyle where thoughts and beliefs are just a regurgitation of the ruling class.

The wisdom of Who Are You goes beyond its music, and represents the voices of true artists speaking and communicating in the ways they know best. It is a landmark in popular music and will soon stand beside the best of the Rolling Stones and Pink Floyd as a pantheon of individualism.

Waterpolo warms up at Mac

by Bruce MacDougall

Queen's waterpolo Gaels gained valuable experience at the McMaster Challenge Cup and drove away with a respectable 4 win 4 loss showing. From the beginning, coach Simon Beitler made it clear that the team was going to learn. "It will be great for the guys," he said before the meet. "Playing in eight games, they are going to learn how to move at close range and how to play the man. This is where Carleton has us. They have members with international experience who know what to do. This tournament can only help us."

Stiff after a long bus ride, the Gaels started well by winning two games Friday evening but were not particularly comfortable about the way they did it. Western caught the Gaels by surprise, jumping to 2-0 lead in the first quarter. It wasn't until the fourth quarter that Queen's got on track, behind Graeme Black's two goals, to take the game 6-5. Queen's seemed to come alive in the second game against Waterloo, jumping to a 6-1 lead against Waterloo, but barely hung on in the last quarter to win 8-7. Chuck Leighton and Mitch Dent combined for five of the goals.

Saturday was hard on the team, walking away with a 1-3 record for the day. After an opening win against R.M.C., Queen's met their perennial rivals, Carleton U. The match was as exciting as always, with Carleton coming up the winner 5-2. "Our control of the ball wasn't bad," said John Williamson (who scored one of the goals), "and our defence was good. Our movement inside four meters needs to improve though." There is little to say about the McMaster-Queen's contest as the Marauders blanked the Gaels 12-0. What can be said though is that without outstanding work by goalie Richard Glew, the scoring might have been much worse. Penalties hurt the Gaels when they played Laval, losing 6-4. Laval scored four times while the Gaels were short handed. Marty Rosen worked hard Sunday morning, getting three goals to help defeat Ottawa University 11-5. In the final game of the tournament, Dalhousie took advantage of defensive lapses by Queen's to win 6-2.

While not overjoyed by these results, the Gaels called the tournament worthwhile. Speedy Watson remarked that he "understood more of the movement of the game" and others had similar comments. Mitch Dent led the Gaels scoring with 9 goals, Marty Rosen, Chuck Leighton, Graeme Black and John Williamson all scored to share in the lead.

Queen's tests pre-season waters

by Sports staff

Queen's swimmers placed second out of eleven teams competing at the 7th annual Queen's Invitational Co-ed Swim Meet held last Sunday. The eastern Ontario powerhouse, Ottawa Kingfish, won the meet with 194 points, followed by Queen's with 142 and Cornwall with 79. Some of Canada's best young prospects performed at this meet including Ottawa's Dan Lamontagne, Phil Botman, Anne Merclinger and Cornwall's Pat Lajoie. Not to be outdone by the youngsters, John Abbot College coach, Zac Zanchowski boomed out a 200 freestyle and Queen's own Greg Vanular came out of retirement to win the 100 meter backstroke. Chief organizer and Queen's Men's coach, Larry Brawley was pleased with the results and praised the hard work of Kim Phillips and Jane Rabb, the two meet managers.

Queen's swimming to victory.

HEC

The women's events were completely dominated by the Kingfish who opened the meet by taking the first two spots in the 400 m medley relay. Rookies Cathy Masson and Carla Pepper led the young and inexperienced Queen's Women's team with some excellent performances. Masson met the CWIAU qualifying standards in winning both the 100 and 200 meter backstroke events. She also placed third in the 200 m IM while Pepper came second in the 200 m breaststroke and third in the 100 m freestyle. Other fine times were turned in by Judy Harvey-Smith (4th in the 100 Butterfly) and Diana Harrison (6th in the 200 freestyle). Irene Christie, Karen Nixon, and Christine Dixon all had strong performances and the girls finished the meet on a high point, finishing second to the Kingfish in the final freestyle relay.

Queen's dominated the Men's events with rookie Jack Raleigh and veteran Tim Dennis providing much of the firepower. Raleigh won the two individual events (1500 and 400 m freestyle) and finished second in the 200 free, while Dennis won both the 200 IM and 100 m fly as well as finishing second in the grueling 400 m IM. These two combined with John Lane and Mart Feiertag for victories in both the medley and freestyle relays. Lane added two more thirds, while rookie Feiertag added another third in the 100 m free. Team clowns Drew Fagan and Ken Davies (3rd in 50 free, 4th in 100 free, respectively) both swam well despite adverse conditions and newcomer Andy Hasagawa performed well enough to capture 4th position in the 100 breast stroke. Some other fine efforts were turned in by Jim Tasker, Don MacIntosh, Chris Leuchter, Joe Schnitter, Rick Cockfield, Tom Lewis and Karen, the team manager.

With two swimmers already qualified for the CIAU championships, and bolstered by the return of injured veterans Bubbles Lawrynuik and Fats Bovell, the Men's team appears to be the strongest in the history of Queen's.

15 goals in two games

Hockey Gaels shell Sudbury

by Chris Cuthbert

Paul Stothart is wasting little time in establishing himself as a big offensive threat in the O.U.A.A. hockey loop.

The Golden Gaels rookie right winger scored five goals to lead Queen's to a two-game sweep of their weekend series at Laurentian against the Voyageurs.

The victories, 6-5 Saturday and 9-6 Sunday give the Gaels an early four point margin over Laurentian in the battle for playoff positions.

The wins were especially important this weekend because of the shorter season (16 games this year, four less than last season)," stated Queen's coach Fred O'Donnell. "This year Laurentian will have to beat teams in our division to make up the ground."

Stothart, who spent part of the season with the Ottawa 67's, scored four goals in Sunday's 9-6 romp to complete a seven point weekend.

John MacIntyre scored twice in the Sunday match to enjoy a 5 point series.

Ron Falk, Ron Davidson and Willie Wing added singles in the weekend's final game.

On Saturday Wing and MacIntyre clicked twice with singles going to Dale Sandles and Stothart.

It wasn't an easy sweep for the Gaels who relied on the brilliant goaltending of Barry Ashby to preserve the wins. Ashby faced a total of 99 shots in two games.

The Gaels now prepare for their next regular season match Tuesday night in Ottawa.

Strong start for Gals

by Sue MacGregor

The Queen's Golden Ice Hockey Gals started the 1979 campaign off brilliantly. Participating in the York Invitational Tournament they returned victorious, defeating Sheridan and Concordia with relative ease before advancing into the finals. The game against Seneca turned out to be a real cliff hanger for the fans. Friday night saw the Gals totally dominate play as they romped to a 13-0 win over Sheridan. Everyone notched at least one point with Kim Ferguson leading the team with four goals, while Cathy Eberts and Anne Symes added a hat trick each. Queen's endurance proved superior, as they skated Sheridan into the ice and scored seven of their goals in the last five minutes.

The second game was closer, but again the Gals' superior conditioning proved to be the key. Ferguson tallied two in this game, while singles were added by Diane Carley, Karen Orlando, Sue Fife and Aniko Varpaletai, bringing the final to 6-0.

This advanced the Gals to the final against Seneca, which turned out to be an extremely physical game. Neither team had been scored on and both wanted to remain that way. There were no goals in the first period, even though both teams had good scoring opportunities which were stopped by excellent goaltending. Kim Ferguson opened the scoring midway through the second frame, on a pass from Sue Creighton. Within minutes Seneca rallied and evened the score. The result of the period and most of the third went scoreless but Seneca began to tire and as the third period wore on Queen's was stopped only by excellent goal tending. Kim Ferguson ended that as she scored unassisted with slightly over three minutes left. The next shift saw Janean Sergeant give Queen's the assurance they wanted on a pass from Anne Symes.

Seneca will be in Kingston on November 19, to avenge this defeat, in what looks like an excellent rematch.

Rugby Gaels eye title!

by Don Cameron

The O.U.A.A. Rugby finals, for the first time since 1974, will be held at West Campus this Saturday November 11th. The favored 1st XV Rugby Gaels battle the University of Guelph Gryphons for the coveted league championship. An undefeated 2nd XV Queen's team (8-0) host the University of Western Ontario Mustangs in a match in which the Gaels are again the favorites. Kick-off time for the second XV is 12:30 and 2:00 for the first XV.

Last weekend, Queen's and Guelph played each other in a match completely dominated by the Gaels. However, this weekend's game will not be a walkover for the first place Queen's team. In regular season play Guelph edged the Gaels 183-170 for total points scored. The Gryphon's backs are a top rate unit who can make the necessary breaks. Queen's centers Slattery and Wilson are fine defensive players possessing the tackling ability necessary to restrict Guelph's open field running. Front row forwards Bruce, Bloemen, Delmonte, Nixon and Loucks should be able to win most of scrums, line-outs and loose play. Jim Stone, Tim Hyde and Bill Payne will be looked to contain the Gryphons' excellent fly-half Andrew Parkinson.

Offensively the Gaels will be a constant threat as both the backs and

First XV game time at 2pm, second XV at 12:30 the forwards run strongly. Queen's has the advantage in kicking due to the abilities of John Reid who can kick accurately within the forty.

Topping the league in points scored and allowing a mere ten points against the second XV's should dispatch the U. of W. Mustangs in a perfunctory manner. The hard driving pack are expected to run rampant over the Mustangs. Scrum-half Andy Boright, in keeping with his performance so far this season, will be able to get the ball out to the backs. The 2nd's backs, perhaps the quickest in the league, will be very hard to stop if they are given any room. Powerful forward runners such as Kevin Wilson will make it difficult to cover Queen's offense effectively. The running abilities of the Gaels backs coupled with the potential strong inside running of the pack will force the Mustangs on the defensive. The 2nds should be able to win their championship quite handily.

Ontario squad hopefuls

Queen's field hockey players will be well-represented at the Ontario squad trials this weekend in Toronto. From the Senior team, Marie Miller has been asked to attend, and hopefully will join fellow-Seniors Janine Ennis, Janine LaMarre, Mary Brunton, Jan Hazlewood, and Bev Koski, who all automatically return to the Ontario side on the basis of their experience with the squad last summer. A record number of five Queen's Intermediate players have also been invited to attend the trials this weekend. Second year player Cyndy Shantz heads the list with four impressive rookies, Cathy Mills, Heike Ziss, Heather Kennedy and Susan Tsikwa.

Coaches Comments

by Tim Turnbull

The Golden Gaels football team will meet the defensive challenge of the year this Sunday when they face the stingy St. Francis Xavier X-men.

"Their defence keeps coming at you with linebackers blitzing 75-80 percent of the time. They pressure the other team into mistakes and force the opposing quarterback to throw interceptions," according to coach Doug Hargreaves.

No team in the Atlantic conference has been able to score many points against them. By getting turnovers, the X-men offence can enjoy good field position and slowly move in close enough to score.

After looking at the films, the coach was not overly impressed with the X-men offence and its capabilities to make the big play. Over the season, the X-men have only averaged 15 points per game, while the defence has restricted opponents to 7 points per game.

"St. Francis concentrates on stopping the other team first. Their offence does not have great outside speed or a dangerous passing attack that can put the ball in the end zone often."

In the Atlantic Conference championship, the X-men squirmed by Acadia 12-9, although the X-men had twice as much offence Acadia's only touchdown came on a punt return.

The onus is on the Gaels offensive line and running backs to play outstanding games. "We have to consolidate against the blitz and pick up the linebackers. We won't add anything new to our offence, but run what has been successful."

"If we can break through the blitz, the defensive back will have a 33 (Dave Marinucci's number) tattooed on their foreheads. Our other responsibility is to give quarterback Jim Rutka time to throw. If the X-men blitz someone will have to cover Bob O'Doherty man-for-man, but nobody has been able to do that yet this year. We've got some great receivers, and if Rutka can reach them, we'll have six points. Jim Rutka is getting stronger every play. Rutka was outstanding last week, completing 14 of 23 passes for 290 yards, while receiving excellent protection from the experienced line. Strong rushing games from Marinucci, Manasterky and MacCartney could take the pressure off Rutka's passing and open up the X-men defence.

Our defence, bulwark of the Gaels all year, has the second lowest points against average in the country behind St. F.X. Hargreaves expects another superb game from this unit. "We have to stop their bootleg action. They have a short quarterback (5'8") so if we can keep him inside, he won't be able to see over our big trees (Bakker, Muller, Francis and Ball)."

With two outstanding defences involved, the game could become a punting duel. Gaels punter Tim Wardrop has improved with every game, while kicker Blaine Shore is back to early season form, so the Gaels should have no worries in those two departments.

It should be a rough, closely-fought game. The Gaels are healthy and raring to go. After last year's loss to Acadia, they want this game badly.

CFRC will broadcast the entire game Sunday, on 1490 A.M. and 91.9 FM starting at 11:50 a.m.

Athletes of the week

The Editor

This past weekend proved to be very exciting for a number of the Queen's Intercollegiate teams. While the fall teams are coming to the end of their season, the winter sports are just beginning and Queen's is making an impressive showing in the intercollegiate sports scene.

There were a number of extremely outstanding performances by individuals, thus making the decision of Athlete of the Week a difficult one. However, Jim Rutka has earned this position due to his leadership and outstanding play in Saturday's football game. After being out of play for the past four games, Rutka came back as starting quarterback to play an exceptional game. He passed for a total of 287 yards while completing 15 of 26 attempts. His leadership and game control boosted the team morale which lead to an extremely impressive showing, as the Gaels downed the Redmen 23-1.

Placing a close second for the position of Athlete of the Week is John Reid of the Gaels 1st Rugby team. Reid scored all 21 points for Queen's on 2 tries, 2 converts and 3 penalty kicks. Strong team play was the important component in the Gaels beating Guelph. Reid's kicking (5 for 5), however, made an outstanding contribution to the team's scoring ability.

Honourable mention this week goes to Paul Stothart of the Queen's Hockey team. He scored 5 goals and had 2 assists in 2 games, helping Queen's down a tough Laurentian team. Also mention must be given to the Men's Varsity Eight Rowing team. The team placed first against last year's O.U.A.A. champions and set a record fast score for recent Ontario University Championships of 5:40.9 minutes. The crew consisted of Simon Warner, Don Lindsay, Doug Hamilton, Rick Pearson, Rick Saultink, Gary Davies, Mark Evans, Robby Little and Kevin Gordon.

Sports Opinion

Queen's athletes vs. their fields

The present state of our athletic fields is undeniably one further result of the financial restraint faced by the university. Considering the scope of both intercollegiate and intramural sports offered at Queen's, the number of available pitches is grossly inadequate. The fields are being overworked. At no time in the year is any field being given adequate rest. Compounding this problem is the fact that there are too few financial resources being made available to compensate for the excessive demands being placed on the pitches. From September onwards, the fields undergo a tremendous beating, are given minimal maintenance in the summer months, and are then thrown open to continued use (or abuse) once more in the fall. Judging from the field's appearance, one cannot help but wonder if the money put into them is being wasted. It appears to be a classic case of the misuse of short-term funds when a long-range solution is in order. "Financial constraint" is the watchword of our time at university, and we have to accept this. But is it being used as an excuse, or crutch, to cover disinterest? This does not have to be accepted. Considering the amount of dedication, time and effort Queen's athletes put into their training so that they can represent the university capably, some solution is in order. Otherwise they are not being given the fullest opportunities to reap the rewards of their efforts. In fact, Queen's is not just hurting its athletes, it is short-changing itself.

The use of the term "financial constraint" should not be used in future for providing the lowest common denominator on athletic pitches. What is needed is a longer term solution.

Introducing the Advent/1.

Probably the best-sounding $150
speaker ever.

The Advent/1 is a smaller, less expensive version of the most popular and most imitated speaker in the country: the New Advent Loudspeaker. It uses the same woofer and the same tweeter as the New Advent, but in a smaller cabinet.

The results are nothing short of amazing. Its smooth, rich, wide-range sound sets new performance standards for its price range. It literally out-performs speakers selling for three times as much.

Before you spend more than $150 each on new speakers, be sure to hear the new Advent/1's.

Town and gown

Don't hold your breath, but... the municipal elections are just around the corner. On November 13, as citizens of Kingston, enumerated students will be able to exercise their democratic mandate and help elect the representatives that will govern the affairs of this city. Cataraqui, Sydenham, Ontario and Victoria are just some of the wards students may find themselves living in, and a full slate of candidates in all those wards are vying for the student vote. If history is a guide, though, they won't get it. Students just don't vote in municipal elections.

A question has arisen, perhaps as it has in years past: will this year be different? It should be. The much touted relationship between "town and gown" (city and students) has suffered a series of setbacks, beginning in frosh week with an unprecedented number of citizen complaints arising out of student activities, and extending into the bootlegging charges against ten students, and the subsequent trial.

Further, there are proposals in the works at City Hall that are specifically directed at students or student concerns. For one, a noise bylaw is being contemplated that would restrict the level of noise legally allowable in a particular area. There are obvious implications here for the future of street parties at Queen's. Secondly, ratepayers have been arguing for a zoning bylaw to restrict the additions a landlord may add to a house. The proposal is apparently directed at the visible condition of some student houses, with extensions indiscriminately tacked on to their sides.

Potentially, students command an effective voice at the municipal level—yet they have rarely, if ever, used it. Even though the issues this year seem more closely identifiable to students, the chances are small that participation levels will increase substantially. The reasons for this phenomenon are not hard to discern. They derive, primarily, from the prevailing orientation of students to their setting. Queen's is a self-contained environment. One can eat, sleep, study, go to movies, dances and pubs, hold a job and engage in a whole range of sports without stepping off the university grounds. In this closed community, the inhabitants share common interests, are more or less in the same age bracket, and often come from strikingly similar backgrounds. Moreover, what outward orientation may exist will likely be directed toward one's "home town": in few cases is Kingston really considered a home away from home. (Of course, this is not true of native Kingstonians attending Queen's.)

This isolationist tendency must be fought. Ultimately, the university is an institution of the society, and as such it must be a part of that society. The rift between student and citizen, essentially, originates from a mutual lack of understanding. Simply, Kingstonians can't work out students; students don't try to comprehend Kingstonians. It's Hugh MacLennan's "Two Solitudes" in our own backyard.

We have to close the rift. That means breaking out beyond the confines of the Queen's campus; it means beginning to show a real concern for what our city is and what it wants to be. Though we as students are only temporary residents, we can and should have a part in Kingston's development and growth. Not only in terms of our "student interest", for that implies a restrictive narrowness; but in terms of the "community interest", in which we have both a right and a responsibility to share. We can start on November 13. Vote in the municipal election.

Pub glasses may last longer

$5,000. An exorbitant amount of money by anyone's standards. Yet this sum represents what may be spent to replace glasses either stolen or broken in the Underground this year.

Unless, of course, the AMS can take the step they are presently proposing; to fine students stealing or intentionally breaking glasses.

The proposal shows a fair amount of ingenuity on the part of the AMS. Instead of requiring that an offender be brought before AMS Court (a step not normally initiated), those caught violating either maxim will automatically be fined $10, much in the same manner as traffic fines are levied.

The proposal will not lead to a back-up in the Court as a result of increased scrutiny by AMS Constables, and the fine is severe enough to discourage future offences. All that remains is for Outer Council to ratify the proposal and hopefully this costly trend will stop.

Football and rugby teams take Atlantic Bowl and OUAA final

by Tom Mohr and Don Cameron

After two exciting Rugby matches this past Saturday afternoon, the Queen's First and Second Gaels came out on top with the OUAA League Championship trophies. The Seconds met the Western Mustangs and walked away with a well-won victory. The Guelph Gryphons stood firmly in the path of the First XV forcing a defensive game with a tight final score of 16-15. The elation over the double victory was fitting tribute to a team that played brilliantly all season.

The Queen's Golden Gaels Football Team and about 200 die-hard supporters survived a scare in the early going to reign victorious over the St. Francis Xavier X-men in the Atlantic Bowl last Sunday. The final score was 32-10.

Held at St. Mary's University Stadium in downtown Halifax, the crowd of 7,000 was the largest ever to attend an Atlantic Conference game.

"It was just great," Principal Ronald Watts said from the dressing room after the game.

"I think they shut off St. Francis very well. I'll be there to see them next Saturday. Just one game left to go!" he said.

Quarterback Jim Rutka was named outstanding player of the game.

Jubilation was everywhere after the game, as the field was filled with Queen's fans doing oil thighs, and the players carried the Robert L.

Proposal would ban the 5 man house

by Kim Fennell

The city of Kingston is considering a change in the by-laws that would make it illegal for more than four unrelated people to share "Zone A" houses. Zone A houses are those classified as single or double family dwellings.

Many student houses, particularly those west of University Ave. and south of Johnson are considered to be Zone A. The present law states that no more than 5 unrelated people can share a house.

The organization behind the move is the Sydenham Ward Ratepayers and Tenants Association.

Concerned because Kingston families are moving away from the city core, they want to stop developers from buying houses and putting up additions. The problem, in their opinion, is that the additions are too large, house too many students, cause noise, have inadequate parking facilities, and are changing the nature of Sydenham Ward. They feel that putting a limit on the number of unrelated persons, a house will keep student houses down to a reasonable size.

John Box, AMS City Liaison Officer, said, "The city definitely has a case in that they want an integrated community. But they must also look at our position in wanting to have good housing close to campus. But in order for students to be able to afford the rent of some of these houses, they have to put in 6 or 7 tenants even though they're breaking the law."

A subcommittee of the Planning Board was struck to deal with the problem. At its meeting last Thursday, Gord Locklin of the Sydenham Ward Tenant Ass. made three recommendations for the Board to consider: 1) that 4 persons be defined as the number of unrelated Hobby turned nightmare: Mrs. Drumev wanted to be around students. "I'm very, very, sorry," she said.

Grocery losing student business

The new owner of University Grocery, Mrs. Jelena Drumev, had hoped to make the store her hobby. Instead, it has turned into a nightmare since the Journal published its "Shopping in Kingston" story.

According to Mrs. Drumev, students have been complaining about her prices and walking out of the store, for good. However, many of the prices under her new management have been reduced since the survey was taken.

"I've used up two bottles of nail polish remover changing prices on my cans," she said.

These surveyed items have been changed. Coffee has been reduced from $5.59 to $4.99 for 6 oz.; tea, from 79c to 59c for 15 bags; tissue paper is down from $1.99 to $1.75 for 4 rolls, and soup, from 37c to 35c for 10 oz.

While her prices have gone down, she is still losing the student customers who make or break her business.

"Students don't want to understand," she said. One student, upset that there were two prices on one package, threw it down on the counter and stormed out the door. Though, she claims, "I haven't made a penny for myself in the whole month," it is the attitude of the students that really hurts.

"I've never felt so bad," she said. "I bought this place because I wanted to be around students. I'm very, very, sorry."

Housing proposal

people allowed to a Zone A house; 2) that there be some control on additions to existing structures in Zone A by controlling the ratio between the size of the lot and the square footage of the building; 3) that cooperative housing be a designated zone to correspond with existing E zone houses. (E zone are "Special Educational and Medical Houses" which include AMS houses and Science '44 coop.)

Professor George Rawlyk, who is a member of the Sydenham Ward Tenants Assoc and also of the Subcommittee, stated that, "The major problem is to be found in the hard-nosed developers who are moving into the Sydenham Ward area, taking advantage of a loophole in the zoning bylaws, and building, in my view, questionable additions. In the process, they are really taking advantage of students. The point I want to stress is that we're not against students. We're against the callous developer who is out to make a fast buck. We want proper housing structures in the future."

Any change in the bylaw would most likely contain a "nonconforming" clause. This would mean that a house presently being used by 5 unrelated people would not be affected unless the house became unoccupied or was used for a different purpose. A change in ownership would not affect its standing as long as it continued to be occupied.

Rory Cattnach, AMS Vice-President has received permission to present an AMS proposal to the subcommittee in the near future. It could be a year before any changes in the bylaw would take effect.

George Muirhead, a city planner with the city, summed up the situation: "Some residents have perceived a problem where a number of additions are being built to house more students. These additions are considered incompatible with the nature of the neighbourhood. If the bylaw is changed no one could buy a house and put 5 or more students in it. The net effect would be to make student housing more expensive. Also, it may hurt the family man who wants to put on a couple extra bedrooms for his children. There are many complications in finding a solution to the problem."

Graduating Students All Faculties M.B.A. Information Meeting

For any graduating students considering an MBA the School of Business is hosting an informal meeting to provide information about its graduate program. Faculty will be present and will discuss the questions of admissions requirements and procedures, curriculum and teaching methodologies, placement and careers.

The meeting will consist of a very short informal presentation followed by a question-and-answer period over coffee. Those who cannot attend but who would like some information should contact the MBA Office at 547-3234.

Suzie Q pleases some, but not W.C.

by Janet Brick

Back by popular demand, Suzie-Q week was a success. Organizers Chris

McCormick and Jeff Hesselien describe the response to Suzie-Q week as "Great, very exciting", and attribute its success to a "good format" - one that appealed to a good cross-section of students, resulting in a mixture of faculty and year members at all events.

The Clark Hall Pub, the dance in Jock Hartly Arena on Friday night, and the Champagne Brunch were well-attended, and the Suzie-Q Semi-Formal sold out.

McCormick believes that the aim of Suzie-Q week, to provide a break after mid-terms, was attained, especially as the fun "extended beyond just the organized events."

Not everyone saw Suzie-Q week in such a favourable light, however. Sherry Galey, director of the Women's Center, said "The Queen's Women's Center does not support Suzie-Q week. If you argue that it is good for a caged animal to be let loose occasionally for exercise, you are also implicitly justifying the confinement of the animal in the first place."

"The Women's Center believes that instead of expending a great amount of energy on giving the animal its occasional spot of exercise, we should be concentrating on working to release the animal from the cage. The situation is similar with Suzie-Q week. The women at Queen's don't want to be let out for a romp. They want to be freed from the cage."

Goalposts down in '68

by Eric Evans

The Gaels' 32-10 victory over Satin F-X last weekend will allow Queen's to advance this Saturday to its first College Bowl since 1968.

The 1968 season, characterized by $5000 in damages to a downtown Toronto hotel, and full-scale brawls with McGill fans, ended with 4000 Queen's students journeying to Toronto to attend the College Bowl. The 1968 game, held on a Friday night, was preceded by an orderly pep rally and parade.

The game itself was more in keeping with the rest of the season, however. A final touchdown by the Golden Gaels with 1:13 left to play in the game - making the score 42-14 over the Waterloo Lutheran Golden Hawks - was too much for Queen's fans. The field was rushed by students who subsequently tore down the goalposts, resulting in an early end to the game.

It is to be hoped that the contingent from Queen's will be able to restrain themselves until the game ends Saturday afternoon, and that Toronto survives the weekend.

Stanfield trophy back to the dressing room.

Inside the Queen's dressing room, havoc prevailed. The players broke into spontaneous chants, such as "9 and 0! 9 and 0!" (referring to their unbeaten record), and "We're going home, boys! We're going home!"

After about fifteen minutes of revelry, a half-dressed Dave Marinucci asked a question somewhat indicative of the pandemonium. "By the way—what was the score?" he said.

● Spray paint

by Tom Mohr

1:00 A.M. is zero hour. Hushed voices plan strategy, huddled silhouettes shuffle back and forth under a starless sky, waiting. A light rain begins to fall as the group moves out, heading for their objective. Over the fence, and onto the football field they break into a light run. It's St. Mary's Stadium in Halifax and they're heading for the end zones.

Out come the spray paint cans—blue, red, and yellow. Soon, St. Mary's Stadium can boast tricolour goalposts.

In the end zones, the Queen's crest is being stenciled in flour. Just as the last touches are being completed, there's a shout. People are coming! The marauders scatter in all directions, taking to the fences, the stands, and any other route that will elude the local constabulary. No one is caught. Five hours later, the sun rises on a transformed stadium.

By mid-morning, the word is out: watch out, Halifax, Queen's has

● Assorted Scenes

by Tom Mohr

Defensive rover Gary Schreider's lucky brick did it again. The brick, which was given to him after the Bishop's game, has travelled with the team ever since. "It's coming to Toronto," Schreider said. "It's like our defense: solid."

XXXXXXXX

Dr. J.D. Hatcher, Queen's professor for 24 years and head of the department of physiology until 1976, came out to support the Gaels. Now teaching medicine in Halifax, Hatcher considers the Gael's performance to be "just great."

"Of course, they're bound to be successful with a medical student as a quarterback," he added.

XXXXXXXX

The Queen's Bands and cheerleading squad, though with their ranks somewhat depleted, nonetheless performed tremendously before a highly receptive crowd. One of the highlights of an exciting day was when the band led the fans in a new and powerful cheer, Alabama Breakdown. It consists primarily of loud caveman grunts and arm jerks.

XXXXXXXX

Bands co-manager Cliff McCracken was mildly miffed when he found out that for the first time this year, Bands members were required to pay $2.50 each to enter the game. They performed in the half-time show as well as playing "Oh Canada."

"It's sort of ridiculous that we've been invited by the CIAU to perform at the College Bowl, yet when we play at the Atlantic Bowl we have to pay our way in," he said.

XXXXXXXX

In the dressing room after the game, the bubbly was flowing fast and freely. Ted Tyczka filled the Atlantic Bowl trophy with champagne, and handed it to coach Doug Hargreaves. A chant arose, "Chug! Chug! Chug! Chug!" Hargreaves passed the cup back empty.

XXXXXXXX

Linda Cordes, Arts '76, and presently a resident of Halifax, was impressed by the spirit exhibited by Queen's supporters during the game.

"The spirit is great. It's as good as it was when I was there," she said. Looking at three fans around her, she added, "About the same number of drunks as I remember, too."

XXXXXXXX

Terry Wright, one of last year's gridiron sensations presently working in Burlington, was in the dressing room after the game to congratulate the players.

"I wish it had happened last year, but I'm just as happy these guys were able to do it. There's a lot of talent on this team, but what they lack in some areas they make up in team spirit. They're just super," he said.

● Band Proud

by Tom Mohr

The Queen's Bands have everything together this year, and the members are proud of it. Representatives for Canada at the Can-Am Bowl in Tampa, Florida, and the official band at the 1978 College Bowl in Toronto, band members feel they're finally getting the recognition they deserve.

Bands co-manager Cliff McCracken feels that this has been an important factor in the continued enthusiasm among the members as the season lengthens.

"Last year, the spirit was sort of dying this late in the season. But this year, it's never been better. It might be the Florida thing that's keeping everything together. Whatever it is, it's great," he said.

Among the problems presently facing the band is finances. The success of the Gaels, as well as the planned trip to Florida, are rapidly draining the club's coffers. A fund-raising campaign is presently under the way, and manager McCracken hopes it will be a success.

"One of our biggest problems is money. The length of the season is so variable from year to year that budgeting is almost impossible," he said.

This Friday, the band will be holding a pep rally in Nathan Phillips Square for the first time in five years, when Queen's belonged to the old league. If last weekend is any indication, Toronto will be impressed.

Rector Interviews

Christie: tough decisions ahead

Hugh Christie

Basic issues: First, how well the Board of Trustees react to the financial constraints being faced by the University. Presently tuition fees are set by the government. If they were "unpegged" to allow universities to set their own rates; Western, U. of T., and Queen's could charge more to maintain their standards (of education).

The University will also have to be more generous to faculty this year. They accepted a 4% increase last year but will not accept that level again.

(Therefore, if the system doesn't change the University will have to make some tough decisions. This makes the position of Rector all that much more important.

Second, there is the question of business, social responsibility in investment policy. If the Standing Committee established by the Board to deal with investments causing widespread concern includes a student, that student should be the Rector because he is the student that has the most informed position on investment policy. In addition, as an executive member of the Board he is a voting member.

Through my work on the Senate Committee of Student Affairs I have come in contact with all the major issues: Career Planning and Placement, the Student Health Service, Daycare, and the Office of the Chaplain. For example, I would recommend that the Office of the Chaplain be retained.

Many issues are also confidential. Through my work with Student Affairs I am familiar with them. Former Rector Moe Chochla was also on this Committee. Because these issues are of vital importance, the Rector had to be in on them so he can talk intelligently about them with the Board of Trustees.

Noranda is another. I have the groundplan of the issue. The Standing Committee (established to examine investments that provoke widespread unanimity of concern) of the Board should have the Rector on it because he is known as an impartial force having no connection with any group on campus.

TENURE: Students should be able to provide input into the Senate Committee on Appointments, Promotion, Tenure and Leave.

concerned, should be like a fire station. Very low-profile when not in use, but always in top condition and readiness.

The Rector should attend Senate meetings, maintain an open-door policy, and when a major issue comes up, he should jump into action.

On Noranda, the issue may be over. They are not going through with the proposed investment. I think Queen's has made its position clear. I'm not sure anything more constructive could be done.

The priorities on campus in budgeting is the prime concern. If students think that Queen's should maintain its uniqueness, they must be concerned with the quality of support things—like Athletics, the Fine Arts, and the open time of buildings—which tend to get lost in the shuffle.

A necessary quality of the Rector is to know where decisions are made and to bring student concerns on issues to the relevant bodies.

Tenure: There are a number of questions to be raised here. First, how will it affect the University's ability to budget? We have to be tighter on who receives tenure. If 80% of the professors are tenured, a great deal of the budget will be spent on salaries. The University can't afford to guarantee life-time contracts except to those who are excellent. The criteria (for determining excellence) must be teaching and research ability first, and work on administrative things such as committees and Senate should assume a secondary level.

Tenure should not be irreversible and more emphasis must be placed on giving tenure to professors who have the highest qualifications in both research and teaching, not on those who are good at only one or the other.

PROFILE OF RECTOR: The Rector, as far as the University community is

Profile: Raising the profile of the Rector simply for raising the profile is not very realistic. Issues are of sufficient importance that once understood more thoroughly by people on campus, and once the issues are brought closer to home, then the profile must be raised.

The Rector can be the most effective avenue for the expression of student concern on University budget considerations.

Much of the Rector's job is keeping abreast of day-to-day decisions made by University officers and providing informal student input to those officers through channels not normally used by the student representatives.

Reynolds submits his withdrawal

Terrence Veg Reynolds

I will take this opportunity to announce my withdrawal from the campaign for Rector. I never seriously intended to contend the position in the first place. The Rector role could have been very bland and perhaps I created some interest because of my joke campaign. However, in no way was it an attempt to belittle the position of Rector and if it has I sincerely apologize.

I wanted people at Queen's to realize that they are often too complacent, content merely to follow the crowd. It is the type of person who would be shocked and annoyed at my candidacy that must realize people are different and that they don't always have to follow a crowd. I like entertaining and enjoyed running.

Women's centre view

The sexism of Suzy Q week

The Editor:

I was shocked to see that the Queen's Journal could publish such a fabrication as "SUZIE Q GETS WOMEN'S CENTRE OK" and then make no effort to retract this gross inaccuracy. My letter stating the Women's Centre's position and Chris McCormack's statement to the effect that he was in error were not printed. It is true that you would be hesitant to admit to such irresponsible journalism and you will probably make certain that this letter ends up with all the other letters that make you uncomfortable, in the garbage.

The Queen's Women's Centre does not support Suzie Q week and perhaps you could make it editorial policy in the future to check the facts before you attribute statements to individuals or organizations.

It is commonly argued that Suzie Q week is not sexist. After all it explicitly gives women the go ahead to do during one week what they should be able to do every day of the year. But the Women's Centre feels that there are many more constructive ways to encourage the equality of women, that is, if we really wanted women to be equal. We should not kid ourselves that an artificial situation such as Suzie Q week is a real solution to helping women develop their assertiveness. Furthermore, that this one week is set aside for women to take the initiative in social situations, legitimizes the prevailing norms that foster the passive, dependent female role at all other times.

Queen's day-care is hoping to expand next year. They need information about the needs of potential users. You can help.

The organizers of Suzie Q week may not intend to be sexist but, nevertheless, the week functions to perpetuate sexual inequality at Queen's.

What is really needed, is a thorough understanding of why sexual inequality exists in our society. The pervasiveness of this type of discrimination suggests that it is not simply an outdated "leftover" of a bygone era. The lower wages of women, their use as "free labour" in the home, the feelings of "power" they provide for many men implies that other explanations are needed. It further implies that solutions to the problem involve much more than Suzie Q week can provide.

Opinion <sup>7</sup>

Need a day care for next year?

The Editor,

Queen's Day Care Inc. is currently investigating the possibility of expanding our program into Victoria School. We have reached tentative agreement with the School Board over leasing arrangements for two classrooms. We envisage a half-day day care program to mesh with the current and hopefully expanded kindergarten program in the school. This would allow for a full day program for children in this age group. We currently foresee a total of 30 half-day places being available. It should be clear, however, that a number of problems still remain to be resolved.

One of the most pressing problems is to elicit a clear measure of the need for such a program. This information would be necessary both in our approaches to the government and to try to ensure that the current Queen's Day Care operation will not be beset with severe financial liabilities if we were to project and provide more places than were actually filled.

We would like to enlist your support in advertising this project as a potential service available as of next September. The cost would be approximately $5.00 per day which presumably will be eligible for provincial subsidy based on the financial needs of the family.

Yours truly, R.G. Young, President,

Foreign University intrigue at St. Andrew's in Scotland

by John Lewis

The Editor,

As an exchange student from the University of St. Andrews, I thought that it would be interesting for readers to learn about student life at my home University.

We have our equivalent of a "Frosh" week, but we call it a "presessional". Rather than being assigned to a gael group, the first-year students gain academic "mothers" and "fathers" whose task it is to guide their "children" through the stresses and strains of first term. We have all the usual activities of dances, parties and special events—though whereas our mad students are generally alcohol orientated, yours seem to be directed towards getting tired, worn-out and dirty.

After the initial excitement of the "presessional" most people settle down to become diligent students; there are a few, however, who chose to spend their time in other, more interesting ways.

The social life of a typical student at St. Andrews revolves around the pubs, but this is not to say there aren't other ways to spend free time in St. Andrews. In our student's Union, dances and concerts are held throughout the year and films are shown weekly. There are also countless societies, ranging from the "Bridge Club" to the "Society for the Preservation of Punk Rock and Pinball Machines." Besides this, many students play sports such as squash, badminton, rugby, soccer, hockey and of course golf.

A large percentage of the students at St. Andrews are bored with and uninterested in student politics. It is left to small cliques to pursue the posts open to students in the University administration. A politically-oriented student can hope to get himself elected as a member of the S.R.C. (Student's Representative Council) or as a member of the Students' Union Committee. Strangely enough, after the elections of last year, the S.R.C. is filled entirely by rabid Tories whereas the Union Committee is composed mainly of members with a socialist disposition. As you can guess from their titles, the S.R.C.'s job is to look after the interests of the students and the Union Committee's job is to supervise the running of the Students' Union.

Gateway to St. Salvator's College.

Since St. Andrews is a very old University it has accumulated a number of customs over the years. Nearly every student owns a red gown that is usually worn only on special occasions, although there are some students who wear them at all times. A gown would also be worn on a "pierwalk"—we have a shore pier that we walk along—which commemorates a rescue of some kind.

We have a famous organization called the "Kate Kennedy Club". Every year it holds a parade where its members dress up as historical characters well-known in Scotland. The highlight of the parade is the appearance of Kate Kennedy herself, riding in a horse and carriage, accompanied by her father. She is selected each year by the chief members of the club—they choose the prettiest boy they can find from amongst the first-year members.

St. Andrews is a typical "Town and gown" university—that is, there is very little correspondence between the students and the townspeople. Most students confine their movements in town to the four main streets where the shops, banks and the majority of the University buildings are situated. Very few students live in the town—most live either in student residences or student houses. The student houses are arranged in two complexes situated at either end of town, each house provides accommodation for six people and the University interferes very little in their running.

Toothbrush morality

Last week we took an affectionate look at the Young Regressive Conservative. This week, in the interests of fair play, we shall examine another species of the political animal, the Young New Democrat [YND].

I found my YND subject sprawled on a dirty old couch in a dirty old house on a dirty old street. YND wore an old bulky knit sweater that he had found at the Thrift Store. His blue jeans were brown. His blond hair was brown. His pallor was sallow, like a yellow marshmallow.

Six fellow YND's lived in his house. Mattresses were strewn everywhere, but you couldn't really see them for the fluffballs which peacefully covered the floor like a low-lying cloud cover.

The evening I was there, all six of YND's comrades were off at meetings. At these meetings they would spend many hours altering the consciousnesses of the Great Unwashed. (In truth though, no one goes to these meetings except other socialists, all of whom have bona fide Altered Consciousnesses—although they do remain greatly unwashed.)

My interviewee is Chairman of the Committee of Concern for Emotionally Crippled UCC Graduates (CCECCUGG). It is a relevant concern of the concerned.

YND's love speaking to the press. So much so that YND started talking before I'd even got my tape recorder plugged in. As a result, I can only report on a small segment of the interview.

YND: We are into a viable, alternative, vegetarian, pro-abortion lifestyle. We share everything in this house. For example, we only have one toothbrush.

Me: Isn't that a little unsanitary?

YND: Is it morally right for us to be sanitary when so many aren't? And besides, we lost the other 6 to the fluffballs.

Me: Well, if you follow your toothbrush logic, one could ask if it was morally correct for us to be going to school when so many can't afford to?

YND: Boy, for a reporter, you're pretty dumb.

Me: Well, look at the paper I write for.

YND: That's still no excuse for being a running dog capitalist lackey.

Me: (indignant) How can you say that! I never ever buy South African wine.

YND: (softening) What do you buy?

Me: I've found a great Chilean burgundy... (With that remark I caused the gasp that was heard around the world. I had to redeem myself post haste). You know, the brand Stephen Lewis does the TV commercials for.

YND's share toothbrushes, fluffballs, and bonafide altered consciousnesses.

YND: (dubiously) Stephen Lewis? Are you sure?

Me: Sure I'm sure. I ought to know, after all, I used to research for him.

Tears of forgiveness leapt to YND's eyes. To research for Lewis represented the pinnacle of human achievement. He motioned for me to follow him down the hall.

YND: I can see now that you are one of the Great Washed. I want to show you our shrine. We call it The Lewis Room.

Down the hall I waded, through the fluffballs and into the Room...

The Lewis Room: The Cistine Chapel should be so beautiful. Priceless prints lined white-washed walls. Eskimo carvings abounded, like little grey buffalo chips. Elegant foreign plants drooped tastefully. Classical music emanated baroquely from the stereo. Everywhere I saw the restrained hand of A-T Shoppe. On the modernesque coffee table lay a tray, suavely mounded with cheeses. Wine awaited the discriminating palate. Out the window I could see a shiny new BMW.

My host settled into the All-White sofa. Gingerly crossing his legs in the continental fashion, he turned to me and smiled.

YND: And now, my friend, let us talk about the Working Class.

like myself could go to the game and abhor the fact that the game is being played in Hogtown; be outraged that the UBC team has to play in heathen eastern climes, complain about the impact upon the 'Birds of the Par-tisan Queen's crowd, and after the final whistle express disgust at the officiating.

You see, if UBC wins then their supporters have to laud the system and no true British Columbian could ever admit that federalism produced a just result.

Football federalism

by Rob Reynolds

The dilemma of federalism is coming home. To be specific it is coming to Varsity Stadium in the form of a football game. When the Thunderbirds take the field against the Caels there will be a few schizophrenic spectators among the "mass of humanity".

You see, coming from Vancouver as I do, one is intensely nationalistic (I dare not say provincial) about what lies west of the Rocky "curtain". On dismal winter days British Columbians are quick to remark about dandelions blooming in Richmond. The next line is invariably to tell of the joys of skiing and sailing on the same day—standard westcoast lifestyle.

Although in B.C. we argue violently along a right-left spectrum and allow for no compromise between NDP supporters and Social Crediters, when we venture beyond the "curtain" a strong bond develops between even the most ardent of political enemies. Regionalism reigns supreme.

However, after spending some time at Queen's, living in the 'time warp' environment, one develops a sort of "love-hate" relationship with this University. In fact, writing an opinion column on the dilemma that a football game presents is typically Queen's. Despite trying to ignore the "I Like Ike" mentality of the place it becomes pervasive.

The dichotomy should become apparent; does one from B.C. realize that his or her own regional interests are paramount and support UBC "Plunderbirds" or does the co-optive nature of Eastern Canadian institutions dictate support for Queen's?

Objectively, I think that the team from the grassy slopes of Point Grey will win over the boys from Limestone City, but as any student of Canadian federalism knows, objectivity has little to do with resolving national issues.

Realizing that cynicism, not forest products, is the chief export of B.C. I would hope for Queen's to win. You see, in this way, British Columbians

10 Opinion

Veg's misconceptious phrases clarified

The Editor,

I feel it necessary to present a rebuttal to Mr T "Veg" Reynolds' opinion, titled "Pinko martyrs". The gentleman states that the letter I wrote to the Queen's Crest (published October 31st) dealt with evils thereof. Evils? I consider the Quest not evil, but misguided. That is why, instead of condemning it, I outlined a program, which, in my opinion, would set the Quest "on the path of righteousness".

Mr Reynolds uses some phrases, which I feel are misconceptious and I shall now proceed to explain them.

"Free education a saviour" (of our society)? No, just a step in the right direction.

Tear-jerking picture of the struggling student? Gee, I hope not, I wanted to make you think about the feasibility of our "capitalist" economy. Mr Reynolds—why capitalist? We have trade unions in our economy. May I be the first to inform you that trade unions are a socialist concept?

"Ailing society"? Yes. The price of milk went up 3c a quart not long ago, amongst a multitude of other price increases. I'm sure even the cockroaches in your abode are becoming scarcer as you attempt to satiate your hunger without paying exorbitant prices for food.

"Society doesn't need another demented blemish" Yes, that's true, so why don't you rectify that by taking some courses in sociology, or perhaps even economics.

As to your statement "you people feel above the rest of us capitalist, because you embrace socialism..." I don't feel above anyone, but I believe it was my right to publish my opinion, according to the traditional themes of democracy.

Not attacking or supporting our Pinko ideas? Pinko generally means communist, not socialist—there is a difference.

I'm sorry I appeared a martyr to you. That wasn't my intention. I tried to make you think. Too bad my efforts were in vain.

"The Quest pushy" Well, I must agree with that point of view, but I would have put a "very" in front of the "pushy".

If you find that Kraft dinner tastes better with cockroaches, as you suggest, then it is your prerogative to indulge in such diets. To use a rather old and ragged cliché, I'd fight to the death to defend such, and other, prerogatives. However, such food may affect your thinking, as you seem to have amply demonstrated.

In conclusion, I'd like to inform you of something called the "Socialist International", which recently held a congress in Vancouver. One of the speakers was Willy Brandt, the former chancellor of West Germany. It would appear then, that Willy Brandt is rather socialist in his views. West Germany is perhaps socialist, but economically sound. Other countries in the western hemisphere which are somewhat socialist in nature include Great Britain (a strong labour party), France and Italy (strong communist, not only socialist parties). So why are their currencies doing better than our "capitalist" currency? (And students don't pay tuition in West Germany). So why does your article seem to say that what we have is ultimately better than what they have? Patriotically commendable, but a fallacy. Open your eyes!

I'm not advocating socialism nor communism. Having been born behind the Iron Curtain (and living there for most of my life to date) I'm well aware, better than you, of the dangers involved in that system. I'd just like you to think about our system before you say that we don't need any changes.

Once, Claire believed she had the greatest job in the world.

Square Claire, her friends tease her. and Claire is the first to agree.

She's never fancied a career.

Liberation is not her style.

The only fulfillment she ever wanted was to marry the man she loved and raise a happy family.

You wouldn't think of Claire as a candidate for a drinking problem—but you'd be wrong.

The trouble began with her husband's success. The more demanding his work became, the less time he had for Claire.

Now it's the children. Suddenly they're independent young adults, eager to be off on their own.

Claire feels lost and no longer needed. Alone at home, she's started drinking to pass the time, hoping that would somehow solve things.

Of course, it won't. There isn't a beer, a wine or a spirit made that can cure loneliness or, indeed, any unhappy situation. Qualified professional help is what Claire should trust to get out from under her problem.

The wisdom of enjoying a drink sensibly is easy enough to accept when things are going well. But it's when the going gets rough that moderation is even more vital to remember.

Women's status at Queen's

by Sherry Galey

In 1972, Principal John Deutsch established a committee to investigate the status of women at Queen's University. Chaired by Ms. Lin Good, now Associate Librarian, the committee, after 18 months of study, produced a comprehensive report which dealt with women as faculty members, members of the administration, support staff and students.

The committee was charged with the responsibility to make recommendations that would ensure that "all women members of the university community receive equitable and non-discriminatory treatment in every aspect of the University's operations".

This it did. The report showed evidence of discriminatory practices and inequality between men and women, and made fifty-seven recommendations that would begin to correct the discrepancies.

Eleven recommendations were made specifically with regard to the full-time academic staff where women were found to be concentrated in the lower ranks and in the lower salary ranges. Because a significant number of these women would be eligible for promotion within the five years immediately following the report, one of the recommendations asked that the "Principal establish a review committee that would undertake an analysis of appointment and promotion patterns...no later than five years and no sooner than three years hence".

The Principal's Committee on Appointment and Promotion of Women Members of the Academic Staff at Queen's University, as it was called, which has been at work for almost three years, submitted their report in the spring of 1978 and it was published on September 19 of this year. Copies can be obtained at the Senate Office, Room 225 in Richardson Hall or in the Office of Academic Planning, Room 227 in Ellis Hall.

Chaired first by Dr Kathleen Morand, head of the Department of Art and then by Dr Marie Surridge, acting head of the Departments of French Language and Literature, the committee members were Mike Abbott, Margarita Kluensch, Bev Baines, Jean Alexander, Dougall Campbell and research secretary Ida Smith.

The committee opened its report by noting the problem posed by numbers; most faculties had too few women to allow for the comparison of the patterns of appointment and promotion of men and women. In fact, in 1976-77, there were no women on faculty in Applied Science or in the School of Business and extremely small numbers in Medicine and Law, so these areas could not be studied. Indeed, the percentage of women professors noted in 1972, 7.7%, had increased to only 11% in 1976-77. It is interesting to observe that almost fifty percent of Queen's students are female.

In an interview with the Queen's Journal, Dr. Surridge was asked whether she was disturbed by the fact that Queen's has one of the lowest percentages of female faculty in Canada.

MS: I certainly think it's something that Queen's should try to do something about and I'm sorry it's such a bad time to try, because we are appointing so few people.

The government is constraining universities to the limit financially, and this is having a particularly bad effect on the appointment of women faculty; there would be a higher proportion of women hired if there were more people appointed.

QJ: Why do you think it's important to have a larger number of women on faculty?

MS: Well, first, the obvious reason is that women students should have role models and in some cases they have hardly any, and second, we're asking women to play a more prominent part in the work of the university so that people become aware that they have abilities...but there are too few women at present and you tend to find that they are overworked.

QJ: Do you think that the people involved in the process of appointment; the department heads, the deans and the Principal are all committed to increasing the number of qualified women at Queen's?

MS: No, I don't think that they are all committed. I think the Principal has demonstrated his commitment by asking for this report, and by asking department heads, when they don't appoint a woman, whether or not there were women candidates and in what respect they were not considered suitable. I think the extent to which the deans and department heads are committed varies. It is perfectly clear that some people are trying, and in other cases, there is no evidence as to whether they are trying or not.

To establish salary and appointment patterns for men and women in the Faculties of Arts and Science, and Education, the committee undertook both a general statistical review and a peer-pairing study. Dr. Surridge was asked how salary related to the terms of reference of the committee.

MS: We dealt with appointment and promotion patterns, strictly speaking, but there's a footnote on page two to the effect that we were unable to exclude salary because it tells you something about where the individual stands within the rank.

The peer-pairing process required that a participating woman fill out a detailed questionnaire about her professional background and name a male peer, who to the best of her knowledge had a similar background. The deans of the appropriate faculty also named a peer for the woman. Almost all the male peers responded to the questionnaire they were asked to fill out.

The percentage of women professors noted in 1972

(7.7%) had increased to only 11% in 1976-77.

Almost 50% of Queen's students are female.

QJ: What happened if the woman paired herself with a different colleague than the dean did? (This tended to happen in the Faculty of Arts and Science where the pool of people was much larger than in Education.)

MS: What we did was to have a graph in which the woman's salary, rank and progress were recorded along with her male peers and we compared them. We handed the graphs around the committee, all anonymously, and if the committee decided that the difference was negligible, we put that graph aside, but if the graph was questioned (i.e. the discrepancy was large), we would ask the woman's permission to show her specific information (actual date she obtained doctorate etc.) to the committee, still anonymously of course.

QJ: If you did find an individual case where after close study, the discrepancy between the woman and her peer seemed large, in terms of rank and salary, what did you do?

MS: We wrote a letter to the Principal, drawing his attention to a very small number of cases and we asked that those cases be examined. We did not ask for action, not because we did not think that there should not be any necessarily, but because we felt that that fitted within our terms of reference from the Principal.

QJ: What were the findings with regard to salary patterns?

MS: We found that the salary discrepancy that the Good committee found had been eliminated, that is, it could no longer be demonstrated that women were earning less salary as a group.

This is the first time that a committee has done a peer-pairing study at Queen's although the administration has adopted a peer-pairing system since the Good report (Note: in the spring of 1974, increases were allotted in order to minimize salary differentials and the sum of $12,900 over and above the amount normally set aside for salary increases was added to women's salaries. Peer-pairing was done in the person responsible for any appointment at or above the rank of lecturer.

3) At least one woman faculty member be appointed to all committees appointed by the Principal or by a dean or a department head to advise them concerning appointments or promotions.

4) Appointment and search committees be encouraged to solicit applications actively from well-qualified women academics, especially in subject areas in which Queen's has few or no women faculty members.

5) The formula "candidates of both sexes are equally encouraged to apply" be added when university positions are advertised.

6) The university exert its influence to ensure that as far as possible women faculty members are represented on all internal, provincial and national bodies responsible for developing and funding academic activities.

7) All faculties and schools establish and publicize their procedures concerning levels of appointment and criteria and standards for promotion.

8) The Principal appoint a new committee in approximately five years time to examine the progress made toward resolving the problem areas.

9) Records be maintained as one of the responsibilities of the Principal's Advisory Review Committee on the Status of Women at Queen's and in such a form that comparisons may be readily made between the state of affairs now in existence as recorded in this report and five years hence.

Dr. Marie Surridge, chairperson of the Committee of Appointment and Promotion of Women Members of the Academic Staff at Queen's University.

QJ: Is there a possibility that this report will be shelved and its recommendations not acted upon?

MS: It is likely to be discussed, at faculty meetings and at the Senate, and if student members show their interest by participating—that's important.

It's not likely to arouse a great deal of discussion because so far, I don't think it's particularly controversial. I think most people feel that these recommendations are reasonable and therefore, won't oppose them.

QJ: Do you feel any sense of personal satisfaction having been involved in this report?

MS: Yes. There was a lot of hard work involved here and I feel satisfied that we have established demonstrable facts and that these are the best basis on which to argue.

Actors triumph over weak script

by Julian Cunningham

In itself, 1837: The Farmer's Revolt is not a great play. So when you see the show at Convocation Hall, give some praise to six young actors who made it seem great in a shining debut last Friday night.

Apart from some fine performances, Friday night's success was due in large to the work of two men: technical director Paul Ord, whose lighting design created a visual feast; and director-set designer Gord McCall, who took a problem-laden script and turned it into a formidable piece of stagecraft.

Rick Salutin's script, developed with the help of Theatre Passe Muraille, attempts, in mosaic form, to recount the story of the 1837 rebellion in Upper Canada with a particular focus on the farmers who rallied behind William Lyon Mackenzie in a pathetic effort to overthrow an oppressive colonial government.

The first act flies through a series of vignettes designed to provide an overview of Canadian society just prior to the uprising. It is dominated by comedy. And in the Queen's Drama production, the comedy was dominated by Robb Patterson.

He had the audience rolling in laughter with his irrepressible energy and comic sense. His "Family Compact" lecture was worth the price of admission, and this was matched only by his entrance as Lady Backwash, in a bonnet, tiny frame spectacles, protruding teeth and an air of British stuffiness that earned a loud ovation, his second of the night.

Unfortunately, Patterson's energy was not the ticket to success in the second act, which was unduly distant both in character and pace from the first.

The tone set in the first act was so light that it almost precluded the possibility of a serious moment, of which there were plenty later on. Very few came off, partly because of bad writing, partly because the cast could not escape, to a large extent, the overacting that had won them so much praise in the early going.

It was as though Salutin had written two plays in polar opposition to each other. The first, a rollicking high-speed farce, and the second, a gloomy, lethargic vehicle for melodrama and self-indulgent speeches of a morbidly prophetic kind.

The pace of the second half was continually staggered by scene changes and blackouts, causing audience members to get slightly restless.

The inherent imbalance of the script was happily overcome, at times, by some genuinely riveting drama. The actual battle sequence and the defeat of the rebels was electrifying and disturbing, a tribute both to the theatrical and technical prowess of the company.

Derek Sewell shone in the second act, quietly grasping the torch of dramatic inspiration carried so boisterously by Robb Patterson in the beginning. While he may not have looked sixty-seven years old as Colonel Anthony Van Egmond, Sewell brought gripping life to the character of the indomitable old warhorse, retaining complete control over the part at all times. Quite simply, he was the best actor onstage Friday night.

Andree McNamara, a transfer student from Bishop's, filled the production with her consistency and strong presence. The ringing clarity of her voice, and her irresistible charm lent a relaxed assuredness to the show.

The case was an interdependent unit. Every athletic sequence was carefully choreographed to clean, fluid perfection. The lighting crew executed over 75 cues confidently, often creating spectacular splashes of colour and contrast.

The appeal of 1837: The Farmer's Revolt should encompass almost anyone who has the slightest interest in drama, history, choreography plus any of a dozen other areas. Indeed, it is an universal attraction.

Rick Salutin will be in attendance at tonight's performance. I hope he will personally thank the cast and crew of the Queen's production, who have challenged and conquered his curious play with such stunning vitality.

1837: The Farmer's Revolt runs tonight through Saturday inclusive in Convocation Hall (Theology Building). Curtain time is 8:30 p.m., $3.00 non-students, and $1.50 for students. Reservations and info: Queen's Drama Dept (547-6291).

Program music of Essig

by Colin Hunt

Yes folks, it's true; Bitter Grounds is alive and well this year, or would be if it could draw audiences like the one for David Essig last Saturday night. Essig appears to have come a long way in the music business, and he now masters a much greater variety of material than his earlier albums such as "Redbird Country Show," demonstrated. He began the evening with his older, more raucous and bluesy songs such as "Wildwood Flower" written decades ago by the Carter Family, "Mississippi" John Hurt's version of "Candyman", and Elmore James' bluesy tune "Tell Me Who".

The pattern of the second set was one of a slow decrease in tempo. Departing from the Delta Blues of the first set, Essig started with an excellent classical instrumental, passed on to a number of mandolin pieces and closed with the twelve string guitar. Most of these pieces were purely instrumental, and his closing piece was the epitome of the instrumental genre; a sample of program music. Program music, for the enlightened, originated in the last century where the performers attempted to convey specific visual images through music alone. Essig's composition "Sunrise" was a brilliant success in this regard in portraying a musical version of dawn as well as the confused emotions of lovers on the morning after. The only piece not composed by Essig in "Sunrise" was the denouement, which was an excerpt from Bach. So successful was this closing piece that Essig was called back, and his encore was an instrumental lullaby.

Essig stated after the show that he was very pleased that his more classical instrumentals had been so well received. They represent a new direction in his compositions and are highly prevalent on his latest album Sequence which has only two vocal pieces. Essig mentioned that the music he tinkers with in private are things like "Sunrise" rather than his older Delta Blues. New direction or not though, it has the distinctive brand of Essig with powerful, slashing chords and the impeccable fingering of the true craftsman.

The guest set was performed by Maria D'Amelio with the occasional assistance of Brenda Lee. The bulk of her set were selections from popular performers such as Stevie Wonder, Gladys Knight and the Bee Gees. Her contribution to songs such as "Sunshine of My Life" came in the form of a rich, sultry alto voice and a slower tempo, lending a more romantic atmosphere to these former radio hits. It was unfortunate that Maria did not have more of her own compositions to present, as one, "Too Easily" best suited her style. Brenda's contribution to the set was the delicate fingering of the classical guitar, particularly effective in the closing piece, Billy Joel's "Piano Man".

Artistic experiment successful

by Fiona Grieve

One moment we walked through the streets of a bazaar in the far East, the next we were in a heavy rainstorm in the bush. Such were the images Nexus managed to create in their improvisation Saturday night. Clocks, a month-old baby, a jungle and a clear stream of water all appeared in their turn. I would have been quite happy to listen to them all night. Each musician was surrounded by an amazing display of instruments: chimes, gongs, drums, xylophones, juice cans, maracas and bells. These instruments spoke to each other with an amazing variety of voices, the over-all effect held the audience's interest for a full half hour.

In Mbira, which followed, Kyra Lober danced to Nexus' accompaniment. This was not quite so successful. Ms. Lober spun round and round throughout the whole number, and, although her dress of many colours and sparkles added some variety to her twirling, this was just too limiting to have interest for the whole piece. Perhaps more changes in speed would have helped.

She redeemed herself later on in the programme, however doing a visual accompaniment to Birney's "Spruce Tree" which was a delight to the eyes.

It is unusual for a poet known for the musical and rhythmic qualities of his verse to allow a group of musicians to play as background to his readings. It turned out to be very effective, however. Of particular note were "Winter Saturday" — a vivid picture of winter on the prairies and "Sestina for the ladies of Tehuantepec" — a play on the words of a South American guidebook. Birney's "trawna tuh bellvul", "lusson" and "The Bullfrog" were read without accompaniment, but were also favorites.

It is too seldom we have such interesting arts' experiments' here at Queen's. This one was most successful and drew a very mixed crowd from stock-brokers, through professors, through the artists of the Arts students. Congratulations Performing Arts Centre. Let's have more of the same.

Nexus: the art of percussion.

Ferguson Concert

by Staff

Maynard Ferguson trumpeter, valve trombonist, instrument designer, reader and composer is to give a concert in Jock Hart on Monday November 20th.

If the record sales are indicative of an artist's popularity then Maynard Ferguson's "Conquistador" has propelled him into the seventies with a power. It features two cuts already being played in the disco's. "Star Trek" and the theme music from the hit movie Rocky, "Gonna Fly Now".

Ferguson is a man with wide audience appeal and his career has spanned three decades. He played with the Stan Kenton Band way back in the 50's and has never looked back. Recently he has teamed up with Jay Chattaway whom Maynard considers one of the "most creative people to work with as a composer". Although his music is changing Maynard Ferguson fans do not have to worry that he will forget his past. Ferguson has that unique ability to progress while maintaining his audience appeal. His current success can be largely credited to the youthful audiences of the seventies. But he is still highly regarded by those who remember him from the early days of big band jazz.

It will be interesting to see how he combines classical jazz with the more upbeat tempo of his newest tunes.

Art through mime

by Peggy Walker

The Market Gallery presented an interesting display of mime in their shop windows on Saturday November 11th.

Raymond Cosgrove, an actor, and Peter Ayton, a dancer, both from Studio 6 were the participants. It was an unusual form of mime in the sense that there was little actual movement involved. Working with various backdrop prints, the artists used appropriate props in an attempt to relate to that print through movement, pose and feeling. For example, Peter Ayton chose a print by Bob Sanders called "Through an open window" which consisted of a view through a window slightly obscured by a vase containing a single rose. As props, he used white makeup totally covering his face, darkened his lips and held a rose to complement the backdrop print. The mime consisted of twenty minute sets in the windows throughout the day.

Studio 6 located at 6 Princess Street, has been formed under the initiative of Cosgrove and Ayton. The idea behind the studio itself is to provide a space for creators in diverse fields from musicians and dancers to actual artists. Here they can meet, discuss ideas and work together. It is also a place in which one can become involved in a new interest by participating in some of the many classes offered by Studio 6.

Body workshops, concentrating on movement and body graphics in order to become aware of your own body, are held in the mornings at 8:30 and 10:30 from Tuesday to Friday and also in the evening at 6:30 from Tuesday to Thursday for approximately one and a half hours. Drawing classes are held on Thursday evenings.

The idea behind Studio 6 is to be a multi-purpose and multi-dimensional workshop. The input of ideas and energy will animate the many art activities, so if at all interested, you are encouraged to drop into the studio.

A film entitled Stanley William Hayter: The Artist as Teacher, will be shown at the Art Centre free of charge on November 16th at 12:30 p.m. and 7:30 p.m.

George Ball: "Clairiere dans la foret."

Hayter featured at Agnes

by Peggy Walker

The Agnes Etherington Art Centre has organized an exhibition as a tribute to Stanley William Hayter and his famous printmaking studio in Paris, the Atelier 17. The 24 prints were acquired by Jennifer Dickson and her husband, Ronald Sweetman, while she herself was studying in the studio between 1961-1965.

Since the beginning of the studio, just over fifty years ago, many different ideologies have affected the artists and their teacher, from the non-figurative work at the Ecole de Paris to the Gestalt psychology and the writing of Jung on the unconscious which made a significant impact on the types of imagery created.

At a Brown Bag Lunch on November 9th, Jennifer Dickson provided valuable personal insights into the operation of Atelier 17, about Hayter as a teacher and about her fellow students whose work is also represented in this exhibition such as that of George Ball in "Clairiere dans la foret" an engraving of 1960. Hayter encouraged freedom and experimentation and the exchange of ideas between artists. He also emphasized the value of the print as the direct medium and not just as a reproductive technique. Ms. Dickson noted that "some of the ideas Hayter gave me took me years to digest. He particularly disliked those artists that became shadows of him." Not all of them did as illustrated in the works of Marc

Gaels X-terminate X-men

by Don MacKinnon

It was a satisfying weekend excursion to Halifax for the members of the Queen's Golden Gaels and the 175 supporters who followed them from Kingston. The Gaels relatively easy 32 to 10 victory over the St. Francis Xavier X-Men, in last Sunday's Atlantic Bowl, advance Queen's to this Saturday's College Bowl in Toronto for the first time since 1968.

The X-Men were outplayed by a more experienced, more talented, and better prepared football team. In defensive Captain Jim D'Andrea's words, "We weren't cocky, just very confident."

The X-Men aggressive, blitzing defense, all year long the backbone of their team, were completely neutralized by the Gaels well-oiled offensive machine. Jim Rutka, perhaps Canadian College football's finest quarterback, directed the offense to four touchdowns, one more than the X-Men had given up during the season. His efforts earned him the Don Loney Trophy, as the game's most valuable player. He threw an 18 yard touchdown pass to Bob O'Doherty, and a seven yard strike to Rob Miller. Although by game's end his passing total had slipped to 13 for 22, it was in the first half that he did most of the damage.

Of his 14 passes, he was good on ten, for a whopping 219 yard total. The Gaels' field general was outguessing the X-Men's defense. "I was reading their blitzes and the line did a good job of protecting me", Rutka explained after the game. Coach Hargreaves underlined the point by commenting that, "If you don't get to the quarterback on a blitz, that puts a lot of pressure on the deep backs".

With the Gaels' excellent corps of receivers working themselves into the open, the watertight X-Men defense suddenly started springing leaks. By early in the third quarter, it had become a flood.

The Gaels ended the game with 451 yards of total offense, while grudgingly giving up only 171 yards Defensive Captain D'Andrea, justifiably proud of the way the defense played, gave the credit to the defensive coach. "The reason we have the best defensive team in the country is John Thompson".

Queen's received an early scare, but rebounded well. Tom McCartney, unwilling to spot the X-Men an early single, tried to run Mike Sheasgreen's wind assisted 55 yard punt out of the end zone. He was hit hard at the one, fumbled the ball, and the X-Men pounced on it for a major score. The time was only 3:23, and things looked bleak for the Gaels.

"Deep down inside we thought we'd come back," said the author of the Gaels comeback, Jim Rutka. Midway through the quarter, the offense marched the length of the field with Tom McCartney going in from the two.

Blaine Shore's saving tackle on the ensuing kickoff, was all that prevented Marty Leggin from going all the way. The X-Men however were in good position for a field goal, which they kicked at 13:54 of the first quarter.

Two plays later, Manasterky, with the help of a beautiful block by Rob Miller, went 74 yards on a pass and run, to the X-Men's one. On the next play, to the first of the second quarter, Marinucci crashed into the end zone. After missing the first convert, Shore put this one through the uprights. The Gaels had gone ahead to stay, 13 to 10.

A single off a wide field goal looked for a while like all the rest of the scoring that the Gaels would do, until the defense forced a fumble with only 1:08 to play in the half. The offense made the turnover pay off, by driving downfield for a major score. With only twenty seconds to play, Rutka floated a pass deep into the endzone, where O'Doherty outguffed the defender for an 18 yard touchdown. The successful convert made the score 21 to 10 at the half.

"It took us longer than we expected before we contained their offense", John Thompson quipped after the game. In the first half Blaine Shore field goal. Shore's three pointer, coupled with a Tim Wardrop punt single earlier in the quarter, rounded out the scoring. Last year's loss to Acadia had been avenged.

There were few in Huskie Stadium Sunday who at game's end would have argued that the Gaels came from the weakest division in Canada.

B-ball Gaels improving, drop tight battle to RMC

by Ron Jamula

The RMC Redmen pulled away in the final six minutes last Wednesday night to defeat Queen's Golden Basketball Gaels, 67-57, before a packed house of Redmen supporters in the Barlett Gym. The Redmen, now 2-2 on the year, showed poise and experience gaining the victory over a young, aggressive Queen's squad.

The game started slowly with both teams committing numerous turnovers in the opening minutes. The Redmen finally caught fire with outstanding outside shooting by guard Randy Russell and opened up a 26-14 lead with nine minutes remaining in the first half. Queen's, trying to speed the tempo up, employed a full court, man to man press and succeeded in cutting the RMC lead to 31-25 with 3:02 remaining. The teams traded hoops the remainder of the half and the Gaels went into the dressing room trailing 35-27.

The second half started with a bang as a rejuvenated Gaels squad scored ten of the first fourteen points to cut the RMC lead to 39-37. Lead by the inside shooting of freshman Rick Varsava and centre Phil Moore, Queen's took its only lead of the game 50-49 with 6:00 minutes remaining in play. Inexperience now took its toll on the Gaels as the fresh-by Susan Creighton and Sue Reynolds of Orlando's goal proved to be too much for her to handle, as she victoriously this weekend as they chalked up a 4-0 win against the Guelph Gryphons.

"Pygmy Gardens", noted for its small ice surface, tended to cramp Queen's passing and skating skills. This, however, did not stop them from outplaying the Guelph squad. Janean Sergeant dazzled several Gryphons as she skated past them for Queen's first goal, a minute into the game. After a short lull, Cathy Eberts snapped a shot into the top corner of the net. Keeping up the pace, Kim Ferguson totally outmanoeuvred the Guelph goaltender, adding another point to Queen's side. Karen Orlando tipped in the final goal on a pass from Ferguson. (The excitement men guards were guilty of forcing the ball inside. The Redmen took advantage of this and seized control of the game. A 20 foot jump shot by Nick Garito with 3:32 remaining brought the Cadet fans to their feet as RMC opened up a five point lead. Queen's could not overcome the tough Redmen zone defence and trailed 61-52 with one minute remaining.

The Gaels' coach Tom Frood was optimistic despite the loss. "We played a good ball club and remained close throughout without two of our starters. Our lack of experience really showed, but generally I think we've improved every game."

Nick Garito was outstanding for RMC scoring 22 points all from the 20 foot area. Queen's was led by 6'1" forward Rick Varsava who scored a game high 26 points. Phil Moore chipped in 13 points for the Gaels.

Rugby Gaels triumphant!

FIRST XV

by Don Cameron

Last Saturday the 1st XV Rugby Gaels accomplished the goal they had set for themselves two months ago in early September—the OUA Rugby championship was theirs. Queen's squeaked by Guelph 16-15 in a see-saw game to win the league title ending a seven year dry spell.

Guelph came out looking much

stronger than they had in the previous week's game. The Gryphons scored early in the game on a penalty field goal following it shortly afterwards with a drop goal by flyhalf Andrew Parkinson. John Reid, shouldering the kicking for Queen's, put the Gaels on the scoreboard connecting on a penalty field goal. Possession of the ball changed frequently turning the game into a slow defensive battle.

Coach Gavin Reid all smiles.

Twenty yards out from the Gryphon's goalposts Queen's prop forward Rob Bruce threw a long line-out pass to wing forward Jim Stone. Stone broke through the Guelph back line to run for a try that can only be described as spectacular. Reid converted to give the Gaels a 9-6 lead. The Gaels, relying on their lead, let up momentarily allowing Guelph to penetrate deep in their end. A dangerous play call against Queen's resulted in a penalty field goal being kicked by Guelph. This penalty tied up the score at 9-9 for the half.

The Gaels came out flat in the first part of the second half giving Guelph fly half Andrew Parkinson room to drop kick the ball. The Gryphons threatened but a strong defensive surge by Queen's thwarted all of Guelph's efforts to score. A good 'hook' in the scrum resulted in Gaels' scrum half Larry Cook picking up the ball and running towards the Gryphon's try line. After an awe-inspiring run Cook made a neat pass to John Reid who dove over for the try, restoring the lead to Queen's: 13-12. It should be noted here that Larry played an excellent game, feeding the ball well to the backs as well as making several key tackles. Queen's continued to contain Guelph and increased their lead to 16-12 on a penalty kick by Reid.

In the dying moments of the game Guelph made a last ditch attempt to score. A penalty field goal from the Gryphon's fullback brought Guelph within 1 point of the Gaels. The Gaels held out and when the whistle blew the title was theirs.

SECOND XV

The Queen's 2nd XV Rugby Gaels capped their perfect 8-0 season Saturday afternoon in their championship victory over the Western Mustangs. The score of 25-7 was in keeping with the team's regular season play. The Queen's 2nd XV Gaels were undoubtedly a cut above all the other teams in the league.

Queen's started off the game on a high note scoring from a loose play by eighth man Kevin Wilson. The Gaels' back row (Kevin Wilson, Tim Price, Peter McQuaig) effectively cut off the Mustang's back play giving them few chances to run. Jim Gray intercepted the ball from the Western line and dashed seventy yards for a Queen's try, leaving the Mustangs eating his dust. Peter Reid collected another four play points shortly after bursting through the Mustang pack on a powerful end run.

Richard Vaughn, playing an admirable game at center, added insult to injury by scoring a fourth try, giving Queen's an 18-3 lead. Dennis Johnston, as well as kicking a penalty kick, scampered past the Mustangs for the Gaels' final try. The only scores for Western were a penalty field goal and a last second try. Coach Gavin Reid must be congratulated for the fine job he did this year for the Gaels. It is certain that without his coaching support, and organizing efforts the team would not have done nearly as well as they did. Gavin will be away on sabbatical next year and his presence will be sorely missed.

Seconds' scrum half Andy Boright flicks ball up to waiting teammates Johnston, Price and Vaughn.

Queen's at sloop championships

by Clayton Jaeger

Three members of the Queen's Sailing Team, representing not only Queen's but also the Canadian district of the Intercollegiate Yacht Racing Association (ICYRA), participated in the North American Sloop Championships (3-man) hosted by the United States Naval Academy in Annapolis, Maryland, two weekends ago. Led by former all-American intercollegiate sailor Terry

McLaughlin acting as helmsman, with his crew of Tony Snell and Steve Fleckenstein, the team finished a very respectable fourth place in the hotly contested eight boat fleet. The eight schools in the regatta each represented one of the districts of the ICYRA, which in turn represents approximately 200 schools across North America.

The regatta consisted of eight races allowing each team to sail the eight 24' Rainbow class sloops once, ensuring absolute equality in the series. Two races were held on each of Friday and Sunday in winds never exceeding 10 knots, and four races in a fresh 10-18 knot breeze were run on Saturday. The Queen's team pulled into fourth place in the standings on the last upwind leg of the last race where they finally managed to shoot the correct corner, passing six boats and winning the short race by over two hundred yards.

The Championship was captured by the University of Texas team sailing a near flawless series. Second place went to the defending champions, the Naval Academy, and third to University of Rhode Island.

The Queen's team has proved themselves number one in Canada sweeping back to back doublehanded and triplehanded Canadian Championships last month. With the aid of last weekend's results, the team will probably regain its ranking in the top ten of North America, which it has held for the most part of the last four years.

Upcoming regattas are the 32nd Annual Timme Angsten Regatta, Nov. 24-26 in Belmont Harbour Chicago and hopefully the Windjammer Regatta hosted by Tulane University in New Orleans, February 24-25 of next year.

WIC NEWS

by Cathy Lawrence

"Smorgasborg" is the name of the winning team that was undefeated last Saturday at the WIC co-ed volleyball tournament. Team members were: John McFarlane, Bruce McFarlane, Kim Carlton, Donna Gallagher, Ginny Crozier, Linda Morin, Jane Skirid and Martin Blaser. Engineering emerged victorious in the WIC indoor softball. Commerce placed a close second. Thanks for the enthusiasm that made the indoor softball comeback a great success. PhysEd is leading the WIC broomball league with Nursing, Arts 82, and Glengary tied for second. Cheryl Farnsworth and Sue Sangster showed terrific form Tuesday night as they led their team to victory, netting two goals apiece.

If you are interested in playing WIC ice hockey, next term, sign up on the bulletin board in the change room. To avoid any defaulting a minimum of ten names per team must be submitted.

Picket marks OFS strategy change

Few will argue with the assertion that when a desired end cannot be realized through the means presently employed, then those means must be changed. This would appear to reflect what executive members of the Ontario Federation of Students are thinking. The Mass Informational Picket Line scheduled for this Thursday represents a change in not only the tactics utilized by the OFS, but the direction in which these tactics are focused.

For the last two years the OFS has attempted to consult with Ontario Cabinet ministers and even to confront the government with mass demonstrations against cutbacks. Regrettably, these means did not enjoy much success—the Provincial Government remained firm in its conviction to balance the budget by 1980—largely through cutbacks to the social service sector.

Now the OFS has adopted a new approach, one that hopefully will neither alienate the general populace nor leave them with the belief that students are a selfish lot, unprepared to accept what all other groups in society must.

The informational picket line is an attempt to inform the public that students are not an interest group concerned only with obtaining more of the "economic pie" for itself. Rather the point is to emphasize that the entire pie is too small.

Moreover, the picket will focus on cutbacks in a more general fashion, that is, it will deal with their effect on the entire social service sector rather than on post-secondary education by itself. Indeed, the OFS is acting as more than an interest group pushing for incremental change. They are suggesting that the financial arrangements made by the Ontario Government are ineffectual in dealing with the problems facing all sectors of society.

The informational picket is a fresh approach to an old problem, mainly because confrontation and consultation have not succeeded in forcing the government to change its policy.

When the buses leave for Queen's Park on Thursday morning Queen's students should be aboard. An informed voice of opposition is more convincing than one that waves placards.

Veni, vidi, vici

by Warren Everson, Eric Evans and Don MacKinnon

Over 7,000 Queen's football fans invaded Toronto on some 30 buses for a College Bowl weekend they won't soon forget.

Neither will the British Columbia Thunderbirds.

Neither will Toronto.

Neither will the bar owners.

It was ten years ago when Queen's last went to the College Bowl and those who made the trip had a lot of rowdiness saved up for the anniversary event.

"I'm going to help take down the goalposts," said one third year Arts student. "I mean, I'm going to have a good weekend and watch the game and all that, but I'm damn well going to get those posts."

In a remarkable display of restraint, the mass of spectators on the sidelines waited until only 18 seconds remained in the game before charging on the field and ripping the goalposts apart.

The remainder of the 19,000 still in the stands were then treated with the sight of what must surely have been the largest Oil Thigh in recent memory.

The game itself, however was only part of the weekend's festivities.

Friday night, about 2,000 gathered in Nathan Philips Square to chant, cheer and generally create a public nuisance. Said one fourth year Politics major, "My friends tell me I was there. Could be I do remember going skating on the rink there, and it's a good thing I didn't fall or I might have drowned."

In spite of the exuberance of the fans, police reported few serious incidents throughout the weekend. One veteran cop, a College Bowl regular, said it was the most enjoyable game he had attended on both a personal and an official level.

Many students stayed at some of Toronto's posher hotels - sometimes with ten or fifteen in a room. One group of students was overheard to say "The manager just came into the room and said 'Okay boys, clean up the room and out you go. But it was O-K, we came back later and talked our way back in. There were no hard feelings either way.'"

Toronto drinking establishments looked on the invasion with mixed feelings. While business was certainly booming the scenes were hectic. The manager of the Nickleodeon, standing amongst the cheering students, broken glass and furniture bellowed, "We're just not used to this kind of thing here. It's insane! But business is good."

Although the weekend was not marred by any major problems, a few close calls could have resulted in serious injury.

Strip shows in the gusty wind on top of the concrete arches of Nathan Philips Square could have sent the exhibitionists to the hospital had they fallen to the rink below. Later at the stadium the foolish trick of shoving fans while they performed Oil Thighs resulted in a few minor injuries.

Post game celebrations were not limited to the fans. The team, which has been in training since mid-August took advantage of the long season's end to celebrate with abandon. A smiling Jim D'Andrea said after the game, "A month ago, Dave Marinucci and I pledged we'd shave off half our moustaches if we won the College Bowl."

Also losing half their facial hair were Jim Muller, Dick Bakker, Ed Andrew and Francis Sheridan.

Jim Rutka's Meds class paid for a ticket to fly his fiancée Mari up from Princeton for the game. She suffered in silence as a fan behind her kept shouting, "Kill Rutka, get his knee!"

"I really want to thank Jim's class," she said. Rutka himself was playing his first home game in Toronto since his High School final in which his team lost by one point. "I had a score to settle with Toronto," he said.

A happy Doug Hargreaves commented after the game on the phenomenon that had all of Toronto talking. "What fantastic fan support, that had to give us a lift." Amen Doug.

UNIVERSITY OF OTTAWA MBA- MHA

The Faculty of Administration at the University of Ottawa offers graduate programs in Business Administration and Health Administration.

These Masters programs are open to qualified candidates who have a baccalaureate degree, or others who have significant relevant administrative experience.

Our graduates are versatile and flexible because these programs prepare students for management functions in both the public and private sectors. In an era where managers and administrators often move from one sector to another, the University presents its MBA and MHA students with the opportunity to acquire multi-sectoral interdisciplinary knowledge and skills within flexible, but demanding programs offered by a faculty of scholars and professionals, the majority of whom teaches in both official languages.

Complete applications for the September 1979 trimester must be received by:

Christie elected Rector, vows to get the job done

by Warren Everson

Hugh Christie, former AMS President, was elected Rector of Queen's with a convincing victory over challenger Paul Tinari last Wednesday and Thursday. Christie captured 1608 votes to Tinari's 692, thus becoming the fifth student to hold the position.

"I'm very pleased with the result, and rather than seeing the election as an end in itself, I see it as a chance to settle down to three years of getting the job done," Christie said.

"My number one concern will be to make sure the rector doesn't just pull back into his office and disappear, so I'm looking at ways to stay more approachable."

2,391 students voted in the election. Ten votes went to Terry "Veg" Reynolds, who had withdrawn from the race, and five ballots were spoiled.

Christie said Sunday that he was planning weekly meetings in which

Christie will be "approachable" McBey students with matters to discuss could sit down to lunch with him in the McLaughlin Room, however the details are not yet arranged.

"Unpegged" fee hike

by John Baktis

An "unpegging" of tuition fees by the Ontario government could result in exorbitant fee increases according to an Ontario Federation of Students (OFS) press release.

The "unpegging" of tuition fees will afford universities across the province the autonomy to set their own rates without penalty to their operating costs, said OFS Vice-Chairman Colin D'Eca.

The current way of setting tuition fees is uniform across the province. The government controls the fees indirectly, according to Vice-Principal Courtwright. The government issues grants to the universities and the students must compensate for the rest of the operating budget through tuition fees.

At the present, D'Eca added, for every dollar the university charges over that set fee, they are penalized a dollar from their operating budget.

"By 'unpegging' fees, then this penalty is removed for up to 25% of the cost of operation," he said.

"Therefore the student can be made to pay 25% of the cost of education without a penalty to the university's operating cost."

If students were required to pay 25% of the educational costs, the fees would be "sky-high." According to an OFS press release, the average U of T student would be paying $1157 a year - $400 more than any other institution in Canada.

"There's no real prevention of a university raising its fees, but who wants to be the first? Who's going to commit hari kari? No one wants to be in that awkward position," said Courtwright. "If various universities raise fees on their own, then it is not fair to students vis-a-vis the whole system."

Courtwright also added that if this increase was done unilaterally across the province, then it "will not disadvantage other students vis-a-vis the whole system."

"Any university can raise fees if they want, but who wants to be left out on a limb?" asked Courtwright.

Students from across the province picketed at Queen's Park

OFS protests underway

by Rob Southcott

Approximately 350 Ontario university students held a mass information picket at Queen's Park Thursday to protest predicted cut-backs by the Ontario government in the area of post-secondary education.

The picket, which included about 20 students bused in from Queen's, had been organized by the Ontario Federation of Students as a starting measure in their protest against new education budget announcements, which are scheduled for later this month.

Despite the fact that only 350 students were in attendance (as opposed to an estimated 7000 who were at last year's anti-cutback rally at Queen's Park), OFS Vice-Chairman Colin d'Eca was not disappointed with the turnout. "It wasn't a demonstration, so numbers don't count as much," stated d'Eca, who maintained that the action was meant to be a "pre-empture" to future OFS actions that will occur.

AMS President Dave Brown also felt that the success of the picket didn't depend solely on numbers, but he did admit to being rather doubtful about the atmosphere that surrounded the picket.

"I wonder whether people are just tired," said Brown, "and as one person said to me, 'well, this is the third demonstration here this week.' Brown also had doubts about the timing of the event joking that if the picket had been held two days later, Queen's alone could have had 6000 people there."

Despite any doubts about what happened, both d'Eca and Brown agreed that the picket did manage to have wide representation from universities and colleges across Ontario, managing to bus in people from a combined total of 20 institutions in the province.

Aldermen Discuss By-Law

by Elizabeth Dewart and Deb MacLeod

Interviews with some recently elected Kingston aldermen revealed that they felt some proposals for by-law changes affecting student housing were inadequate. These proposals would further limit the number of unrelated people permitted to live in one house in certain zones and restrict additions to existing structures.

Alderman John Clements of Ontario Ward sympathized with the proposals because they would relieve housing pressure on single families who cannot afford the high rents paid collectively by several students. Clements and Alderman Lois Miller of Sydenham Ward noted that some residential areas do not have the capacity to accommodate a high density population, traffic and parking.

Both emphasized that these proposals were only tentative and needed much work. Miller, who is personally opposed to the change, said that the tradition of student housing is a life style that should be respected.

However, both also recognized that the by-law would have to apply to all zones, and that the city couldn't discriminate in favour of the students. But if the proposed change are such that students are not exempted, student housing would become a problem.

Another proposed by-law change would restrict additions to existing structures in some downtown residential areas. Miller described some of these additions as "a cheap way of exploiting the student situation", where they need a conveniently located, cheap dwelling. Alderman Yuri Tarnowewsky of Victoria Ward said that in such cases where housing is substandard "it is incumbent on students to report it. We (the city) act on complaints. Otherwise we can't do anything".

Clements indicated that much of the pressure supporting the proposed changes comes from areas heavily populated by Queen's professors and staff.

Both Tarnowewsky and Clements suggested that the university should take some direct responsibility for the problem.

"It's not just a problem of City Council", said Tarnowewsky. Clements suggested that the "university zone" has not been taken full advantage of, that there could be more development for student housing in that area.

Live at the Quiet Pub

by Liz McClung

Last week, the McLaughlin Room hosted a series of live evening performances by students, and the opportunity to play will be open to anyone starting next term, according to Sheila Murray, Q.S.A. Director.

Murray said that last week's trial run went quite well. "The cost is minimal, and the students seemed to enjoy both the opportunity to play and to listen."

Despite one complaint about the noise, from the grad residence, Murray said that live entertainment will definitely be a feature of the McLaughlin Room.

"Next term we hope to see the entertainment set up on a more established basis, with a couple of nights a week set aside for it. There will be live entertainment as frequently as student demand warrants," she said.

$58,000. in repairs

Repair costs won't raise fees

by Mary Anne Tateishi

A series of major structural repairs on residences will not affect residence fees according to Gerald McGrath, Director of Residences. The roof of Morris Hall was just replaced at the cost of approximately $42,000, and this may be only the beginning in a cycle of residence repairs. The renovations, which were completed about three weeks ago, are part of the standard budgeted repair plan.

The life expectancy of a flat roof is twenty years, said McGrath, but the roofs are inspected on a regular basis so that the repairs may be delayed as long as safely possible. These costs do not have a direct effect on the price of residence because they are charged to the retained earnings account of the residence budget.

However, students may look forward to some inconvenience during a series of repairs. McGrath noted that the major building boom in residences occurred in the late fifties, so that "most of the residences are now coming into a period of major replacement".

The World in Brief

by Janet Brick

Toronto: Osgoode Hall voted down the option of becoming trial members of the Ontario Federation of Students. Reasons cited for the outcome of the vote range from the desire to retain an independent status to lack of interest in the OFS programs and the heavy turnout of first year students who are particularly not interested in OFS.

Kingston: Kingston voters returned Ken Keyes to the position of mayor of Sydenham Ward, where the majority of Queen's students live, elected Lois Miller (Incumbent) and Bill Knapp to the aldermanic seats.

Hollywood: Mickey Mouse, on the eve of his fiftieth birthday and the seventy-fifth anniversary of Hollywood, became the 1700th star to be placed on Hollywood's Boulevard Walk of Fame. He is the first cartoon character to be named a star.

Queen's Park: Last week, Stephen Lewis resigned from the Ontario Legislature after serving as an NDP member for Scarborough-West for fifteen years. His skilled oratory will be missed by his fellow M.P.'s.

Ottawa: The Ontario Federation of Labour joined the Canadian Labour Congress in their refusal to support the Canadian Union of Postal Workers defiance of the federal government's back-to-work order. The O.F.L. also criticized the federal government's intervention.

Rhodesia: Black majority rule has been postponed. Elections originally scheduled for December 31, 1978 will now be held on April 20, 1979. This date was chosen by the transitional bi-racial government.

Ottawa: Federal Finance Minister Jean Chretien introduced the long awaited budget on Thursday. Aimed at stimulating the Canadian economy by increasing the competitiveness of Canadian firms and building confidence abroad, it provided a 3 percent drop in manufacturing sales taxes, reduced unemployment insurance premiums, 25 percent credit to Canadian businesses engaged in research and development. Mr. Chretien predicts the results of his budget will be to create 250,000 jobs, a drop of half a percentage point in the price inflation rate and the G.N.P. will drop between 4 and 4½ percent. The main criticism of the budget is the extra $1 billion dollars it will contribute to the projected 1979-80 cash deficit.

Iran: Shah Mohammed Reza Pahlavi placed Iran under temporary military rule in an attempt to curb rampant terrorism and violence. He hopes to buy enough time to reconcile some of the more moderate factions within Iran and form a coalition government. Early indications are encouraging, as the crime rate has dropped.

Guyana: Congressman Leo Ryan and a T.V. team travelling with him were attacked and killed while investigating reports that members of The People's Temple, a Californian religious sect were being held captive in Guyana. An American has been arrested in connection with the crime.

AMS Surveys Bus-It

by Rob Southcott

Between 800 and 1000 Queen's students would be seriously affected by the cancellation of Bus-It (the transit arrangement between Queen's and the Kingston Public Utilities Commission), according to a recently-completed survey by the AMS on the use of the service.

The survey, conducted under the direction of AMS researcher Elinor Mahoney, was carried out aboard PUC buses on October 25 and 26, to ascertain approximately how many people would be cut off from bus service, should the AMS decide to cancel Bus-It, and which of the two routes currently offered is used more.

In addition to the findings about those who depend on Bus-It, the survey indicated that the orange route (Division St. and Calvin Park) was used twice as much as the blue route (Portsmouth), thus showing that if any changes are to occur when the AMS re-negotiates with the PUC, they might well include dropping the blue route.

One of the ideas that the AMS is now entertaining is simply to have a shuttle service between the west and main campuses, and to have special student bus passes available to students living elsewhere off-campus. The idea of shuttle service alone, though, which would cost about $50,000, about half of the what Bus-It currently costs, is appealing to AMS vice-president John Koopman, who says that "for half the costs, it (the shuttle) will service about 90% of students' transit needs".

Though the future plans of Bus-It remain uncertain at the moment, Koopman has said the price of any future arrangements must be kept below $100,000. Though he says the P.U.C. "is going to be hard-pressed to get something under $100,000," Koopman believes that students have been "taken to town" by the P.U.C., and that something about the current set-up of Bus-It is going to have to change.

Housing Study

by Liz McClung

This week, approximately 850 Queen's students (12.5 percent) who have been randomly selected by computer will receive housing surveys from the General Services department of Queen's.

According to D.K. Grace of the Services department, the survey is to analyze off-campus housing conditions.

"We realize that this is a busy time of year for students, but we would greatly appreciate it if the students would answer the questionnaire and return it as soon as possible." "The department would like to better the 50 percent return rate of previous years, and more accurately analyze the conditions of off-campus housing."

ComSoc starts biz game

by Kim Fennell

The Commerce Society, in conjunction with the Financial Post, is sponsoring an "Intercollegiate Business Competition" in an effort to improve relations between the business schools of Canada.

Nine schools are now in the preliminary round which consists of a business game and a case analysis. The participants will play this round by telephone and mail correspondence and will be graded by a panel of judges from Queen's.

The schools competing are Carleton, U of T, McGill, Bishops, Western, U of Calgary, Simon Fraser, Dalhousie and McMaster.

The top four teams will compete with Queen's in the final round which is scheduled for January 19 and 20 at the Donald Gordon Centre.

Geoff Arnoldi, chairman of the competition, said, "Publicity is one of the major benefits. It will be good for the School of Business and for Queen's in general. As well, we hope to create permanent ties with the Financial Post since the publication has such a wide effect on Canadian business."

The Financial Post will be contributing $2000.00 to the competition which is 80 percent of the total cost.

The final round will be played in three parts: a business game in which the participants run a "dummy" corporation, a corporation analysis based on a business policy case, and a business oriented debate.

Judges from outside the university will be used for the final round. Six will be from the Kingston community and another three will come from other parts of the country.

Bookstore prices low

by Michael Allen

Text-book prices at Queen's are as low as those students will find anywhere, said Engineering's Dr. Brown, Chairman of the Board of the Engineering Society's Campus Bookstore, at the Open Meeting of the Senate Bookstore Committee 2 weeks ago.

"They are all priced by the publisher at 20 percent below retail price and we further discount them by 5 percent before selling them to students," said Brown.

A number of questions were related to complaints with the trade book section and its lack of variety in quality literature. Brown made clear, however, that "while we recognise that there is a range of material in the 'we should read' category, there has never been a market for it, we only pick what we think will sell."

Some of those attending did not accept this explanation. Professor Barnes, Chairman of the Senate Committee, asked, "How do you know if certain material won't sell if you don't stock it in the first place?" Brown, though assured everyone that he had complete confidence in the ability of the two staff members responsible for trade books.

To the suggestion that the Bookstore open a trade books shop in the Deutsch Centre, Brown replied that they had done a market study which showed that the operation would not be profitable. They then offered, he said, to operate a store in the Centre on a cost-plus basis but that this was not acceptable to the Centre's management.

Asked why the Bookstore did not publish a financial statement, Brown replied that since it was a private company they did not have to, but that in the past when the Bookstore had published such a statement, "the reaction was a resounding silence."

Can students find all the books they need?

Third World Lessons

by Scott Haig

Canada not only has a significant contribution to make to the contemporary world, but also has much to learn from Third World countries, said Dr. Robert McClure, longtime medical missionary, and former Moderator of the United Church of Canada, in a speech Wednesday night.

"The central fact of our time is that the world has shrunk and is shrinking further," warned Dr. McClure, "and we must learn to adapt." While we might like to think that all the world is delighted to have such charming people as ourselves brought closer to them, McClure pointed out, such a view would be terribly naive.

Rising Expectations

"On the one hand, people in underdeveloped countries have experienced a revolution in rising expectations; they would like to be able to enjoy the kind of lifestyle they see in advertisements in our magazines, and are no longer satisfied with being poor. People in the Third World no longer say, 'It's my karma' or 'It's God's will' but rather, 'This does not have to be; God give me strength,' he said.

"On the other hand, our sheer proximity is a problem for the Third World person. When we say that one can go anywhere in the world nowadays in only 20 hours, the Third World man does not conjure up images of rapid aid for starving children, or quick relief for flood victims a mere 20 hours away; rather, he sees the spectre of military might poised to strike anywhere on the face of the globe in less than a day."

But we in Canada enjoy an enviable status internationally, claimed McClure, since no one is afraid that we will attack them. When we offer aid to a developing country, they know it comes with no military strings attached, and this makes whatever aid we give that much more valued and valuable.

Provide, don't sell

The speaker then outlined what sort of aid is wanted in underdeveloped countries. First, we need to give them food. Then we need to teach them to grow their own food. And thirdly, we need to teach them how to control their population so that it stays within their capacity to produce food. But they don't want to know how we grow wheat on the prairies, "because they ain't got no prairies, and they don't like wheat."

Rather, said McClure, we should be taking advantage of our Canadian intellectual heritage, our universities which have never been closed, our libraries which have never been burned, to find simple, usable technological solutions to the particular problems of underdeveloped countries. These people don't want us to sell them an outboard motor made in Peterborough, or a Massey Ferguson tractor (which submerges in a muddy rice paddy in 20 minutes); they want us to provide them with the technology, the knowledge they need to cope with the particular circumstances they live in.

Dr. McClure went on to show the capacity audience how we in Canada can learn from people in the Third World; the exchange of ideas is never a one way street. We in the West are just now encountering problems that were solved centuries ago in other cultures. "Why are we so arrogant that we cannot go to people who have lived in high density housing for 400 years, and ask what they have discovered?" McClure asked.

Key to happiness?

Other salutary facets of many cultures that Dr. McClure reported are their non-violence and non-covetousness. In one Asian society, every man, woman, and child carries a two-foot, razor-sharp machete, yet in the two years he lived with those people, Dr. McClure never once heard one man verbally abuse another, and he never had occasion to sew up a cut made in anger. And he never once heard of anything being stolen, even when left unattended for weeks.

This non-violence and non-covetousness, suggested Dr. McClure, is a key to happiness. "Witness the difference in marriage breakdown rates. In their society, only 1 marriage in 500 ends in failure; in Ontario, the rate is about one of every two. Despite severe poverty, these people are able to find a measure of happiness. They must be doing something right."

The State of the Arts

Translated from Laval University Newspaper

At Laval University, students of Fine Arts from the universities in Quebec that offer these courses gathered together to take stock of their situation as students and their future career as artists.

The discussions focused on five main themes, in particular that of university structures versus the teaching of art. On that score it was noted that there exists such a ponderousness and such a complexity in university structures that it is presently impossible for the student in Fine Arts to obtain an interdisciplinary training.

The results of this are that artists who leave universities are cut off from reality and clearly lack veracity.

Some go as far as to say that the university favours a type of hermetic and unmarketable creation. In this sense, the university fails in its role to train people to be capable of working in society, because it trains drop-outs.

In order to remedy this situation the students propose that the university offer artists the possibility of retraining, in the same way that it does for other professions.

On the theme of art schools and the student's aspirations, some see the art program offered at the university as a personal education to which they do not wish to see tied the notion of an occupation. For others, it is the opposite.

They would like to see the courses focused basically on techniques of creation. They are sorry not to be able to work out each subject in depth. Certain students propose replacing the existing degree with an open degree where the student would have the liberty to choose his courses.

Concerning the type of professor looked for, some would like to see teaching specialists, and some want artists.

Several suggestions resulted from the conference. It was recommended that a permanent contact be kept up between the universities and the each year a meeting be organized including a itinerant showing of student work aimed at making the society aware of the evolution of the sector of activity.

A proposition was put forward to create at the program level, student committees to evaluate annually the programs offered in the different universities and, if the case arise, change their orientation.

What is more, they hope to see developed a certain versatility in student's part. They are considering multiplying efforts to reach a better diffusion of "culture" by organizations such as Cultural Affairs and the ministry of Education. Finally, the University is being asked to start retraining programs for those who desire them and to plan a budget to research in the field of Arts.

Suture Shock a sexual shocker

The Editor:
I am constantly amazed at the achievements of the medical students in the area of academics, sports, and culture. I and many others have great respect for the high standards in the Faculty of Medicine.
All Med students have superior academic achievement, but many are superb athletes, musicians, etc. as well. This impression was strengthened as I watched the Medical Variety Night. I thought of the many talents found in the faculties of medicine, rehab. and nursing.

However, the use they made of their talents appalled me. I lost sleep over the horrible emphasis of Suture Shock. It bothered me to see our finest students enslaved to sexual desire and thoughts. I have seen the worst of L.A. in Hollywood, of Israel in Eilat, and of Hawaii in Honolulu, but still what I saw in Suture Shock bothered me. What kind of people are we? How insensitive we are. In place of discipline, purity and celibacy, we have sex, sex, sex. We are driven and oppressed by sex. And we do not even know it. Count me out.

The Bible says sex in marriage is wonderful (read Song of Songs in the Old Testament); outside of marriage it is adultery. You adulterers and adulteresses know for sure your sins will plague you...with mono, with V.D., with heartbreak, with divorce, and finally with the judgement of the Living God. All these unless you change your minds and trust Jesus.
Yours very sincerely,
Rod Pantony

Monkey cruelty

The Editor:
I think that it is an absolute disgrace to this university, the way in which the monkeys are kept in Hall.
Anyone who has ever been in the Biology building has probably seen or more likely smelled them on the second floor, where they are kept in completely inhumane conditions.
I cannot understand why the Bio-department, would allow two monkeys to be kept in a cramped and dirty glassed-in cage, giving them poor food, and never, seemingly, exercising them.

Courtright defends Quest

The Editor:

May I say something about Daniel B.
Augusta's letter addressed to the National Chairman of the Parents Association which you published in a recent issue of the Journal.

Mr. Augusta's principal point seems to be that "all post secondary institutions should be 100% government sponsored." There are many taxpayers in our society who feel strongly that those who benefit most from higher education - the students - should pay more of the cost.

I have every sympathy with the financial problems faced by many students attending university. In a letter to him in January of this year I commented on my own experience as a student here in the period 1937-41.

In spite of our best efforts to get all the support we can from government, grants per student have declined in real terms, for six years in a row. Governments must deal with many demands on the public purse.
Our traditions and our experience tell us, that unless we continue to help ourselves by seeking private support, the quality of education at Queen's will suffer.

A century ago in a campaign to raise $200,000, Principal Grant pledged $2,500 to his university. In response the staff contributed $3,500
- not small amounts in times when annual salaries were only $60. Later

Opinion 9

Girls: "off your liberated asses"

The Editor:

Upon reading the letter to the Journal by Sherry Galey it became painfully evident to me that she had missed, among other things, the whole significance of Suzie-Q week.
Contrary to her rather paranoid view, few men desire the perpetuation of the "passive, dependent female role." Most would be more than happy, at any time of the year I might add, to be asked out by a member of the opposite sex or to have her pay the shot for the night.
Certainly the idea of equality, at this and at much more profound levels, is not something men are fighting against and such absurd suggestions as the one that many men derive "feelings of power" from women are nothing more than relics of the past.

Unfortunately, many women seem to realize that in many ways they have a good thing going and for this reason and others are reluctant to play the role of "pursued" rather than "pursuer." Far from "legitimizing prevailing norms" Suzie-Q week is an invitation for women to get off their liberated asses and start practicing the much touted equality that they seem so fond of preaching.
Yours truly,
Steve Kennett

Limit business' rights to strike too

The Editor:

From the tone of Mr Lalonde's opinion (Right to Strike Abuse and Forfeit; 10 Nov.) it appears that the "right to strike" is not a right but a limited grant of freedom from governments of industrial societies such as ours.

"Surely the 'right to strike,' he says, 'does not include threatening others or using innocents in a self-centred, horse-blinded game.' In other words, the right is withdrawn by governments whenever a particular sector of a country threatens efficiency or smooth-running of society and the society's objectives of growth, prosperity, equality, etc.

In our country, the definition of labour's right to strike includes Mr Lalonde's qualification. But, the definition of business' right to strike has rarely and only in isolated cases included this qualification.

Mr Lalonde suggests that when the postal workers withdrew their economic input into society (their labour) to the extent that they threatened "others," and "used innocents as pawns," that this was a misuse of their freedom to strike and that it was justly lost. I wonder if he would agree that when business goes on strike and withdraws its economic input into society (the capacity to invest), which in turn threatens the livelihood of "innocent," Canadians, that they too should lose their control over their economic input as the postal workers did?

OFS picket strategy challenged

The Editor:

I was interested in last Tuesday's editorial on the Ontario Federation of Students' "Strategy of Change". I wish I could share its enthusiasm for the OFS's tactics. Unfortunately, I have grave doubts about the sincerity and the wisdom of the OFS's current activities.

I am not convinced of the OFS's sincerity in professing to employ a new strategy. If Thursday's gathering at Queen's Park was intended to be an "informational picket line", rather than a "demonstration", the OFS did not go out of their way to make that clear to media or onlookers. The press reports I read did not mention the distinction, and, as an observer, I saw no evidence of it. The only information I was handed was distributed by a political party. There were signs, but I do not believe their slogans would go any further towards informing the public than did the chants and songs of the marchers. It seems logical that if the OFS truly wanted to educate the public, it would have provided some literature to explain its position, and would have expended its energies somewhere where there were more members of the general public than are normally found at Queen's Park, possibly in the cities where universities and community colleges are situated.

The OFS's sensitivity about holding another demonstration is easy to understand. Frequent repetition of mass action creates a bad image with the public, suggests that the organization can think of nothing else to do, and is likely to result in decreasing student participation. The problem is that the "new" tactic chosen was not sufficiently different to avoid these undesirable effects. The worst of it is that the OFS's tactics of confrontation are continually eroding the scope for government consultation with our student group.

Further, I doubt the wisdom of the OFS's decision to speak for the students of Ontario on the broader issues of the provincial economy and the social service sector in general, in addition to those issues which affect us because of our status as students. The OFS has hereby exceeded its mandate, and limited itself to representing only those students who share its economic and political views. By refusing to accept the province's financial difficulties as legitimate, the OFS has excluded itself from the process of deciding how spending restraints will affect the post-secondary system. If the organization continues on this vein, these decisions will be made without its input.

I am concerned that the confrontationist tactics of the Ontario Federation of Students are alienating the public at a time when enthusiastic public support for universities is essential, and are isolating the organization from the decision-making process. This leaves the responsibility for positive action with each campus' student government, and with the individual students on each campus. Nora Sanders

Professional plunder

by Ross Finnie

The debate over the recent postal workers' strike was partially due to the "inefficiency" of the postal unions to be "successfully selfish". The outrage and controversy demonstrated their inferiority to professional associations which represent doctors, lawyers, dentists, accountants, etc.

These professional "unions" extract exorbitant benefits for their highly limited memberships, while maintaining a respected and misleading facade of dignified social service—which exempts them from any wide-spread criticism. These are the pre-eminent in the hierarchy of capitalist unions—obtaining the greatest gains while remaining comfortably and respectably upon their perches of power and privilege—unchallenged.

These professional unions—who are charged with regulating themselves (in whose interest, one might ask?)—carefully restrict new entrants to control supply and bid their earnings up. It is society's loss that competent and enthusiastic hoards of aspiring professionals are turned away so that the already elected elite might profit further.

The (sick) beauty of the professional unions is that they need never stoop to such distasteful (and "inconveniencing", "irresponsible", "egotistic", etc.) practices such as strikes.

Such miserably overt and ineffective tactics are left to the working lower classes, while professionals collectively quietly set their monopolistic prices.

The awe and reverence which has semi-mythified the professions effectively shrouds the seediness of their selfishly screwing the rest of us. The cost of strikes might turn out to be trivial in relation to the small fortunes extorted by the "respected professions". But who does public opinion invariably turn against? Any successful "worky" unions are invariably vilified. "Isn't it terrible what a plumber makes in an hour?" Possibly, but not compared to the professions.

So here we are at Queen's, working towards our own union cards, be they the less rewarding B.A. or the very lucrative Meds degree. These university union cards are, of course, "nicer"—to prepare us for "nicer" jobs. For some, the system is indeed efficient. Let's just not be hypocritical about it. The next time you begin to decry direct industrial action, think of your doctor, or lawyer, or accountant, and put it all in perspective.

Trendiest Toronto

Toronto is a largish city, full of shallow people who while away their empty lives flitting from boutique to boutique, from cafe to cafe, and from bed to bed.

There are of course, degrees of shallowness. Rosedale is a little shallow. Cabbagetown is middling shallow. Yorkville is deeply shallow. And the part of Yorkville that is the shallowest is Hazelton Lanes. Hazelton Lanes is so shallow it makes Studio 54 look like the Rand Institute.

(For those of you lucky enough to have never visited Toronto, Hazelton Lanes is a very expensive apartment-shopping complex. It is so expensive that Hazelton residents have been known to use pate de Foie Gras instead of Polident.)

Because I am known for my probing insight, my editor asked me to report on Hazelton Lanes. He thought that it might be a good idea to investigate the chief object of many of our readers' aspirations.

And so, off I went, dressed in my trendiest clothes, (this season: Woody Allen a la Punk), tape recorder in hand. I rang the bell of the model suite at HL and the property manageress answered. She was dressed very trendily (Diane Keaton a la Punk) so you won't be surprised when I tell you that a strong current of sexual electricity ran through us. Luckily I had my Woody Allen tennis shoes on, so I was grounded. I might mention at this point that allusions to electricity are very important to this story.

She showed me in She was wearing the latest Yves St. Laurent perfume, "Parquet". Though burning with desire I checked my fire, for I had to pose as a buyer.

"Ciao," she said.

"No thanks, I just ate," I declined dexterously.

Iran self-destructing?

by Drew Fagan

Today, Iran lies in ruins. A nation for which the windfall of oil revenues was to catapult its people into economic security, lies on the brink of civil war. Demands are made that the Shah, the architect of Iran's growing world importance, resign, and that a republic replace his fashion of modern dictatorial rule.

Since 1973, through the oil-exporting nations' success at quadrupling the price of crude oil, the Shah has embarked on a giddy economic development program. Attempts at transforming the nation in a few short years from a feudal society into a modern industrial state have caused massive social inequity. A wealthy upper class has evolved through the personal favours of the Shah, taking control of the economy. Yet the vast amounts of oil revenue have not reached the common citizen, who remains illiterate, with the average wage of $200 per year. It is little wonder that the Iranian people have grown violent in opposition to an aristocracy and ruling elite that have denied them the fruits of economic growth.

The reckless movement towards westernization has alienated the leaders of Iran's Moslem society. The nation remains a conservative religious land, as fully ninety percent of citizens are Shiite Moslems, who adhere strictly to the age-old doctrines of their faith. To many, the Shah's obsession with industrialization and modernization of Iran's antiquated system of justice means a dilution of their faith and, to the Moslem leaders, true heresy against their religion. Today, it appears that the average citizen supports a return to Iran's traditional way of life.

Finally, the Shah's insistence on the continuance of repression under his regime has led the nation towards anarchy. Savak, the secret police force and internal security of the monarchy, utilizing terror and torture to suppress political discontent. Their efficiency appears to have done little but bring about indignation, and a determination to destroy the constant evidence of the

"Oh, you tease!" she cooed coyly. "All of our residents have good humour!"

"Actually I prefer Laura Secord myself," I answered archly. "May I see the apartment now?"

"Oh yes," she willingly replied. "This is our two-bedroom suite. Cost is of no relevance to you, I'm sure, so you won't have a heart attack when I tell you that this place goes for a mere $375,000. That includes electricity, but parking is extra, of course."

I felt ill. Who on earth could be rich enough to have sufficient moolah left over from the purchase price to pay for parking? I asked her if I could use the bathroom.

Shah's iron grip over the affairs of the state.

These three groups, the peasants bitterly disappointed with their inability to capitalize on Iran's economic growth, the religious leaders, refusing to submit to the increasing secularization and westernization of their state, and the politically discontented, disappointed with the lack of human rights and liberalization, have grouped together in a relatively unstable coalition in their determination to bring about change.

Iran remains an integral nation to the interests of the West. Paralysis of its production of oil, could devastate Western economies. As well, Iran is a

"No, no sir! Not there! That's a bidet!" Madame property manageress grabbed my arm. I whirled around too quickly and fell backwards into the redwood whirlpool tub. My hostess fell in after me. Somehow the plug to my tape-recorder found its way into a socket. The property manageress was electrocuted. Her hair frizzled most unchicly.

Luckily I had my Woody Allen tennis shoes on, so I was grounded. The busy little bubbles in the tub felt nice, but I didn't want to overstay my welcome, so I left. A-bidet, a-bidet. That's all folks!

staunchly anti-communist nation and with its military strength provides an important check on Russian presence in the Middle East. For these reasons it is difficult to foresee the United States standing idly by, while Iran succumbs to a state of anarchy. Yet at the same time, how can America committee as it is to human rights, support a regime which denies its citizens the most basic of freedoms. The United States finds itself in a major dilemma, as does the Shah who must find ways to rebuild his divided nation. His admittance of past mistakes and his stated determination to light corruption and injustice may be a simple case of too little, too late.

The struggle for Zimbabwe

by Fili Karashani

The short lived Rhodesian army invasion of Mozambique early October, hotly followed by Ian Smith's flight to Washington to pay homage and seek more favours, may well signal the start of a new phase in the thirteen year old independence dispute.

In the previous similar invasions, the Rhodesian forces held onto Mozambique territory for a few days in a show of strength. The exile of the forces in October was as abrupt as the entry had been.

What we are witnessing in Southern Africa is an indication of changes of sides by the contending forces. The Patriotic Front is gradually calling the tune and setting the terms of the battles, while the army is inversely playing the part of the guerrilla force.

Guerrilla warfare is the tactic employed by the inferior contender

But unlike the Patriotic Front, the army in Rhodesia has no chance of lasting as a guerrilla force. The prerequisite is capacity to win over the confidence of the scattered rural population, so that a fighter hides the gun and mingles with the local population when a large enemy unit comes along. The rural population is likened to water, and the guerrilla to the fish who swims freely in it.

Yet another indicator of the changing of roles in Rhodesia is the reversal of positions about a conference. The Patriotic Front has for a long time voiced support for an all party conference on the independence dispute while Smith has dismissed the usefulness of such a meeting. Before he left for Washington, Smith announced he was giving such a conference serious consideration, and this time Patriotic Front co-leader Joshua Nkomo announced he no longer saw sense in that had butchered many civilians. For the front, power is indivisible, the oppressed either have it or they don't.

The collapsed Geneva talks led to intensification of the war. To pacify the black slum urban dwellers who were increasingly becoming sympathetic of the front, segregation laws were relaxed - natives could now enter restaurants, use toilets, and occupy park seats until then reserved for whites only. Years of colonial domination proved the native was overpowered, but certainly not tamed; he was treated as an inferior but he was not convinced of his inferiority; his muscles were always tensed to eventually exchange the role of the quarry for that of the hunter. The urban oppressed masses were not after rights to use toilets, to hang at pub counters, not for reformism, but for liberation, for self determination.

The message of the front came loud and clear. "the struggle continues"

Earlier this year, Smith carefully picked from reactionary elements a bishop, a reverend father, and a chief, Muzorewa, Sithole, and Chirau, to form an "internal settlement" coalition government with him.

The frontline states - Angola, Botswana, Mozambique, Tanzania, and Zambia which provide the rear base and training ground for the front - were quick to denounce the settlement. They saw the move as Smith's strategy to gain international recognition, to gather economic and military strength after which he would ditch his partners.

Indeed in August Smith held secret talks with Nkomo and offered to drop his Salisbury partners, and hand over some forms of power to Nkomo. His strategy was to win over to his side a man capable of ordering a cease-fire.

It is obvious that concessions made by Smith over time are non issues that he has actually or potentially lost on the battlefield - no more, no less.

His latest pronouncements that he will end "all" segregation laws in Rhodesia must therefore be seen in the same vein. It is a question of too little being offered - a little too late.

There are two reasons why Smith was accompanied by one of his black partners, Reverend Ndabaningi Sithole, on his US tour. For one he is using Sithole as a showcase of an imaginary inter racial government. On the other hand there is growing mistrust of Smith by his partners; he could ditch them he must be watched.

But Smith must be understood as a cog in the wheel, caught at the cross road between imperialism and liberation in Rhodesia. In order to avert class alliance and forestall the creation of an army of its own grave diggers, imperialism in Africa separated people on the lines of race, tribe or religion. In this manner it has been able to maximize exploitation, to reap super profits.

The revolt in Rhodesia therefore takes the form of race and tribe, it is the black against the white, the Shona against the Matabele. But the content of that struggle is capital (exploiter) against labour (exploited).

Imperialism has changed its tactics and Smith is now out of date. After its defeat in Vietnam in particular, and South East Asia, Mozambique, and Angola in general, imperialism today employs the carrot rather than the stick. Make love not war. Send aid rather than impose economic embargoes.

The lesson of Cuba, China and South East Asia is that the more you isolate and harass a people, the more you cement ground for unity of all the classes in the oppressed nation to seek and achieve genuine liberation.

Smith has fallen out of the favour of the Washington and London bourgeoisie. He employs archaic methods of antagonizing the majority in Rhodesia and thereby causing the rising of a nationalist front capable of severing the flow of lucrative profits from investments in that region.

to the West metropolises. That railroad is assisting Zambia gain holes in her soil and is providing the West with copper to build her communications networks, to decorate her homes.

Angola's President Neto climbed to power through the assistance of Cuba and the Soviet Union, but Gulf Oil continues to pump fuel from Angola to drive the industrial machines of New York. Angola has accepted the essence of the class struggle, but they have yet to rise beyond reformism to the dictatorship of the working class-peasantry alliance.

It is the carrot that is saving the day for imperialism; Smith in his use of the stick is an embarrassment, he must be ditched.

It was at the instigation of the Western bourgeoisie that Smith went for Nkomo and not Robert Mugabe, the co-leader in the Patriotic Front.

Nkomo is seen as the better of the two devils. He is essentially a nationalist; he would stop at independence - the takeover of the instruments of government.

Mugabe appears to be a revolutionary, he wants liberation - to dismantle the structures that would facilitate the exploitation of man by man within independent Zimbabwe (Rhodesia) and between Zimbabwe and Western capital centers.

It is generally agreed that Africans do not resort to armed struggle because they are bloodthirsty - it is a necessity imposed upon them, all reasonable channels of negotiated independence having been exhausted. The act of colonialism is recognized as an act of violence in itself, which must be met with equal or superior violence.

It is generally agreed that freedom fighters in Africa do not have a penchant for communist arms for the sake of it. They cannot liberate themselves using bow and arrow against the colonist armed with modern weaponry.

In all the liberation struggles the West has armed the enemy through NATO and the freedom fighters have had to seek help from the communist countries. They had no alternative, save for accepting continued subjugation, humiliation, domination.

But Mugabe appears to go a step farther - to see, as Frantz Fanon saw, the armed struggle as a necessary experience to mold together and revolutionise a people divided and subjugated for generations.

One of Mugabe's close advisors is Nathan Shamuyarira, a journalist turned professor of political science. Until last year Shamuyarira taught "Imperialism and Liberation" at an African university. His bedside reading selection included Jack Wood's New Theories of Revolution in which are examined the philosophies of Fanon, Regis Debray, and Herbert Marcuse.

Writes Fanon "Violence, alone, violence committed by the people, violence organised and educated by its leaders, makes it possible for the masses to understand social truths and gives the key to them."

He sees violence as a "cleansing force", it frees the native from his inferiority complex, and from despair and inaction. According to this theory, a people who achieve independence through armed struggle will not stop at the hoisting of the national flag, they will strive for liberation-cultural, economic etc.

They will tramp over an opportunist leader who fails to expropriate the expropriators. They will be sceptical of a leader who preaches pluralism, equality, sham freedoms and democracy.

For in the name of democracy (or because of it?) the blacks in Rhodesia have for generations seen their children starve in a land of plenty, their muscles bleed dry in the mines, factories and farms while they degenerated into paupers. They would demand to know whence springs the fusion of their own interests and those of their exploiters - old or new.

The people of Rhodesia have been refused the alternative of negotiated independence, they have been graced with the opportunity to undergo through revolutionary violence, to prosecute a war of liberation to its logical conclusion.

The question for Zimbabwe is not whether the patriotic front will win or lose the war. The power balance is shifting to the side of the oppressed.

The question is whether having shed all that blood, they will end up with a neo-colonial state, or whether their violence will act as a "cleansing force" to usher in total liberation.

Fili Karashani is a Politics student at Queen's. He has worked on the Tanzanian Daily News and in the course of his work had occasion to meet prominent actors in the Rhodesian struggle.

in the armed struggle for control of the instrument of government. The philosophy imbedded in the marxist-leninist theory of revolution, and sharpened by Mao during the Chinese protracted war of liberation, is a hit and run strategy.

The guerrillas withdraw when the enemy advances, they harass him when he stops, strike him when he is weary, pursue him when he withdraws. As in a game of dominoes, the guerrilla always identify the enemy's vulnerable spots and "there he must be harassed, attacked, dispersed, exhausted, and annihilated."

The guerrilla force goes through three distinct stages, first as a force broken into small units, then as larger organized units that move freely over easily repelling the enemy forces, and finally as a conventional army force capable of overrunning cities and garrisons.

The Soweto uprising in Johannesburg that in June 1976, when thousands of primary and secondary school pupils revolted against the oppressive racist system, kindled enthusiasm in neighbouring Rhodesia. Thousands of youths deserted schools to join the guerrilla training camps and war.

The events forced Smith to a conference talk in Geneva with the various liberation movements in November that year.

Smith did not agree to the condition by the front that his abdication from power be accompanied by the dismantling of his armed forces, the state apparatus towards neo colonialism or total liberation?

NFT series puts family in close-up

What follows attempts to provide some contextual information for the current NFT series on the family. It has been abridged due to space considerations from a larger piece by W.J. Nichols.

All of us are who we are partly as a result of family life. Many of us will return to the family to nurture another generation toward adulthood. Yet few of us study it and fewer still can say they clearly understand the intricate ways in which the family functions in our society to shape individual identities and social relations. Although scholars have only turned to the family as an object of study in the last century or so, artists have explored the complexities of family dynamics since antiquity. For them it seems to provide a perfect microcosm within which the conflicts and dramas peculiar to an age play themselves out. Oedipus Rex, Hamlet, King Lear, Madame Bovary, The Brothers Karamazov, Anna Karenina, Long Day's Journey into Night, Death of a Salesman, - from the beginning the family has been one of the central themes of literature. From even earlier societies numerous myths take up the task of explaining how a society came to enjoy a certain kinship system and how that system successfully resolved (at least in myth) the inevitable conflicts between the one and the many, the individual and society.

The resolution of conflict, in fact, is a vital element in the family's social function. Ironically, the family unit itself engenders the first crucial conflict we must face - the impasse between desire and the other. Our first object of desire, the significant others closest to us, mother or father, proves an impossible object. It becomes a forbidden object. This prohibition has the positive effect, if successfully accepted, of displacing desire to others beyond the nuclear family, thereby providing the emotional motivation for the perpetuation of the family as a social pattern.

The family, in our society, also mediates another crucial conflict between the individual and society. This is class conflict. The production of the basic needs of our society occurs as a function of class divisions. This division allows some of the value produced by all to accumulate in the hands of a few, those who own the means of production.

But the relations of production must themselves be reproduced from one generation to the next. This task falls to the family. But not only does the family prepare the next generation to take its place within class relations (a role increasingly supported by education - the differences in the student body and the academic character of, say, Queen's and Concordia is most instructive), it also provides some measure of shelter from the harsher realities of the economic market place.

Although the family plays a profoundly social role in reproducing the values attitudes, motivation and skills needed by a given social order, it also proves a measure of insulation from that very order. That the kinds of tensions and dilemmas which arise within the family bear the mark of the social order to which the family inescapably belongs has, at least, not escaped the notice of artists and scholars alike.

Art is what concerns us most here and the way art - film in particular - has characterized the family. It is no secret that the family is under siege. Its study, as with the cinema itself, in some measure coincides with its troubled status. The traditional, self-contained nuclear family of two parents and one or more children is less common than ever before. Single parents, day-care centres, couples without children, groups of people with collective responsibility for children - these and other forms of social relationships have left great fissures in the ideal form we may have once thought timeless.

In terms of film one can argue that the preservation and celebration of the family stands as a central theme since at least Cecil Hepworth's early narrative, Rescued by Rover (1905), where Rover discovers "baby stolen by a gypsy, relocates the baby, fetches the master, presides over the reunification of the family and receives his due reward, a pat on the head. Threats are external, the family a privileged sanctuary of love and harmony (though, of course, Father does the rescuing, Mother the patting).

As the cinema developed, two significant changes can be succinctly described. First, the melodramatic form itself became a primary vehicle within which contradictions could be centred on the family and resolved (within the melodrama at least). The melodramatic narrative would push an initial conflict and disequilibrium through a series of intermediate stages until a new disequilibrium was established. The initial conditions would set the terms determining the final condition, and they were always terms that allowed for resolution. By stressing emotional conflicts expressed by character, melodrama offered an arena for the resolution of precisely those conflicts most characteristic of family life. The resolution often had an appealing simplicity to them: men proved themselves in the outside world, through conquest or control over objects or others and won the hearts of deserving and devoted women, women proved themselves in the inside world of the family itself, through their devotion to others and won the heart of a special man.

This, however, places an unbearable strain upon the melodramatic form and leads to the second point. Melodrama's family romance became a catch-basin for conflicts and contradictions originating in the society at large, in class divisions as well. All forms of contradiction became condensed into the conflicts between a handful of related characters. This is more conflict than one social ensemble, however central, can bear. It sets up another level of conflict between the apparent or manifest sources of conflict in the melodrama and the actual or latent sources of conflict, the melodrama carries out forms of leading them. The melodrama condenses and displaces conflict, the melodrama carries out forms of secondary revision as it attempts to elicit a closed, nearly resolved structure.

As the pressures upon the family have become more pronounced historically, those symptoms have become more prominent melodramatically. Resolution is increasingly difficult, bought at an increasingly higher price. This is perhaps most evident in recent films.

In 1) the displacement of family dynamics to dyadic forms like the male buddy-film (Scarcecrow, Thunderbolt and Lightfoot, Bang the Drum Slowly), the men-dog-they-joh-together-and-fulfillment-therein theme of The Wild Bunch, The Professionals, Stars Wars, or the more recent, and in many ways more refreshing female friendship stories (Julia, The Turning Point, Girlfriends) and 2) the extremes to which violence against women are taken as both an exorcism and repression of emotional commitments epitomized by Looking For Mr. Goodbar, The Silent Partner, Sweet Away, Investigation of a Citizen Above Suspicion, and others.

We see in films the forms and fissures of the contemporary family retracted by and represented in usually, the melodramatic narrative. The NFT series on the family explores these issues across a spectrum of post world war II films. Some, like Written on the Wind, East of Eden, or Rebel Without a Cause, concentrate upon interior tensions, some, like The Emigrants, Garden of the Finzi-Continis or 1900 dwell upon external pressures, though the two are inevitably interrelated.

Comedy of Errors goes ragtime

by Julian Cunningham

In order to fill a gaping hole in their Vibrant Stage Series created when an originally slated tour of Anne of Green Gables was cancelled, the Queen's Performing Arts Office has had to call upon British talent.

The replacement will be The Comedy of Errors, as performed by the Oxford and Cambridge Shakespeare company, a selected group of the best dramatic talent available from the two schools.

Maynard Ferguson interview

by Brent Laviolette

You were playing with the Stan Kenton Band before I was born. Do you reflect back on those days much?

Oh sure. I go back, of course, to thinking about a year before when I was leading my own band in Montreal and Toronto and doing all those things. When I went to the United States I had an open invitation to join the Kenton Band but by the time I got there the band was folding for a year. That was very fortunate for me because then I went with two or three other bands and gained a lot of experience and know-how so to speak. When the Kenton band reformed in the beginning of 1950 that's when I went with him.

Of course you're playing with a whole new generation of jazz artists now. Has the Canadian scene changed much do you feel?

The most exciting thing to see now, for me, is to see Canada into the same thing as the United States with the upleveling of music education in the Canadian and American Schools over the last 15 years. I have a Canadian trombonist with me now, Phil Gray, he's just marvellous. He's a product of me hearing him at one of the big Stage Band international festivals which was held in Toronto. He's from Nova Scotia. It's an example of this tremendous interest in young people and seeing our records played on both jazz stations and top 40 radio. It's a very rewarding thing that's going on right now.

"Clean" living is very much a part of your lifestyle and your music philosophy. Is that a part of your message?

When we talk at the clinics we talk music, we're not talking morality or anything. I'm a great wine lover for instance. Certainly we're not talking about abstaining from the pleasures of life. But, on the other hand, anyone who's playing a wind instrument and is into being creative musician is past the "bad" era of drugs and heavy drinking which were a part of the scene, perhaps because of a lack of acceptance. Now it's kind of old fashioned and it's really out. Great musicians no longer have to carry horns in paper bags and walk in the gutters.

The thing is, when I'm teaching and speaking about wind instrument players I'm recommending Yoga breathing exercises and all that. A wind instrument means automatically you are partially an athlete. We even have our own jogging team. You didn't see that in bands of the past.

With the success of "Rocky" did you get much criticism from your older fans?

Oh sure man. You see, I just love the fact that some people think I've just suddenly changed. I get a gold album and everybody rushes to see how I sounded in 1950 because that's where they remember me from. It's almost a compliment.

That philosophy of change and staying alive and creative, allowing yourself to be influenced by "young" thinking, that's my philosophy and it works for me, but I would never impose it on other artists.

Now in its tenth year, the company has received international acclaim for its originality and vitality in producing Shakespearean plays. Their latest effort should bolster a growing reputation.

The Comedy of Errors is not one of Shakespeare's better efforts. The plot finds its roots in Plautus' The Brothers Menaechmus, a contrived farce about a young gentleman who at length rediscovers his long lost identical twin brother... phew! But before they actually meet, brother "A" is mistaken on his arrival for brother "B" by all of "B's" friends and relatives. "A" has sex with "B's" mistress and gets into all sorts of trouble with "B's" nattering wife. A very routine format.

Shakespeare strengthened the foundation of the plot considerably by doubling the twin count. Not only have "A" and "B" shared a single ovum, but so have their respective servants. The Bard deals with his situation much more effectively than his Roman predecessor, allowing the unbelievable circumstances of such an encounter to command the course of the comedy, rather than imposing further incredulities upon his subject, as Plautus did. Yet even under Shakespeare's masterful pen, The Comedy of Errors seems more suited to a Victorian audience, who could more easily accept the absurdities (both comic and melodramatic) of this classic rendition of the mistaken identity theme. In fact, over the past several years, the play has rarely been staged in its original form. Modern audiences require something extra. The Oxford and Cambridge Shakespeare Company will offer it tonight.

Directors Jon Plowman and Peter Farago have situated the play in a

dishevelled Arab casbah. Not only that, but they have quite casually lurched the time forward several hundred years—into the 1920's. The young twin gentlemen are now in cream-coloured suits, and Dr. Pinch is now a "fakir-cum-doctor", complete with his portable bed of nails. Just an indication of what to expect from a company whose mad innovations have delighted audiences all over Britain.

The Comedy of Errors gives you a chance to see the flexibility of the Shakespearean script in creatively competent hands. But the opportunity will be brief, as the show will be lit only three times in Kingston: tonight and tomorrow night at 8:30pm, with a matinee performance at 1:00pm tomorrow, all shows in the KCVI auditorium. ## Rogers loyal to ballad tradition

by Colin Hunt

This weekend Stan Rogers played to a full house at Scarecrow. The audience was buoyantly receptive to the dynamic Maritime and Traditional ballads that Rogers has become known for. There has been an addition to Rogers' entourage of late, a face lift new to all Queen's students. Now playing bass guitar for Rogers, Dave Eadie may be known to some of us as a philosophy graduate from last year. Combined with Eadie is Garnet Rogers playing violin, and flute, and the resulting combination produces a richness and depth few folk performers enjoy.

The tone of the evening was set by the opening song, "The Witch of the West Mere Land", a superb ballad written by Archie Fisher concerning a medieval legend in northern England. Rogers is a master at evoking tragedy in song, particularly the sorrows and perils of east-coast fishermen in his long composition "The Genie Sea". True to the ballad tradition, a number of worksongs were included such as "John Kanaka" with the audience joining in on the choruses.

Rogers doesn't usually accept requests but he did last Saturday with his rendition of Eric Vogel's "And the Band Played Waltzing Matilda", a mournful tale about the men who fought at Gallipoli in 1915. There was scarcely a dry eye in the house afterwards. Rogers played the twelve-string once for a version of Doug MacArthur's "Skyway" as he remarked that he would use it more if it didn't take so long to tune.

The man playing the guest set was also a balladeer. Michael Thompson opened with an excellent introductory instrumental of his own and proceeded to Dave Essig's "Albert's Cove" and Doug MacArthur's "Lunenburg Shift". There is no question of Thompson's expertise in performing the songs of other writers but his opening was tantalizing enough to wish that he had presented more of his own work.

For a night of ballads it couldn't be beaten. Reluctant to end an enchanted evening the audience called Rogers back for an encore. Judging by this week the expanded band is headed for success.

Another Space Gallery, 191 Princess St. (above the Book Merchant) features a show of artworks - sculpture, related works and prints by Queen's BFA students opening 20 November. The Gallery will be open Monday through Saturday 11:00 a.m. to 5 p.m. The official opening of this show will be on Wednesday November 22nd at 8:00 p.m. and coincides with the Gallery's First Birthday Party. All are welcome! The Show has been co-ordinated by Barb Lounder, Anne McCarthy and Anne O. Paxton. For further information drop by the Gallery.

Three generations spanned

by Madeline Mills

The McCallum exhibition, 3 Generations of Photography, is currently displayed at the F.D. Gallery, on Johnson St. Don McCallum has had two previous photographic shows at the F.D., as well as two painting exhibitions. Robbie, his son, has recently regained an interest in photography, and so they were contemplating a father-son show. However, Don discovered a box of photographs which had been taken by his father, W.J., and so a three generation exhibition was decided upon.

W.J.'s work includes images of Kingston: 1911 Steamrollers and Spring Outings in the Woods in 1912. Don has done many images of old limestone farmhouses in fields of flowers; but his main interest seems to be in the abstract qualities of light and texture. "I look for pattern first," he said, "a nice abstract design, so that even if you didn't know what the object was you could still appreciate it." His textural images of handforged silver spoons on grainy, knotty wood and hinges on peeling paint surfaces are very beautiful. His son, Robbie, works a lot with colour. However, within the family tradition, he photographs images of abandoned wooden farms in fields.

This exhibition goes until Nov. 23.

DEDICATED TO 2020 LEONARD: on the dark Queen's highway, cool wind in their hair, warm smell of Sage rising up through the air. Up ahead in the distance, they saw a shimmering light, their heads grew heavy and their sight grew dim, they had to stop for the night. There we stood in the doorway, we heard the doorman yell, and we were thinking to ourselves: this will be Heaven, this can't be Hell. When they'd played their tuckers, we showed them the way. There were tucks in the down the corridor, then they heard us say: Thank you, from One North Chown, your tuckers was great, just a little bit late. Plenty of room at One North Chown, anytime of year, and Leonard can find us here. Hugs and kisses from One North Chown

Gaels convince critics

by Don MacKinnon

Last Saturday afternoon at Toronto's Varsity Stadium, the Queen's Golden Gaels had something to prove and they did. Snubbed all year long by much of the media, and the CIAU establishment, the Gaels trotted upon the University of British Columbia Thunderbirds, 16 to 3, to cap an undefeated season with the Vanier Cup, emblematic of Canadian College football supremacy.

Billed as a potentially high scoring game, the contest was dominated by both teams' defenses, and the play of the special teams.

In the last three games, the Gaels defense gave up only two field goals and a single. "If we'd given out a game ball, it would have gone to the defense", a smiling Jim Rutka said after the game. The defensive players heap the credit on their coach, John Thompson, while he credits the players.

Eighteen hours spent studying the films told the Gaels defensive co-ordinator what had to be done to stop U.B.C. "our job was to shut down their inside running and short passing game. Once we'd taken away their strengths, we had them".

Though the Thunderbirds were able to move the ball sporadically, eventually amassing 256 yards of offense, they managed only a 36 yard field goal midway through the second quarter. In the second half, they managed only 6 yards on the ground.

U.B.C.'s solid defense limited the Gaels to 223 yards, as they shut down the Gaels feared passing attack. The Gaels ran the ball well, with Tony Manastersky rolling up 94 yards on 20 carries. In the air, Rutka, author of the Gaels' previous two victories, was only 5/19. Jim felt that "they had a tremendous secondary"

Help for the Gaels offense came from an unexpected quarter. The punt return team rolled up 189 yards of offense, with Tom McCartney shattering two College Bowl records, most returns (12), and total yardage returned (159 yards). Early in the second quarter, he electrified the largest crowd ever to attend a College Bowl, 19,124, with a 38 yard punt return that set up the first score of the game, a 31 yard Blaine Shore field goal at 2:34 of the second quarter. Throughout much of the second half, the Gaels were pinned on their own side of center. Ahead only 6 to 3 at the time, Tom was reluctant to concede any singles to U.B.C. "The coaches leave it up to me. I look up field for a hole, and if there's one, I go for it".

To complement the punt return special team, was the punt coverage team. The Gael's aggressive gang tackling led by Francis Sheridan and Dave Best, forced three fumbles, two of which led directly to Gaels' scoring plays. Tied 3-3 at the half, the Gaels went ahead early in the third quarter on an 11 yard Blaine Shore field goal. The score was set up by Dave Best's recovery on the 14 yard line of a fumbled punt.

The Gaels clung tenaciously to their 6 to 3 lead through the second half. Late in the fourth quarter, Queen's finally managed to move the ball out of their own end and into U.B.C. territory. Tim Wardrop spiraled a long punt to the Thunderbirds' one. The Gaels gang tackling produced yet another fumble, and Queen's suddenly had a first and goal from the four yard line. Slashing off tackle behind the blocking of Peter Sops and Tom MacCartney, Dave Marinucci bulled his way into the endzone for the game's only touchdown. The successful convert made the score, at 11:30 of the fourth quarter, 13 to 3.

On the next series, Hugh Gallagher intercepted a tipped pass and raced 26 yards to the Thunderbirds' 25. Three plays later, Blaine Shore kicked a record third field goal, a 25 yard, to finish the scoring at Queen's 16, U.B.C. 3.

With 18 seconds left on the clock and U.B.C. on their own 36 yard line, many of the 7,000 Queen's fans rushed onto the field. Unable to clear it, the game was declared over. A decade after the Gaels first College Bowl victory, the men in gold were once again carrying away the silverware. Ten straight victories have given the 1978 edition of the Queen's Golden Gaels the undisputed championship of Canadian College football

Gaels Notes

The Player of the game award, fittingly enough, was awarded to a member of the Gaels defense, linebacker Ed Andrew, who edged out Jim D'Andrea in the voting.

For left offensive tackle, Julian Hanlon, Saturday's victory was his second undefeated, College Bowl winning season. (He played for Ottawa U. in 1975 when they won the college crown.)

Tim Wardrop, the Gaels' punter broke the College Bowl record for number of punts (15) and yards punted (610).

Four Gaels will be travelling to Florida for the Can-Am Bowl in January joining Dick Bakker, who alternates Jim Rutka, John Vernon and Bob O'Doherty.

Boneman's Byline:

in retrospect

Now that the College Bowl Festival has come to an end, many things will be remembered by all who were there, especially the team itself. It took the Gaels three months and an undefeated season before they finally got the recognition they so richly deserve. It is now evident to all concerned that football is played at universities west of London and east of Toronto. Hopefully in the future, the ranking system and coverage of college football won't be as tunnel-visioned as it was this year.

Not only did the victory over U.B.C. help prove that Queen's can play football with anyone, but the performance of the defensive team shows that more members of that squad rather than just Dick Bakker should have been selected to the All-Canadian team. It seems fairly obvious from the rankings the team received this year and the lack of consideration given the players in terms of All-Canadian status, that the Kingston media didn't have much influence, which is unfortunate as they were the only ones who bothered to watch and acknowledge how good the Gaels were this season.

Now that the season is over, perhaps this bitterness on behalf of the Gaels and their fans will be forgotten and replaced with memories of that elusive "perfect season". Along the way there were various highpoints, but obviously this past weekend was the best of them all.

From Friday night at City Hall until the wee hours of Sunday, Queen's football fever dominated the atmosphere of downtown Toronto. That phenomenon known as "Queen's spirit" was evident all weekend long, but never more so than after the Gaels' lone touchdown Saturday, when 12,000 students, alumni and friends rose in unison to do an Oil Thigh. It was a truly awesome, amazing sight.

Such spirit would put students on other campuses around Canada to shame as they watched on television, but then again the success of the Gaels put various reporters around this country to shame as well.

Triple win for Vball Gaels

by Dave Tod

This past weekend the Queen's Men's Volleyball team travelled to Toronto to play in their first OUA league matches against York, U. of T., and Ryerson. Continuing in this year's tradition of winning teams the Gaels beat each of them, which puts them alone in first place in the OUA East.

In the first match of the day, Queen's steamrolled over Ryerson 15-0, 15-2, and 15-1. The match lasted only 32 minutes because the volleyball Gaels were anxious to see the last minutes of the College Bowl on television. It is evident that again this year Queen's ranks among the top teams in Ontario.

The second match saw Queen's pitted against the powerful York Yeomen. In a tough match, the Gaels triumphed 19-17, 8-15, 14-16, 15-11, and 15-12 in a best of five series. Once again, the superior conditioning and skills of the Gaels, combined with their solid defense, ensured a victory.

On Sunday, Queen's defeated rival U. of T. 6-16, 15-12, 15-13, and 15-6. It was the same story, with the Gaels' strong hitting and blocking, carrying the balance of the match. Henk Meijer, the "Flying Dutchman" played particularly well in the Toronto games, giving a good display of precise setting and spiking.

Queen's are definitely contenders for an OUA title this year. All of the players are experienced, in good shape, and exhibit a great balance of speed, power, and strategy. This weekend the Gaels travel to Sudbury to tangle with the Laurentian Voyageurs for two important matches. The Voyageurs return the visit on Dec. 2 for Queen's first home game.

Swim relays at York

by Chris Leuchter

Queen's Swim Team travelled to York this weekend to participate in the annual O.U.A.A. Relays meet. Although points are not tabulated, it is an important meet as it provides a low pressure situation in which rookies receive their first taste of intercollegiate competition.

The performance of our first year swimmers made it clear that they were eager to encounter more of that calibre of competition. Jim Tasker swam a personal best time of 1:14.5 in his leg of the 3 x 100 breast stroke relay, while Jack Raleigh, Marty Feiertag and Rick Cockfield added considerable punch to the freestyle relays. Andy Hasegawa showed his versatility by swimming excellent times in both the breast stroke and individual medley relays. Due to several unfortunate absences, one being that of teamster Ken Davies, Doug McIntosh and Tom Lewis were only able to swim one event. They swam well and big things are expected from them in the future.

The team veterans were not to be outdone however. George Bovell, despite an insistent virus, swam three sub 0:57 second one hundred metre freestyles, and John Lane, who had to swim every stroke except breast, turned in some fine performances. Tim Dennis, Bubbles Lawruinik and Drew Fagan all swam close to best times despite participating in College Bowl Festivities the night before. Coach Larry Brawley was very pleased with the team's overall performance.

Athlete of Last Week

The Athlete of Last Week is Larry Cook, scrum half for Queen's Firsts Rugby Team. This picture shows "Cookie" taking a well-deserved drink from the champagne bottle as he helped the Queen's Rugby Squad capture the O.U.A.A. championship in a thriller over Guelph. Cookie played an excellent game as he fed the ball consistently and accurately to the backs all game. He made some good tackles as well and made a spectacular run in the tale portion of the second half. After breaking a few tackles and making some good fakes, he neatly passed off to John Reid who got the winning try. This put Queen's ahead by 4 points which was just enough for the victory as Guelph later scored a 3-point penalty kick.

Among the many outstanding performances in Halifax, the offensive line for the Golden Gaels Football Team played very well. Up against the number 1 defense in the country, they held back the blitzing X-Men, not allowing them to sack Jim

Carleton loss inspires Waterpolo Gaels to win

by Bruce MacDougall

For all those sports fans who stayed home this weekend, the place to be was the pool, where the Queen's Gaels battled for first place and a berth in the OUA finals. Tied with Carleton and only two points ahead of 3rd place York, the Gaels had their hands full.

The scene was set last weekend at York University, where Queen's was drowned by Carleton (11-3), took out their frustration on R.M.C. winning 15-4 and tied York again 6-6. Having little warm-up, the Gaels took on Carleton in the first game. It looked like it might go well as the team held Carleton to a 1-0 lead at the end of the first quarter, but things fell apart after that. Playing with a shallow end, goalie Richard Glew had problems coping with the larger net. The experienced Carleton team continued to pick holes in the defense to take command of the game. There were few excuses on the Queen's side. "We came up flat", said Captain Mitch Dent (who scored two of the Queen's goals). "That was just the worst game against Carleton all season."

Smarting from the loss, and from the close call with R.M.C. the preceding weekend, the Gaels made it clear to the military that they were not going to fool around, jumping to a 6-1 lead at the quarter. Marty Rosen, John Williamson, and Chuck Leighton played extremely well. Richard Glew, playing out of the nets after the lead was taken, scored his first goal of the season.

It took a weasel to bring the Gaels back against York and Dave Ardell was just the man for the job. After falling behind 5-2 in the third, Ardell succeeded (once again) in getting a key York player kicked out of the game. Ardell was sorely missed in the McMaster tournament and everyone agreed that it was good to have him back. York, for the first time, jumped to a 2-0 lead against the Gaels at the quarter and 5-2 at the half, with Graeme Black and Bruce MacDougall responding for Queen's. Late in the third, Ardell made the key play and the Gaels came back to tie the game 6-6. Knowing that the tie was lucky, Queen's players came from the game only too aware of the need to come on hard against York.

A report on this past weekend's activity will come in the next issue, with the results of the season final to be played in Toronto.

Gaels' streak broken

by Chris Cuthbert

A third period letdown against the Ottawa Gee-Gees last Tuesday night in Ottawa, cost the Queen's Golden Gaels two points in their battle for a playoff berth in the OUA Eastern Division.

The Gee-Gees scored four times in the final frame en route to a 6-4 upset of the previously undefeated Golden Gaels.

Ottawa's Dave Saunders started the third period scoring binge when he dumped the puck into the unguarded Queen's net.

Kevin Treacy knotted the score at 3-3 just 24 seconds later on a deadly shot from the left wing face-off circle which handcuffed Ottawa goalie Bill Thompson.

Ottawa's John Labouef slapped the puck by Ashby high on the glove side, and two minutes later an unassisted goal by Dave Beveridge made the score 5-3 and led to Ashby's removal from the Queen's net.

Treacy's second goal of the game with just under four minutes remaining gave the Gaels hope for a draw but costly penalties to Dale Sandles and Mike Conway gave Ottawa a two man advantage with only three minutes to play.

Gerry West, the game's top performer, ensured the Ottawa victory by beating the Gaels' second goalie Dan Galbraith with a low hard point drive.

Ottawa's other marksmen were Chris Jodoin and Dan Anderson while Sandles and John MacIntyre countered for Queen's.

On Friday evening the Gaels played to a 4-4 draw with the York Yeomen at Jock Hartly. Scoring for the Gaels were Ron Davidson, John MacIntyre, Mike Conway and Kevin Treacy. The tie leaves the Gaels with a 2-1-1 win-loss record.

Gaels' goalie Barry Ashby deflects a fast low one.

BEWS UPDATE

The outdoor season has been largely completed and champions were decided in rugby, soccer and flag football last week. Only tennis now remains to be decided.

Arts 79 defeated Mechanical to advance to the round-robin final in rugby. Commerce 79's victory over Meds and PHE's win against Civil also qualified those teams for the finals. After PHE defeated Commerce 79 and Arts 79 and Commerce 79 tied, PHE played Arts 79 to determine the winner. The match ended in a draw after double overtime so PHE emerged as champion by virtue of its previous victory over Commerce 79.

The soccer finals pitted two Commerce teams against each other. As in the rugby finals, the score was tied after overtime. Penalty shots were used to decide the match and Commerce 82 triumphed over Commerce 81.

In flag football action, Electrical, a surprise victor over Law 80, defeated Commerce 79 to take the championship. The score was 6-2.

The tennis tournament is down to its finalists with last year's champ Rob Beattie (Meds) and Dave Jebb (Law 80) contesting for the singles championship. Both Beattie and Jebb are involved in the doubles tennis tournament. The remaining teams are Baker and Braden (Arts 81); Jebb and Bernstein (Law 80); Brownstein and Beattie (Meds) and MacDonald and White (Civil). Competition should be completed this week.

C.C.'s World of Sport

Baseball's free agent draft held recently saw fewer developments than expected take place when the only true superstar available, Pete Rose, was not even selected by the maximum number of teams. The Toronto Blue Jays were no exception to the trend, selecting only pitchers Jim Slaton, Larry Gura and Tommy John, ostensible to bolster a staff which ranked second-last in the American League last year. Meanwhile, the Montreal Expos went for relief pitching and bench strength when they took the likes of former Cy Young award winner Mike Marshall; Elias Sosa, Jerry Grote, Mike Lum and Lee Lacy.

The New York Yankees, on the other hand, will make a pitch at securing John or Rose. After learning of the ten-player trade between the Texas Rangers and the Yanks involving another Cy Young winner, Sparky Lyle, plus $400,000 for centrefielder Juan Beniquez, one can only question the makeup of the 1979 edition of the Yankees. Beniquez is a young, good-hitting outfielder gifted with a strong arm, and his acquisition could spell the way out for Mickey Rivers in a multiplayer deal involving possibly Catfish Hunter. Rumours in the Bronx also have Dave Parker of the Bucs going to the Yankees for cash and a group of players including Thurman Munson. However, this now seems unlikely since the Yankees traded top catching prospect Mike Heath to the Rangers in the Lyle deal.

Love/hate costs public

A curious love/hate relationship exists between the politician in power and the media that studies, analyzes and second guesses his actions. As Timothy Crouse of Rolling Stone pointed out, every President eventually tries to ignore, smother or destroy the press, simply because the democratic system places them in a position of natural enmity.

Though Canadians do not quite share their southern neighbours' reverence for the "fourth estate" there is no doubt that the press occupies a position of unique influence in a nation that rarely sees its political leaders except through the television lens.

Nowhere is the power of the press illustrated as clearly as in the career of Pierre Trudeau, a politician who has been alternately the golden boy and the golden calf of the media.

Few Canadian political figures have ever been as blessed by media enthusiasm as was the bachelor/swinger of the late sixties. The press fell for the flashy French Canadian, who remained a swinger while still being one of the "three wise men" of Quebec.

But once in office, the honeymoon glow of 'Trudeaumania' faded. It may be a political truism that the longer you're around, the more willing the press is to publicize your errors and pay greater attention to your opposition. Certainly the gulf between the increasingly aloof, suspicious

Trudeau and the ever-parasitic media can be seen to be visibly widening.

Last week Trudeau spoke to a Liberal convention in Toronto and named critics of his government as threats to society. He had enraged the press by promising weekly press conferences and then delaying them for six weeks. When he re-emerged, he moved the whole press corps from the newly renovated press conference centre with its fixed lighting and microphone installations to the older convention centre, where the correspondents sat on fold-out chairs and the Prime Minister's press officer selected the reporters permitted to ask the questions.

These Nixon-like manoeuvres reflect perhaps not so much a desire to cover up secrets or betray the public as much as simply a very human, petty demonstration of frustration.

On their part the press in Canada, particularly the electronic media, has shown on occasion shockingly little regard for responsible news reporting. Employing "advocacy reporting," opinions, snap analysis and outrageous second guessing, the immaculate reporter has become more a member of the political community and less an impartial observer.

For men and women crammed daily into the same political arena, this kind of infighting is understandable and perhaps inevitable. While regrettable, one is tempted to label it a harmless off-shoot of the watchman role of the free press in democracy. As Jefferson once said (loosely paraphrased): "Given the choice between government without newspapers or newspapers without government, I would unhesitatingly choose the latter."

The danger to democracy comes in a situation where this bickering is carried to extremes; where it becomes the primary fixation with either the media or the government.

If the press loses its impartiality it becomes a pressure group in its own right. The public's right to unbiased reporting is endangered. If the government comes to view the press as its specific enemy, it envelops itself in the kind of secrecy and paranoia that characterized the Nixon White House.

Governments come and go. Reporters, too shift assignments regularly. But the people of Canada remain and rely on the openness and accuracy of their governments and their press.

Senate to discuss student input in tenure

By Beth McKenzie

Queen's University Senate will discuss student input into tenure decisions at a special meeting tentatively scheduled for January 18.

The Senate was unable to complete discussion of the report submitted by the Senate Committee on Appointment, Promotion, Tenure and Leave (SCAPT) on regulations governing appointment and tenure at last Thursday's meeting due to the one hour restriction placed on the discussion of this controversial subject.

An earlier SCAPT report says the purpose of tenure is "to permit a professor to carry on free enquiry, discussion and criticism in all academic disciplines and of all institutions in society, including one's own university, without fear of dismissal or penalty." Tenure implies a long-term commitment to the university, making it vital to have tight regulations governing the granting of appointments and tenure.

A high percentage of our regular academic staff received tenure during the period of university expansion in the sixties. However, due to the financial uncertainty of the early seventies, Principal Deutsch put a freeze on the granting of appointments leading to tenure until the financial state of the University became more stable. Since this time the granting of tenure has virtually ceased at Queen's, leaving approximately sixty professors, who have been taken on since then, in a state of "legal limbo." Principal Watts stated, "It is imperative that we resolve the issue this year, for we owe it to these professors to provide a clearer idea of their future here at Queen's." There is a danger that we could lose valuable staff, Watts said.

According to D.A. Soberman, Chairman of SCAPT, "This document provides a more thorough system for bringing in and choosing professors." The proposed procedure is to appoint a new professor for a three year renewable term, after which, if he fulfills his duties, he will be eligible for a second three-year term.

Bomb hoax

by Tim Greenwood

A bomb threat which proved to be a hoax led to the quick but disorderly evacuation of the John Deutsch University Centre last Tuesday afternoon. A phone call made to the Queen's graduate school in which a male voice said a bomb would go off in the Centre at 2:00pm made the evacuation necessary according to Robert Luker, Director of Parking and Security at Queen's.

Members of the University Centre staff cleared the building by setting off fire air alarms, phoning the various offices and commercial operations in the

Motion threatens Outer Council

by Shelly Matson

A notice of motion was proposed at the November 16 Outer Council meeting "to abolish Outer Council in favor of an expanded Inner Council" by including the presidents of the various faculty societies." The motion was moved by Eric Evans and seconded by Kim Fennell and will be up for discussion at the next meeting of Council this Thursday.

Evans told the Journal "If an organization can't discuss its reason for existence, there's something wrong with it. Outer Council is not even representative as such a small number of students vote—probably only 10%. However, I don't seriously expect it to get passed."

The grounds for the motion were that Inner Council formulates the majority of the motions presented and passed by Outer Council. Inner Council has more understanding of the administration of society affairs than Outer Council, and Outer Council spends most of its time simply ratifying Inner Council's decisions.

In addition, the turnout at Outer Council meetings is generally very poor with at least one-third absent. Also the financial affairs of the Society are not in the hands of Outer Council, but rather Inner Council and the Board of Directors.

John Koopman, Vice-president said, "I could come up with a few very, very good arguments in support of it. The first is Outer Council's noted ability this year to waffle, they're adamantly in favour of neutrality and at a large majority of meetings, stimulus and initiative are all coming from Inner Council."

Dave Brown, AMS President said, "Abolishing is a strong word." When he came into office, he felt that the executive should keep policy decision in Outer Council, and in turn, Outer Council members should be prepared for meetings and take a greater role.

"This hasn't worked as well as we thought. A dozen or so members have taken on their responsibilities in a very big way. The ones I'm worried about are those that don't even bother showing up."

Brown said, "Outer Council is not a 'rubber-stamp' for Inner Council. It's open to any member of the student Centre, and knocking on doors in the graduate residence. Sheila Royce, Services Coordinator for the Centre said this managed to clear almost everyone from the building. However, Wanda Kaye, Senior Secretary for the Centre, said she knew of one uninformed individual who weathered the scare in the AMS office.

The Police, who had been notified immediately, and the Queen's security staff, completed a cursory search of the public areas of the building which failed to turn up anything. Anything more than a superficial search was impossible due to lack of time. Luker noted, adding that "a bomb can look like almost anything." A unit from the Fire Department remained outside the Centre on standby. About ten minutes after the two o'clock deadline had passed the building was reopened.

The candidate for tenure is judged on the quality of his scholarly work and research, his contributions to the department and the university community, and his teaching abilities.

Provisions are made for unsuccessful applicants to retain their positions for one year, giving them time to find other employment. Those who feel that an unfair decision was made may appeal to an outside arbitrator, designated by the university. The case will be governed "Inner Council must provide leadership, but Outer Council reps are closer to what's going on around campus," Brown continued. He pointed out that Outer Council had been effective in modifying the policy papers to the OFS but that it had not generated anything with regard to the AMS court review.

Brown concluded by saying that,

by the Ontario Labour Relations Act.

Dean Sinclair of the Faculty of Arts and Science commented after the presentation of the report, "There needs to be clearer mention of the obligations demanded by tenure, in order to ensure that professors continue to demonstrate the high standards which earned them tenure."

The student Caucus of the Senate voiced its concern that the procedures outlined in the report may lead to the tenuring of mediocre professors. They feel the standards to be met are not clearly enough defined, so that decisions may be swayed by emotional factors rather than practicality.

Ross Bartlett, President of the Arts and Science Undergraduate Society, suggested that a provision for periodic re-evaluation of professors may ensure that high standards of teaching continue.

"The motion was designed to bring body to make a motion at Outer Council. "Inner Council must provide leadership, but Outer Council reps are closer to what's going on around campus," Brown continued. ## US - USSR restrained - Semple

by Warren Everson

The United States government has shown remarkable restraint in its involvement in international affairs over the last two years. Though the reasons for this are varied, the decision to avoid intervention has in most cases been a good one.

This was part of an analysis of the world political situation as seen through the eyes of Robert Semple, Foreign Affairs editor of the New York Times when he spoke at Dupuis Hall on Monday.

"Vietnam did nothing to change human nature," said Semple. "The almost limitless capacity of people to be gripped by insane passion remains. But while the world was concerned with the confrontation of Washington and Moscow, other forces were at work. When we finally looked around, we saw problems like regional disparity in Africa and religious war in the Mid-East."

The East versus West confrontation of the fifties and sixties is virtually gone Semple says. Instead we find China aggressively courting Japan, Malaysia Thailand and Singapore. The Chinese are at loggerheads with Russia all over Asia.

At the same time blacks threaten race war in at least three places in Africa. Recently, attention focused on revolt in Iran. The Middle East situation still demands constant attention and decision making.

"There are a lot of reasons why the United States has not become actively involved in any of these situations," said Semple. "Sometimes it's ignorance, sometimes tact, sometimes confusion."

The editor then went on to list the major theatres of American interest, and explained the rational for avoiding involvement in each case.

South East Asia is probably out of the American share of involvement, Semple maintained. Even if China and Russia were not so heavily engaged in the area, it would probably still be politically impossible for an American President to intervene there.

"Afghanistan has also turned into one of the major strategic sites in the world and a cause of great concern for the policy makers in the state department," Semple noted, and said that this was one of the areas in which the "Domino theory" has re-emerged.

But we don't know what the Russians are planning, and whenever we don't know what the Russians are doing we do nothing ourselves."

Iran was one case where Carter might have acted in old fashioned ways had he sensed the Shah's problems, he explained, but the CIA told the White House six weeks before the revolt that no serious threats to the Shah could be seen. Carter was then faced with the prospect of acting in ignorance, and instead merely sent a message of support.

"Thus in Asia our reluctance to become actively involved stems from confusion and ignorance. And in the Middle East, we are restrained by a kind of tact and delicacy."

In Africa, however, the United States has made tough choices. Concerned over both the presence of Cubans and the strategic importance of the Horn of Africa, the United States has nevertheless decided not to involve itself in what are essentially tribal disputes. Semple feels this choice was a wise one, though obviously not final.

"I was asked the other day what move the Soviets might make that would force a Western counter move and lead to possible disaster. In response, I think it could happen in those areas that we don't think a great deal about now," Semple noted that Marshall Tito warned at the Belgrade conference that if World War Three was to break out, it would start as a small "proxy war" in some out-of-the-way country.

"The other possibility is racial war in Africa. I think in Rhodesia, South Africa, and South West Africa, all the ingredients of so massive a racial war are present. And if that happens, the reluctant Russian Bear may find the situation irresistible. Rhodesia and South Africa are dominoes that I do believe in."

Semple came to Queen's as the first speaker in the SCOOP series, sponsored by the AMS. The series is co-organized by Clayton Jaeger and Vickie Steele, and will feature at least one other top journalist, Stanley Swinton of the Associated Press, before Christmas.

$5,000 for business PHD

by Diana Coulter

Michael Withey will have few problems finding funds to put him through his second year of the Queen's business school's new PhD program now that he has won the $5,000 Xerox of Canada Fellowship Award.

Xerox of Canada has raised the value of the award from $2,000 for the next five years as its contribution to Queen's Quest, the university's current fund-raising campaign.

The World in Brief

by Sandi Arthurs
Ottawa - The cost of mailing a letter will rise to 17 cents as of next April 1, announced Postmaster-General Gilles Lamontagne last week. John Rodriguez (NDP, Nickel Belt) made an interesting analogy from this proposal. He considered asking this Postmaster-General to run the postal services is much like asking Evel Knievel to park your car.
Guyana - California congressman Leo Ryan and three newsmen were murdered November 18 as they tried to escort unhappy settlers from the camp of a U.S. religious sect called the People's Temple. An estimated 909 bodies of Rev. Jones' (the sect's founder) followers who committed suicide or were murdered are now stored in the U.S. awaiting identification. Rev. Jones, his wife and one of his children were among the first bodies to be found at the Jonestown camp.

Canada - Tony Gabriel, the 29 year-old Canadian born Ottawa Rough Rider received the awards for most outstanding player and most outstanding Canadian player in the Canadian Football League this year. Gabriel is the first ever to receive the Canadian-player-of-the-year award three years in a row. Gabriel owes his high position in the CFL to his record; he has gained more than 1,000 yards as a pass receiver for the fourth consecutive season.

Tel Aviv - Generally the dilemma is yet to be solved. The Israeli cabinet has expressed its full approval of the draft peace treaty with Egypt as put forth by the United States. Unfortunately Egyptian officials have stated that the peace treaty will not be signed until Israel changes its requirement of a timetable for resolving the Palestinian question.

Collins Bay - Two prison officials were killed and one seriously injured at the Collins Bay penitentiary last Sunday. Inmate Daniel MacDonald, age 36 apparently "flipped out" and knifed the three victims. Dead are prison guard Francis Eustace, age 56 and cook Paul Maurice, age 40. Assistant Food Services Supervisor Frank Duval, age 56, is in stable condition at Kingston General Hospital.

Washington - The Environmental Protection Agency has named over 40 points in the United States as danger zones because of chemical wastes that had been dumped and buried in the ground. The investigation was triggered as a result of the tragedy in Niagara Falls, New York State last year where chemicals began to rise up from the ground in the school yard and other areas of subdivision. This was due to a chemical company dumping chemical wastes in the Ford Canal 40 years ago. Numerous children were born with deformities as a result of exposure.

Ottawa - Prime Minister Trudeau has named three new ministers and is giving six other ministers different or additional jobs. He has eliminated the department of Urban Affairs and created a new Board of Economic Development Ministers. These rather major changes made by Trudeau have been referred to as a "Cabinet Shuffle" which could be due to his party's defeats in last month's by-elections.

Snooker whiz at Queen's

by Sheila Croft

Five challengers to Canadian Women's Snooker Champion, Natalie Stelmach, were put under the table at her open demonstration in the House of Commons at the John Deutsch University Centre last Wednesday.

Natalie's challengers at her demonstration were Greg Richmond of the Chemistry Dept., Bill Woodside from the Math Dept., Nancy Caldwell and Ken Todd, both students at Queen's, and Joe Laforet, a student and snooker instructor. She beat them all with ease. At one point she even completed a shot looking in the opposite direction.

Says Natalie, "I began playing the game four and a half years ago when I was fifteen, and began playing in tournaments within the following year. It became a real addiction, and I just feel great about it!"

Not only has Natalie been the Canadian Women's Snooker

Champion for the past three years, she has also won the Canadian National Exhibition Championship for two consecutive years. She even enjoys practicing a steady four hours per day; "it is a complete challenge to learn, my mind is always concentrating on different aspects of the game."

Natalie will be travelling to England next June for the World Snooker Championship and her enthusiasm and ability is obvious, "I plan on winning the world and then making snooker my profession."

The Program Committee for the Centre, and Cloverleaf Lanes in Kingston, sponsored Natalie's three day visit from Sudbury, Ontario, in which time she participated in four workshops. Two were held at Cloverleaf Lanes, and two at Queen's for both the Women's and Men's Snooker Leagues.

Profs want two ministries

The Ontario Confederation of University Faculty Associations has recommended that the ministries of Education and Colleges and Universities remain separate, but under one minister. The OCUFA also recommended, in their news release, that a committee, consisting of representatives from all parts of education, labour and business, be set up to advise the minister on the desired goals of education.

The OCUFA believes that a single minister is desirable because it would provide an "overall political coordination and perspective in education" that is vital at this time. At the same time, they think that two separate ministries are advisable because "the benefits of a merger at this time might be outweighed by the disruption it would inevitably produce."

The association also expressed fears, in their press release, that any movement to control the universities would cause "a social loss far outweighing any compensatory savings in administration expense."

OSAP keeps students waiting

by Elinor Mahoney
AMS Researcher

Computer foul-ups, vague policy guidelines and "inexcusable backlogs" have caused the Association of Student Awards Officers to lose faith in the new OSAP plan. In an unprecedented letter to the Ministry of Colleges and Universities, the association's chairman, David Butler, stated that awards officers were at their "wits end".

"We are fed-up with being the Ministry's scapegoats, we are fed-up with taking the daily abuse...we are tired of seeing our students made to suffer because of inadequate Ministry planning and management."

Mr. Butler listed ten major faults with the program's implementation, ranging from non-functioning computer programs to reactive policy-making, and informed the Minister that awards officers were "discouraged to the point of no longer believing what we are doing is even worth the effort."

Accusing the Ministry of being unconcerned about the three to four month processing time, Mr. Butler summed up, "We have reached the point where we take every optimistic pronouncement from the Ministry with cynicism. We no longer believe any OSAP assessment produced by your Ministry is correct."

A copy of the Ministry's reply has been obtained by the Journal. In it, J. Gordon Parr, Deputy Minister, accuses Butler of "unfair bias", and makes a scarcely veiled threat:

"If you wish to adopt a... stance, in which, unexpectedly you write damning condemnations of our staff, you must expect a response in kind. From time to time... Students Awards Officers have their difficulties, their bad moments, and even make mistakes. Shall I instruct my staff to follow these occasions with letters to all your members, the Presidents of Universities, the Chairmen of Boards, and political leaders?"

In addition to sending copies of this letter to the usual government officials, Parr sent copies to the president and the chairman of the Board of trustees of the university which employs Mr. Butler.

The situation which prompted Mr. Butler's strong letter is the failure of the Ministry's computer program to handle the applications of students for financial assistance. In spite of Bette Stephenson's announcement on September 14th that the backlog of applications and incorrect assessments would be cleared up by the beginning of October, over 11,000 students have yet to hear anything from the Ministry regarding their loans/grants, and 4,700 applications which were incorrectly processed are still awaiting re-assessment. None of the appeals have yet been processed, meaning that thousands of students will not receive until January money to which they were entitled in September.

At Western, between 500 and 600 students are waiting for their awards and the university has dipped into its contingency fund to distribute about $52,000 in short-term loans. York University has earmarked more than $30,000 for its students. Across the province, approximately 15% of OSAP applicants have had their applications delayed by computer breakdown and error; in response to a letter of protest by NDP Education Critic, David Cooke, Dr. Stephenson noted testily that, "Your letter fails to note that the majority of OSAP applications were processed without incident."

THE SITUATION AT QUEEN'S

In a letter sent last month to the Director of Student Awards, Clarkson, Bob Merrifield, our student awards officer outlined the situation at Queen's.

"We presently have 551 Queen's OSAP applicants awaiting some form of response from the MCU. Even more critical is the fact that of that number awaiting replies, 146 applications are still outstanding which were sent to the MCU for processing prior to August 31st."

Mr. Merrifield is critical of the Ministry's failure to deal effectively with the computer's faulty programming. "I am also being told," he wrote, "that a good number of these cases have been rebatched by the MCU as many as 4 times, for resubmission to the OSAP computer system. I fail to understand why these cases keep rejecting and am upset at the fact that MCU personnel seem content to keep putting these 'problem' cases back into the regular system again and again...Would it not seem in the best interest of our students to pull these cases after two rebatches and have

Moot courts try students

Queen's Law School has just completed its first series of annual Moot Courts. Second year law students participated in a simulated Court of Appeal in MacDonald Hall.

The moot court is a required part of the second year curriculum. It closely resembles the official Ontario Court of Appeal in both format and substance.

Miss M.A. Murray, Director of Moot Courts, views the main purpose of the courts as giving the students the opportunity to research the present case law. "It means getting up on your feet and being able to present your argument, as well as to sustain a number of questions from the bench."

The Moot Court is a tradition, dating back to the inception of Queen's Law School in 1957. In the early years, students were expected to do a moot each year. However, with the increase in students and the expansion of the curriculum, this is no longer feasible. Moots are now assigned to second year students.

Cases may be factual or fictitious, covering a point of law the faculty adviser deems important. One case, presented by four female students, and presided over by a female judge and faculty adviser, concerned the actual case of a girl prohibited from playing in the Ontario Minor Hockey Association.

Upon registering in September, each student casts a ballot for the type of law and time slot preferred. Cases sample constitutional, administrative, taxation, evidence, family, and labour law.

The 150 students are then divided into groups of four, assigned a case and faculty adviser, and given two weeks in which to prepare.

Two students are designated "appellates", the other two "respondents". Both sides are given a document explaining the reasons for judgement. The appellates give notice of appeal, and the two groups exchange "factums", in which their arguments are outlined point by point. Both have (the appellates and respondents are given) fifty minutes in which to state their case.

The court is presided over by a judge. Lawyers from Kingston and the surrounding area, many of whom are Queen's alumni, volunteer to adjudicate.

The judge offers constructive criticism, evaluates each student's presentation, and passes judgment on the case itself. Although no credit is given for the moot, students must pass in order to continue in law school. The courts are video-taped so that students, faculty and judges may appraise each performance.

"Students respond very well," stated Murray. That the court is taken very seriously is reflected in the amount of time students spend in preparation and in the evident nervous tension.

Roughly forty courts are held per year. The second half will be held in late January. The moot courts are open to the public, and are located in room 105 of MacDonald Hall.

Students may independently compete in other moots during the course of the year. The best second year mooters compete for the Trophy Moot. The Shield Moot was established by the Frontenac Law Association in 1957. Canadian law students interested in international law may compete in the Jessup International Moot.

On a provincial basis, Ontario law students vie for the Gale Trophy, awarded by The Honourable G.A. Gale, former Chief Justice of Ontario, to the most effective counsel. The Gale Trophy was won by Queen's Law School in 1977.

The Ministry's reply is frustratingly beside the point. "While it is true that we have submitted applications more than once, as many as three and four times, it is faster for us to do this rather than do manual assessments."

Mr. Merrifield also told the Journal that he has two boxes of appeals (total three hundred) which have not even been sent to the Ministry. "Normally these appeals are completed at registration time and sent immediately to MCU. However the backlog of applications has prevented this from occurring." Thus every student who applied for exemption from the contribution from summer earnings will have to wait until at least January to get the additional funds to which he is entitled.

Bowl fans appreciated

The Editor

It has been ten years since I first started school at Queen's, and also ten years since I last attended a College Bowl in which the Golden Gaels competed (and won). Now, it is possible that in 1968 I was too much a part of what was happening to be actually able to stand back and appreciate fully the youth and enthusiasm of the spectators, but I honestly don't ever recall seeing fans who were so lively, humorous, uninhibited, cheerful, eager, and yet still considerate of others: No one puked, no one fought, no one went after the cops, and when informed that they were marring others' enjoyment of the game, any people "blocking the view" usually sat (or fell) down quite quickly.

Only in my first year do I recall there being school spirit comparable to that demonstrated at yesterday's College Bowl, and (coincidentally) both years the Gaels won it. Someone else can try to analyze the correlation between a winning football team and a spirited student body; I just want to thank to students - as well as one hell of a good football team, of course - for giving me and many others one of the most enjoyable afternoons we have ever passed.

Congratulations to the team; congratulations to the students. The realization may unfortunately be somewhat belated, but you have made me proud to have gone to Queen's. Thank you.

Yours truly,

New image for epilepsy needed

Speaking as one of Canada's 230,000 epileptics, I am criticizing the Ontario Epilepsy Association in Toronto. It needs to adopt the image of a more professional and productive organization to gain better public support.

One way to improve their image is by issuing higher quality literature and engaging a neurologist to compile a pamphlet on epilepsy.

The Epilepsy Association should make the public aware of progress in treating this "disease" by taking free T.V. time on community access channels, to broadcast such information as:

"Twenty-five years ago today, the Montreal Neurological Institute, was the first Canadian Hospital to acquire an E.E.G. (electroencephalogram), a valuable diagnostic tool for treating epilepsy."

This Canadian association should establish a fund centre for epilepsy and related diseases and request television viewers, in paid T.V. time periods, to donate to specific addresses for pure neurological research in Canada and the United States.

This organization should consider epilepsy as a disease, as does the Epilepsy Federation of America. It can be considered as a "disorder" in only a most technical sense of the interpretation.

In Canada today, 16,600 or more, children will have epilepsy before they reach the age of four years.

Match-box salvation

by Julia Grunau

It is about that time of year again when Christmas exams are raising their fleshless heads and grinning their skeleton grins at hapless and terrified students; and it is about this time of year that students take refuge from those spectres by either lighting cigarette after cigarette and contemplating life, or by dousing themselves with gasoline and setting themselves on fire. It is my contention that neither of these activities (both more or less detrimental to your health) need trouble you. Merely take a moment before you decide to commit either and look at the pack of matches you will be holding in your hand.

Read it. If you do a little shopping on upper Princess Street, you may have wandered into a cigar store or two, and you may have bought some matches. These matches could be your salvation! Examine their attractive flaps.

If you have bought the right sort of matches—not the silly expensive wooden ones with Zodiac signs or old 1900ish prints on them, but the real nitty-gritty down-to-business matches that construction workers use—you will see graven on their packs: FREE CAREER BOOKLET! or 15 WAYS TO SUCCESS! or best of all, BE A MASTER AUTO MECHANIC!

Obviously you are saved. Christmas exams need trouble you no more. You Probably the best-sounding $150. speaker ever.

The Advent/1 is a smaller, less expensive version of the most popular and most imitated speaker in the country: the New Advent Loudspeaker. It uses the same woofer and the same tweeter as the New Advent, but in a smaller cabinet.

The results are nothing short of amazing. Its smooth, rich, wide-range sound sets new performance standards for its price range. It literally out-performs speakers selling for three times as much.

Pierre, Merlin, and magic make for a miraculous economic recovery

by Rob Reynolds

Pierre has spoken and—poof—Canada is to have an industrial strategy. This at least is the implication with the creation of the Board of Economic Development Minister's in the cabinet shuffle announced last Friday.

Although less than specific the duties of the board will be to examine all proposals for economic development before they go to Cabinet.

The chief wizard is Robert (Merlin) Andras who is designated as President of the Superministry. You see it is termed a Superministry not because Andras is Thunder Bay's answer to Clark Kent but rather because the Board consists of six ministers whose departments touch on economic development; Industry Trade and Commerce (IT and C), Energy Mines and Resources and Revenue to name a few.

It all looks very very impressive, moreover it looks as if the Liberals are coming to understand the problems that plague the country. However, magicians also look like they are creating rabbits from hats.

Why the cynicism? (Me, cynical?) Examine the timing. The day after the Auditor-General's report, which is always damning for the government,

Quiet pub quiet again

The Editor:

I would like to respond to last week's article "Live at the Quiet Pub". At the present time my intention is not to continue live performances in the McLaughlin Room for the following reasons:

1) The room has not yet been adequately sound proofed, and amplified music can disturb the residents of the rooms located directly above the McLaughlin Room.

2) We have no consensus that live music in the McLaughlin Room is desired by staff and students.

3) It appears that live entertainment does not increase room revenues, while the equipment rental necessary represents a substantial expense.

Considering how close the Pub is operating to a financial break-even, increasing costs without increasing revenue would be irresponsible. I organized the week of entertainment (Nov. 13-17) as an experiment and thoroughly enjoyed it. I would like to thank all those who participated. However, given the present circumstances, it is unlikely that live entertainment will be featured in the McLaughlin Room in the near future.

If anyone wishes to discuss this further please feel free to contact me.

"Academic freedom demanded"

Tenure for students!

by Rory Cattanach

A grass roots movement intent upon securing tenure for Queen's students has reached a feverish pitch as the Senate begins its final deliberations on SCAPTL, a document outlining a tenure policy for the university. The student group, commonly known as the Student Committee Researching Academic Procedures (SCRAP), is outraged at the blatant inequalities of SCAPTL. Their foremost objective lies with the document's failure to provide some type of tenuring policy for students here at Queen's.

SCRAP's demands are simple and straightforward. They seek academic freedom for Queen's students. SCAPTL offers to our professors freedom to teach, freedom to criticize, freedom to research, and freedom to study. Meanwhile, under the same roof, students are shackled with compulsory assignments, oppressed by deadlines, coerced by marks, and threatened with banishment. Why should students be told what to produce, when to produce it, and then submit it to be judged under some preset criteria with dismissal for those who do not achieve these arbitrarily set standards?

SCRAP's procedures for the tenuring of students are both fair and effective. Every student will be required to apply for tenure after six weeks of classes. He/she will be judged by a committee composed of fellow students, close friends, and family. Faculty will be consulted somewhat broadly on all applicants before a final decision has been made. Any student receiving an adverse decision has the right to appeal. If he/she chooses to exercise that right, a coin will be flipped with the onus upon the applicant to call it either heads or tails. Depending upon the result of the toss, the student will be asked to either leave the university before the Padre's Carol Queen's or be awarded tenure at Queen's.

SCRAP is prepared to fight heroically for its objectives. It will no longer tolerate intellectual oppression by those who are smugly protected by a deep moat surrounding their Ivory Tower. Students demand the liberty and freedom to reach their academic potential. The message is clear: Ronald L. Watts, either tenure for students or SCRAP SCAPTL.

I am sorry that I did not see the matchbooks before I enrolled at Queen's. If I had, I would have been a professional something or other by now, not a student terrified of Xmas joys; I could breathe out after a week of breathing in; I could relax and digest my food after a meal instead of rushing to the water closet; I, too could MOVE UP. ## Television Islamism

by Tyseer Ali

It was really shocking for me to see the CBS's "Pirate" I sincerely believe that everyone is entitled to his own opinion, but I also know that religion, at least Islam, is not something which varies according to people's opinions. It is hard to believe that all this falsehood about Islam was due to the author's ignorance of this religion, and that it was not deliberately presented.

The very first thing in which a Moslem has to believe is that there is one, and only one, God to all Mankind. Throughout the ages, He sent his creatures different prophets, including Moses, Jesus and Mohammed (all the same). This one God loves us all, gives us our minds to think and then judges our deeds according to our abilities. Thus, the last scene in which the Moslem man tells a Jew "Your God" with the Jew correcting the Moslem before dying: "there is only one God", shows clearly that either the author wrote a book centered around Islam without knowing its very basic belief, or he wanted to present Islam in contrast to the Jewish religion. If the God for Muslims could not handle the affairs of Jews - then, he is far from being a God.

A long time waiting for Long John Baldry

The Editor,

As most people may know, Kingston (because of its population and geographic location is not a magnet for big name musical groups let alone top-notch musical talent. During my two years here at Queen's I have yet to witness and experience groups privileged enough to occupy the above mentioned categories (Jimmy Buffet excluded). However, last Tuesday was special (in more ways than one) for Long John Baldry came to town.

The time was just right as Kingston's musical drought had lasted long enough. Unfortunately the place was not The Underground Pub, although providing an intimate environment, could not accommodate the people who wanted to see the show. Or could it?

At 12 midnight a huge crowd (maybe 35 people) were denied entrance to the already overcrowded Pub. As time passed this mighty sea of people reduced its number to 6. Even as people left the Pub, no one standing outside was allowed behind the closed doors. I am highly impressed at the manner in which the AMS constables kept this potentially dangerous, raging mob under control.

"We can't let anyone in. We must uphold policy. It's already a zoo in there," blurted one constable in a rather loud and rude manner as he pushed people out of the doorway and shut the doors. I was glad to see that "policy" was upheld outside the Pub because it sure as Hell was not enforced inside!

The fear of having the Pub's licence suspended or removed had already been cast to the wind as the Underground was filled beyond its legal seating capacity. The Pub Manager and the AMS constables seemed worried that granting admission to six people after last call for the purpose of listening to Baldry's encore performance could not have in any possible way increased the chances of the pub's licence being suspended.

Policy must be upheld: throughout or not at all; there can be no half way. And remember, we will probably never have the chance to experience Baldry again in that unique situation.

from the Islamic point of view.

In return, a muslim women is expected to be faithful to her family, just as the man is. Thus, committing adultery is a grave sin. The hard punishment imposed by Islam is to ensure that adultery does not become a common phenomenon as it has in the western world. This death punishment applies equally to both men and women.

Finally, I would like to stress the fact that, unlike Jews, Muslims are governed by the same rules in their relations with Muslims as with non-Muslims. Thus, no sane Muslim man would allow his wife to sleep with whom ever she liked except for Jews. For a true sane Muslim, adultery is adultery, be it with a Muslim or a Jew, and deserves the same punishment for the man and the woman.

Finally, I hope that Canadians base their judgement of Islam on the true religion and the behaviour of its true followers, not on what they see in such movies.

Bumping along on a 30 mile camel caravan to Memphis, the ancient capital of Egypt

by Tim Turner
Adventure is not in the guidebook and beauty is not on the map. Nov. 28, 1977. A year ago today. Our trip had only begun and here we were on the high seas. Under gale winds that were blowing up 20' to 25' waves, we and the rest of the crew from Polygamous Lady were crossing the Alinuhaha Channel in the handful of granola and ready to take over. "Tell me Bob I'm not dreaming this. Weren't we in Ottawa just two weeks ago? Hey buddy you're going to like it up here. just watch for a crasher every 5th or 6th wave and keep her on 310 degrees. Good Luck". That was the beginning of a ten

It's a shame that a race so broadly conceived should end with most lives so narrowly confined. Why should we waste childhood on the children, poverty on the poor, or woods on the woodsman.

Hawaiian Islands, notorious for its wild reckless manner even at the best of times.

It was three AM and tied into safety line the tiller was mine. A swoosh...and another 100 gallons of Pacific Blue came rushing into the cockpit. I had long since given up trying to stay dry even with the rain jacket on. The stars were just out of reach of my fingers in a heaven bounded only by water.

Struggling to get back on the 310 degree bearing and nearing exhaustion the most exhilarating fatigue I've ever felt my brother Bob appeared in the hatchway with a mile month odyssey that would take in 20 countries and cover 40,000 miles.

With lightweight soft frame packs (30 lbs) we travelled unrestricted free from airport lockers, youth hostels, or, if lucky, roadways.

We had decided from the outset that hiking would be a priority wherever possible. Subsequently we discovered the thrills of hiking Hawaii, tramping New Zealand, and trekking India and Nepal.

The question of where to go was never really answered. No destinations were assured with the exceptions of New Zealand, Nepal, and Afghanistan. Those were magical names that Bob and I were set on getting to.

Everything else was a variable and dependant of time, and reports from fellow travellers.

You discover early that itineraries are continually being modified and altered. As John Steinbeck once said, "It's not you that takes the trip. It's the trip that takes you."

Thought was given to the general route. We went West as opposed to East for two main reasons. First and foremost was that winter was approaching and Hawaii and the Southern hemisphere looked appealing.

Secondly we wanted to work within a low budget which automatically discounted Europe.

New Zealand was paradise. The Kiwi's, as the New Zealanders are called, due to the isolation of their island often feel out of touch, so having visitors is second only to travelling for them. This hospitality to foreigners makes hitching throughout New Zealand a dream. Even for two guys it was never more than ten minutes on the roadside.

Australia was a land of the meatpie, of bushillies, of suffocating heat, of a "no worries, mate" breed of people, of emptiness and overwhelming distances and of magnificent beaches, all of which give it an endearing charm. Travellers find that they spend much of their time in Australia just crossing this country.

Up until this point in the trip the accommodation costs had been practically nil. In 130 days we had paid for accommodation on 10 occasions.

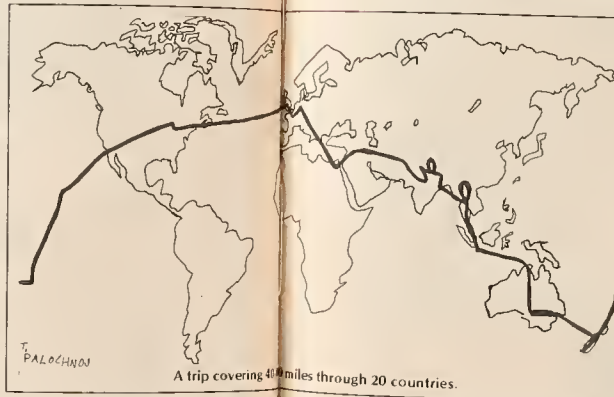

Otherwise it was any place we could find a flat place to sleep. Often people who we would meet on route would invite us back to their homes.

Asia is a mindbender. Your senses are bombarded by so much that is unrelatable. Totally new experiences that bear little similarity with your past.

The pigs, chickens, geese, ducks, mongrels, cows and donkeys in rich abundance were an integral part of the Asian scene.

"Hello meester", "best price, sai, you buy over here sai, very good" or "you want to buy hash? - change money?" became every day cliches.

We took advantage of the motorcycle rentals at $4 per day per bike on Bali, Indonesia, to get out and see what we had only experienced in the pages of the National Geographic before.

A trip covering 40,000 miles through 20 countries.

It was a world of temples and religious festivals, of incense and demons. On passing a funeral procession one day, we asked what the young man had died from. The reply came back from a fellow my own age who attributed the man's death to the spirits. A road demon had forced him to lose control of his motorcycle which crashed and killed him.

People are everywhere. Nowhere is this better manifested than on an Asian train. Where one might expect two people to sit, in this situation the Indonesians had found room for four. Added to that there were two old women at our feet, a young girl under the seat and a small boy above us in the luggage rack.

Consequently Asians don't have the same sense of privacy that Europeans feel is a birthright. Westerners are brought up with great feelings of space around them, for the farmer there is more and easier money in opium than in rice production.

India, for your average middle class Queen's student, is a shocker. No longer can you hide from reality. It's all here and happening in front of your eyes. Poverty crawls at your feet. An emaciated woman stumbles up as you leave your hotel one morning. She has lost all her fingers to leprosy and is crying out through her hollow eyes for "baksheesh" or free money.

You turn and walk away and wonder how you could ever be so cold and callous. It's rather ironical that exposure to these wretched conditions can allow you to lose your sensitivity and compassion. There are numerous ways of rationalizing your actions, but the fact remains you ignored a plea for help. It's a dilemma you live with all through Asia but especially in India.

Mt. Everest is a long way from the oppressive heat in India during the month of May. Having flown from Katmandu, an enchanting city, to an airstrip at 8,000 ft. we trekked according to an acclimatization schedule of 1000-1500 feet a day.

In the years 1973 and 1974 15 trekkers had died of altitude sickness. Therefore it is important that you let your body adjust gradually to the low oxygen levels.

Base camp for the Everest Expeditions is at 18,500 feet. Here we met two Austrian climbers who only 4 days before had made the first ascent of Everest at 29,028 feet with no oxygen. To hear their story, an exciting one hunched over a hot tea was a rare and unforgettable memory. The Himalayas are like no other mountain range in the world. Their heights are awesome and their beauty unparalleled.

In the 6 weeks leading up to and including that trek, both of us had lost 30 lbs. That must have had something to do with the purification of one's soul that they say occurs

There is nothing like a New Zealand suspension bridge to make you appreciate solid ground with a Himalayan experience.

Afghanistan provided another blow to the mind and senses. There is nothing like a snowcapped mountain amidst sprawling desert to stir your blood.

These were a fierce wild-eyed people with a friendly manner. The aura of the place demanded that we dress Afghan-turban, vest, bloomers and sandals and ride horseback.

High in the Hindu Kush we found a place where a Jella would loan out how long.

We began to feel the presence of women again. Silenced and suppressed by their tradition and culture in Asia women are hardly a dominant entity for the traveller.

Gone are the living streets of the East. Motorized traffic predominates. Life has all been all but packaged away and death has been hidden from view.

Effectively the trip was over now. Three weeks in Europe, spread

Long John Baldry

by Brent Lavictoire

He's a vocalist of incredible versatility, he's a man of extreme charisma, he's a performer of long standing and unparalleled fame; he's Long John Baldry and last Tuesday evening he was here. The Underground may never be the same.

Known primarily for his unique career launching ability Baldry has played with the best and was instrumental in making some of today's music giants famous. Rod Stewart he discovered signing in a subway station, all of the original Rolling Stones used to gather at his place to jam and to listen to his blues records, and Elton John cut his eye teeth with Baldry. Back in the very early sixties an unknown group named The Beatles used to perform the "intermission" set for Baldry's club appearances.

At the Underground last Tuesday some of the audience were certainly aware of Baldry's fame and reputation as a showman of incredible talent and they greeted his appearance with thunderous applause. From this point on the pub became pandemonium for the four hundred witnesses who participated in a spectacle of musical delights never before witnessed at a Queen's event. It was inspiring to see every single person in the Underground off their butts and into the pure boogie-woogie of Baldry and his Band. When was the last time you saw people banging beer mugs against the suspended air ducts?

Vocally, Baldry possesses that rare ability to whip filters into and out of his voice; his range is every bit as remarkable and he demonstrated this sheer ability to his fullest extent for the frenzied pub audience. As one might have expected, the musicians Baldry surrounded himself with Tuesday evening were, if not greater, equal to Baldry's talent. Piano player Roy Young asked the crowd to "get your hands together and shake the whole place apart." We very nearly succeeded. His three "solo" numbers, "Good Golly Miss Molly", "Slow Down" and "Whole Lota Shakin'" were played and received with such enthusiasm that I doubt Little Richard or Jerry Lee Lewis could have done better. Guitarist Mick Clark provided a real treat with his truly English, Ron Wood style of fast licks and blazing leads. Vocalist Kathi McDonald (who has a superb solo album titled Insane Asylum) rivalled Baldry's vocal prominence all night and surpassed his craziness. James Lee Fish and Paul Brown Jr. bassist and drummer respectively, were confined to the background for the most part but the influence of their steady beat drove the band relentlessly through a number of rock and boogie tunes the likes of which haven't been heard for years.

Perhaps the greatest tribute to Baldry I could credit to Tuesday's performance is that when he finished "Don't Try to Lay no Boogie Woogie on the King of Rock and Roll" nobody in the Underground could doubt the fact that Baldry is the King of Rock and Roll.

Long, long, long John Baldry. After his electrifying performance Tuesday John briefly lowered his jeans for us; lo and behold, he was wearing long johns.

M F tight at Grant

by Mike Calich

A week ago yesterday Maynard Ferguson and his orchestra showed those of us lucky enough to attend the concert just why this is the hottest (and probably the most commercially successful) big band on the road today. The notoriously difficult acoustics of Grant Hall seemed to pose no difficulty whatever for the band which was originally slotted to perform in Jock Hart's Arena. Insufficient ticket sales, no doubt, related to the College Bowl of the previous weekend, necessitated the move to Grant Hall. It was a rare opportunity, seated in an audience of less than 800 people, to hear a performer who packs many times that number into such places as Ontario Place Forum.

Maynard's band played a wide variety of tunes, many from their most recent album, Carnival. The ensemble playing was tight and exciting and the soloists, in particular Mike Migliori on alto sax, John Cudini on guitar, and (of course)

Maynard himself, primarily on trumpet, were outstanding. Selections played during the fairly lengthy concert included arrangements of Zawinul's "Birdland" (made popular by the group Weather Report), Sonny Rollins' "Airegin", and the standard ballad "Stella by Starlight", which featured an astounding trombone solo by Phil Gray, a recent Humber College graduate. From the other end of the jazz spectrum (maybe even from beyond it) came disco arrangements of "Battlestar Galactica" and "Somewhere Over the Rainbow", and as an encore, the "Theme from Rocky" which earned Maynard's band the dubious distinction of making it to the top 40. Whatever people thought of the decidedly commercial direction in which Maynard's music has turned over the years, there were very few disappointed faces in the crowd after the show. It's tough to argue with superb musicianship and real energy, and Maynard had them both.

Guitarist Yepes enchants faithful

by Julia Grunau

I would like to be Narciso Yepes' guitar because he treats it the way I would like to be treated. I would not like to be his guitar because from him I could have no secrets.

Narciso Yepes' concert in Grant Hall on Friday night was as magnificent an evening of classical guitar as anyone could have hoped for, not only did he play with the exquisite technique and delicacy for which he has been famous since his debut in 1947, but the program was immediately acceptable to an audience of more-or-less classical symphonies.

He stepped onto the stage quietly, dressed in a tuxedo. He sat down on the simple chair in the centre of the stage and without an introduction of any sort, began to play. Throughout the concert—ten compositions, the majority by Spanish composers—he said nothing, but acknowledged the applause by a bow after each piece. Only at the first of the three encores did he begin to talk a little about the music; the three standing ovations were smiled at but greeted silently.

Yepes played with the confidence and assurance that only a lifetime student of the guitar could possess, and yet did not at all seem to dominate the music. Rather, it pieces, the most innovative and new seemed as though he lured the essence of the notes out into the open air, where they hung for a moment before retreating into the memory; nothing in either the performance or the presentation rang dances and gigue, and he played Bach as Bach must have dreamed of being played.

Narciso Yepes is not only for classical devotees. He could be a revelation for the average rock-bred youth; for while Jimmy Page, Ted Nugent and Paul Stanley wrap their guitars around their audiences and take them captive, Narciso Yepes causes audiences to follow him blindly, like lemmings into the sea

Jazz Ensemble in Grant Hall

Queen's Jazz Ensemble, under its Founder Duane Bates, will give two concerts in Grant Hall on Wednesday 29 November: the first at 12:30 noon and an evening performance at 8:30.

The concert which will feature contemporary big-band sounds encompasses all styles of today's jazz, such as the famous jazz composer John Coltrane's up-tempo piece "Lazy Bird"; Tom Wintel's "Prelude" plus improvisation with its experimental thirteen-beat repeating pattern. Sure to be popular are the Chuck Mangione tunes "Land of Make-Believe" and "Bellavia" and the Woody Herman band arrangements of "The Raven Speaks", Herbie Hancock's "Fat Mama" and Carole King's "Jazzman". Jazz buffs will recognise and appreciate the Sammy Nestico arrangements of the hard-driving swing tune "Ya Gotta Try" and the contrasting slow blues "Midnight Freight" which features saxophone and trombone solos.

The vocalist this year is Jennifer Goad, a voice major who has recently commenced study in the Bachelor of Music program. Jennifer, before coming to Queen's, has a fairly extensive background in singing jazz, popular, and folk music.

Now in its seventh year of performance, the popularity of the Jazz Ensemble makes it much in demand.

Presto! Attenborough's Magic uncovered at last

by Mark Henderson

In the often frustrating social ritual of finding original, fresh material in commercial movies these days, a certain film comes along and provides the necessary enjoyable change of pace. This certain film is Magic, now playing at the Hyland. Starring British actor Anthony Hopkins, Magic is a horror-thriller that details the unusual and destructive relationship between a ventriloquist (Corky) and his puppet (Fats).

Corky is a small-time stand-up entertainer who is swept to the brink of superstardom through the efforts of his manager (Burgess Meredith). Corky is a shy man, seemingly unsuited for public entertaining, but driven by the desire to be a good ventriloquist and a need to find acceptance. His puppet Fats has an opposite personality: loud, arrogant, and hostile, providing the contrast to make Corky's act really funny and potentially popular.

When required by his producer to take a physical to be eligible for a new pilot show, Corky refuses and runs away to the Catskills where he was raised, looking for parts of his past that will help him regain his confidence and composure. He takes Fats to an old summer hotel and finds a former heart-throb (Ann-Margaret), the high school cheerleader he never had the nerve to reveal his affections towards. At this point his life paradoxically takes an upward but ultimately fatal turn.

Attenborough's direction skillfully manipulates the clues and expressions of Corky's unbalanced mind, especially the central relationship with his puppet. They constantly talk to each other, whether before an audience or in private. Fats seems to fulfill a destructive and repressed need in Corky which slowly becomes distorted out of control. Fats develops a separate personality, and a frightening situation develops.

Ann-Margaret has a beautiful role which calls for a great amount of control and depth. The insecurity she projects, combined with Corky's need for understanding is touching, and we really want their new-found love to work. The ambiguity of the whole affair makes Magic a powerful study of mental instability and violence, and the abandoned, isolated old summer hotel is a perfect setting for Corky's inevitable clash with his "other", the puppet who won't stand by while Ann-Margaret steals his "master's" attention.

If it sounds confusing, that's because Magic deals with the more complex grey shades of the unconscious that find a distorted release from Corky's mind.

It is unfortunate that the sound for Magic was pitifully inept, with fully one-third of the dialogue practically undecipherable.

Magic is one of the best psychological horror films I've seen in recent years. Attenborough shows a lot of personal style and confidence

Its ability in the hands of a more conventional director or a less sensitive actor than Hopkins, Magic would be just the violent failure to do so, is Magic's another shallow thriller. Comes a Time: Neil Young reviewed by Bruce Stratton Comes a Time, Neil Young's latest album, is something of a surprise. Young's present concert tour, undertaken, one assumes, to promote the album, is centered around both Young's overpowering electric guitar work and the driving rhythm section provided by Crazy Horse. Indeed, the refrain to the song that Young has adopted as a sort of anthem of the tour - playing it twice at each concert - is "My, my, hey, hey, Rock and roll is here to stay."

Rock and roll may be here to stay but it certainly is not in evidence on "Comes a Time."

This album is perhaps Young's most folk and country-influenced work since his days with The Buffalo Springfield. Songs such as "Field of Opportunity" fall easily into the country mold. A fiddler flails away while Young twangs out the lyric over an acoustic guitar's rhythm line. There is only one song on the album that is not primarily acoustic. As such "Motorcycle Mama" is a strangely pointless addition to "Comes a Time." There is nothing particularly outstanding about the cut and it certainly does not fit into the quieter context of the album.

With respect to the lyrics on "Comes a Time," Young is as enigmatic and as amusing as ever. Witness "I'm goin' back, back where there's no place to stay," or "In the field of opportunity it's plowing time again." The singing on the album is more polished than one is accustomed to hearing from Neil Young. This is due to the use of Nicolette Larson in singing high-harmonies. Where previously Young himself would venture into the upper register he is now content to remain in the somewhat less grating middle range.

The album's overall tone is provided by Young's unique "it's only castles burning" optimism-through-depression mood. The title track is the best example of this to be found on "Comes a Time." Young is astonished, and heartened, by the fact that we exist at all; "This old earth keeps spinnin' round, it's a wonder tall trees ain't laying down."

This new album is smoother, more laid-back, and slightly less depressing than Neil Young's last few releases. "Comes a Time" signals Young's return to the commercially successful halcyon days of "Harvest" and "After the Goldrush."

Backless: Eric Clapton reviewed by Brent Laviolette

Old Slowhand is back, a year older but no wiser it would seem. For the most part Clapton's Backless is a carbon copy of last year's release, Slowhand, his greatest commercial success since the Dominoes days and Layla. Don't construe this comment as criticism, however, why not stick with a winning format?

Though the song repertoire is very similar to Slowhand, Clapton's guitar style has undergone yet another change. The sliding, lazy, but amazingly potent style Clapton showed us on his previous album totally dominates Backless. On "Roll it" and the single, "Promises, Clapton's Guitar is, quite simply, sublime. Except, perhaps, for "Tulsa

Time" and "Watch out for Lucy," two laid-back rockers, nowhere on the album are we jolted into total awareness with the punchy licks of "Cocaine" and "Lay Down Sally." Backless is conducive to drunken stupors and doing nothing but listening to this quiet album. Perhaps I might best clarify this mystifying difference by stating that the album is more enjoyable when played at a lower volume. Its easy going attitude is infectious.

In keeping with his lazy style Clapton's band (the same as a year ago) are given more foreground on the album. Clapton's guitar on tracks such as Dylan's "If I Don't Be There by Morning" and "Tell me That You Love Me" enters only to highlight the melody, giving it that indelible Clapton stamp. The obvious blues influence takes Clapton and literally shakes him at times. "Early in the Morning" is a modern arrangement of an old blues tune rendered with remarkable grace.

Clapton's greatest achievement over the years is his timeless guitar style. He's played his weather-beaten Stratocaster so many different ways but always with the same Clapton "feel". The man and his guitar are eternal.

Though Backless should not prove as commercially successful as Slowhand I would have to rate it as a more complete, more relaxed and honest statement by its author.

Devo reviewed by Bruce Stratton

Devo is yet another group which bears the unmistakable imprint of that high-priest of the bizarre, Brian Eno. Devo's first album, "Q: Are We Not Men? A: We Are Devo!" teeters on that high thin wall which separates music and noise. One receives the impression that Devo is not primarily concerned with making music. Rather Devo is preoccupied with taking a stance.

The concept behind Devo, and the group's first album "Q: Are We Not Men? A: We Are Devo!" is the idea of de-evolution. It would seem that humans are devolving because of our dependence on technology. In accordance with this quasi-philosophy the album is centered around the themes of libidinous emotion and technological excess. Devo does not like McDonald's.

Devo's members seem to enjoy wearing white one-piece suits and what look like 3-D glasses. They move in short mechanical motions and clutch strange mutant instruments.

It's all garbage of course, but it is funny. The point at hand, however, is that Devo is presenting us with an album, and, tradition-bound though the thought may be, records are meant to be listened to. This is Devo's stumbling block.

"Q: Are We Not Men? A: We Are Devo!" is a musically weak album. The sound has a primitive Talking Heads feel to it. This is really not too surprising as Eno has produced both of the groups' last efforts. "Sloppy (I Saw My Baby Gettin')", "Shrivel-Up," and "Mongoloid" are competent, even if repetitive, examples of Eno-influenced New Wave rock. Far and away the album's best cut is "Satisfaction." Devo gives the old Stones' classic an audacious mechanized-reggae treatment. Devo removes Jagger's pelvis-thrusting energy and replaces it with a passionless droning that menaces like a high-voltage wire in the rain.

Apart from these songs, however, the music on the album is quite unexceptional. Any notoriety that Devo attains will be based on the group's value as a conversation piece, not on its musical offerings.

Gals' wkend swim results

by Wendy Gancher

Last Saturday Queen's Women's Intercollegiate Swim team travelled to McMaster University for their first formal meet. They were faced with stiff competition from Mac, Waterloo, U. of T., McGill, Guelph, Ryerson and U. of Windsor.

After 2 months of training, it was time to get into the pool and see if those early morning practices were paying off. Most of the girls would agree that all those lengths have paid off.

Saturday's overall good results were highlighted by a few great moments. Carla Peplar had a good day, winning the 100m breast stroke and placing second in her 200m individual medley. Diana Harrison came fourth in both her 50m and 100m free and missed making National Qualifying time by only a few tenths of a second. Back stroke competition was not left untouched by Queen's Cathy Mason, who placed second in the 200m and fourth in the 100m back.

To show that Queen's Women have a pulled together team, the powerful four of Carla Peplar, Diana Harrison, Judy Harvey-Smith and Karen Nixon gave it a good go and placed second in the 400m relay.

Next weekend the girls travel to McGill for a two day affair but the real season starts after Christmas.

Queen's has now surpassed last year's total victory output and is showing signs of becoming a competitive basketball team. "The players are starting to come together as a unit and it is resulting in improved play," stated head coach Tom Frood who was obviously delighted with his team's second half performance. The halftime defensive adjustment was the key to the victory according to assistant coach John Smith. "We cut down their inside forward game which completely nullified their offence giving us the opportunity to come back." This was not the sole reason for the victory as the Queen's squad just came out and executed properly in the second half.

The sloppily played first half saw the small aggressive Laval guards control the tempo of the game. The Laval guards constantly beat the Queen's defense down the floor scoring easy hoops. The first half remained close until the Blue and Gold employed a full court press.

Laval took advantage of three successive Gael turnovers to break the game wide open. Queen's could not recover and went into the dressing room trailing 43-36.

The second half Gael resurgence was sparked by the floor play of guard Jeff Folkard. His excellent outside shooting and spirited defensive play ignited the Gaels and with 15:00 remaining the Laval lead was reduced to 50-49. The Gaels crisp play continued with Phil Moore and John Kutkevicius dominating the inside scoring on a variety of short jump shots and hooks.

A driving Folkard layup following a steal gave the Golden Gaels a commanding 71-64 lead with 5:00 remaining. Laval attempted to press the Gaels into committing turnovers but this time the Gaels showed poise and handled the press with ease. The Gaels had three starters foul out in the final minutes however the players off the bench came into hold onto the victory. Jeff Folkard led the

Badminton Gals in second place

[Staff] -On November 11 and 12 the Queen's Women's Badminton team journeyed to Toronto to compete in their first tournament of the season at Ryerson.

The team got off to a slow start on Saturday winning 21 out of 30 singles games. Sandra Morden, playing first singles, swept her opponents off the court winning all five of her singles games. Anne-Marie O'Sullivan dropped 2 out of 5 games and Laurie Hetherington also dropped 2 of her 5 games. Cynthia Corbett won 3 of her 5 singles games as did Martha Nadvorny. Gayle Raycraft won 4 of her five singles games.

The team came back with a vengeance on Sunday to win 13 of their 15 doubles games.

The doubles team of Anne-Marie O'Sullivan and Martha Nadvorny won all five of their doubles games.

sweeping their division. Cynthia Corbett and Gayle Raycraft dropped only 1 of their five games as did Sandra Morden and Laurie Hetherington playing first doubles.

As a result, Queen's is in second place in the OWIAA with 34 points; trailing U. of T. who have 41 points but leading Western who only have 29 points.

Gals Squash

by Hedley

On Saturday, November 5th, Queen's hosted its Invitational Intercollegiate Women's Squash Tournament. Teams from U. of T., York, Waterloo and McMaster attended. The Queen's women emerged the victors, capturing 4 of the 5 individual top honours as well as the team championship.

U. of T. provided the toughest competition, but proved themselves no match for the superior calibre of squash played consistently by the Queen's team.

Jane Forbes-Roberts, Claire Smith, Sandra Koerner and Sandra Smith refused to drop a single match over the course of the day. Natalie Sneyd gave a notable lesson in the meaning of team spirit, refusing to leave the Queen's squad one player short despite her poor health.

This is the third successive year in which Queen's has won the tournament.

V-ball men keep winning

by Dave Tod

The Queen's men's volleyball team continued its winning ways this past weekend by taking both matches against the Laurentian University Voyageurs in Sudbury. After a long road trip during the afternoon, the Gaels played a tough best of five match on Friday night, winning in four games. The V-Ball men recovered from a poor start losing 15-8 to Laurentian in the first game but bounced back to sweep the remaining three 15-10, 15-9 and 15-13.

On Saturday morning, the Gaels were tested again by the tough Laurentian squad. True to form, Queen's beat the Voyageurs 15-13, 13-15, 12-15, 15-13 and in the deciding game steamrolled over the opposition 15-3. This series against Laurentian on the weekend was indicative of the depth and endurance the Gaels possess, and it is clear that the Queen's men's volleyball team deserves its first place standing in the OUAA east.

On Sunday morning, the Gaels travelled to Toronto to play in an Ontario Volleyball Association tournament in which they placed fifth overall but were first among universities from both eastern and western Ontario and Quebec.

In a telephone interview from Toronto, coach Vaclav Smola was particularly impressed with this year's squad. He mentioned that former Junior National Team member Bruce Rodin played his usual outstanding game as did Mike Cooper. The volleyball Gaels are definite contenders this year for the OUAA title and I'll go so far as to say that a berth in the six team national CIAU championship is not an unrealistic goal. This Saturday The Gaels host their own tournament at the PE Centre.

Excellent opener for Queen's synchro gals

The eight member synchro team defeated U of T.

The first Eastern Sectional Meet for the Queen's Synchro team, which was held this past weekend at Wilfrid Laurier University with York, U of T, McGill, Ottawa U and Queen's, was the result of hard work from all sides.

Queen's started out the meet with a strong showing in Novice figures, including a fine performance from Linda Wisin to a 16th place finish, excellent performances by Audrey Nicholson and Jeannie Hughes, who placed 3rd and 4th respectively and a well-placed first from Cathy Beaumont to win the Novice Figures title.

Following this, senior figures proved also to be another sweep for Queen's. All Queen's entrants turned in super performances with rookie Linda Abbott placing 4th, Janet Fix 2nd, and veteran Celeste Jennings compiling a total of 67 points to win

C.C.'s World of Sport

by Lenny Comlois and Joe Coneys

As the National Football League moves into its final weeks there are a host of teams that still aspire to make the playoffs, largely due to the addition of another wild-card team from each conference. Thus the playoff qualifiers are the three division champions from each conference and then the two clubs with the next best records.

The National Conference is now reverting to the form pre-season expectations would have had it take, with the Washington Redskins beginning to show their age and only faint echoes of the "Pack is Back" cheers now being heard from Green Bay. These division-leading clubs for most of the season probably won't even be in the playoffs now.

The Dallas juggernaut asserted itself against Washington and will repeat as Eastern champs, with their only tough remaining game being next week when they host New England. Washington has a couple of tough games left and could fall to 9-7 while the underrated Eagles of Philadelphia are likely to rise to an identical record. In this eventuality, their split of the games between the two and identical records against divisional opponents would necessitate going to their record against opponents that they both faced. Philadelphia would get this obscure statistical edge and thus the final wild card spot.

In the Central Divisions the ageless Minnesota Vikings will wind up 10-6 with only Oakland being a big game for them. The Pack should drop to 8-8 and will not be in the running. Finally, in the west, the Los Angeles Rams are the non pareil team and, with a laughter of a schedule remaining, should finish at 14-2. Another easy remaining schedule for the Atlanta Falcons should assure them of the first wild-card spot as they can finish 11-5. With the better record of the wild-cards, the Falcons would get to host Philadelphia.

In the solo category Laura Birt-whistle swam well for a third place finish as did team member Wendy White for a well-deserved first.

In duets, Cathy Beaumont and Audrey Nicholson were once again strong contenders for Queen's and despite a few problems during their routine, finished in second.

Finally the team routine narrowly defeated U of T by 4 points to win.

Define student role in SCAPTL

The concept and practice of tenure has long been regarded as a cornerstone of academic freedom at universities. It was originally designed to protect those who engaged in research and social criticism from dismissal or censure by others who found such criticism uncomfortable. But it may also be argued that today tenure partially exists as a means of providing job security and attracting academic talent to individual universities.

At Queen's tenure has enjoyed an uneven history. In the 1960's it was granted on a virtually indiscriminate basis as a result of the rapid expansion of post-secondary institutions in Canada and the corresponding need to hold onto and attract new faculty. In 1971 Principal John Deutsch foresaw the problems of financial constraints and declining enrolment which would be characteristic of the late 70's. In response he implemented "seasonal appointments" that did not necessarily lead to consideration for tenure. Finally, in 1974, Principal Ronald Watts established the Senate Committee on Appointment, Promotion, Tenure, and Leave (SCAPTL) to formulate a comprehensive tenure and appointment renewal policy for the entire university.

Last Thursday the Queen's Senate attempted to complete discussion of SCAPTL's final draft on regulations governing appointment and tenure for regular academic staff. The report is well-organized and generally complete in its discussion of the procedure for granting tenure at Queen's. But one area of concern has yet to be adequately dealt with—the role of student participation when assessing candidates for tenure. The SCAPTL draft does recognize that students have an important role to play in general consultation, particularly with respect to assessment of teaching qualities when considering a candidate for tenure. The draft goes on to state that, depending upon the rules adopted by a faculty board, students may be eligible for membership on standing committees or shall be consulted if another system is established to advise a department on granting of tenure and renewal of appointments.

Obviously the draft provides for student consultation, but the question of whether this is an acceptable role remains.

Rather than leaving student membership on standing committees to the discretion of individual faculty boards or department heads in the absence of such committees, student membership and participation in the decision-making process of whatever type of assessment system should be guaranteed in the SCAPTL draft. Students are the best source of information on the efficiency and calibre of a faculty member's teaching ability. Through the use of departmental course evaluation guides and personal experience, a third or fourth year student can provide a reliable and valid opinion of a candidate for tenure.

The SCAPTL draft, if adopted, will increase the number of tenured staff at Queen's. With the present period of financial constraint and declining enrolment not likely to end in the foreseeable future, Queen's cannot afford to offer tenure to any staff who do not possess excellent teaching and research abilities. A clearly defined role for student input into the granting of tenure is therefore necessary to maintain the reputation of academic excellence commonly associated with Queen's.

No change in English core issue still under discussion

by Diana Coulter

There will be no adjustments made in the English Department's core curriculum for next year despite a recent controversy arising out of student protests.

Students have proposed the addition of Twentieth Century literature to the core in an effort to update the conservative nature of the English Department's program and ensure complete coverage of all periods of language development.

However, Professor C. Norman, Chairman of Undergraduate Studies for the Department of English states that "the change in the curriculum is something like changing the constitution of the country"—it is not a minor adjustment and takes much time and consideration.

The suggestion that English students take note of the "extremely conservative nature of Queen's programme" was first voiced by David Owen in an editorial appearing in The Lictor (Oct. 12). Glenn Stairs, a third year English DSC, subsequently invited all interested students to meet on November 16th to further discussion on the curriculum issue. David Owen's article also created ripples in the English Department as Professor Norman distributed photocopies to staff members and stated that they were "pleased to hear students speaking out on issues such as these".

When the proposals for change were formulated by the student committee, Stairs was invited to present them to the November 21st meeting of the English Department "Colloquia", a series of formal and informal gatherings for English professors, has been meeting since last February to rethink and redefine the whole aim and purpose of the core curriculum. The proposals, according to Professor Norman, "met with sympathetic interest" and "a number of people thought well of them."

However, problems did arise when the English Department began to explore the rearrangement necessary to include Twentieth Century literature. According to Stairs, it was feared by members of the faculty that courses such as Anglo-Saxon poetry, Old Norse, and Linguistics would suffer in a popularity contest with Twentieth Century Literature.

As the copy for next year's Course Calendar is due on Friday, the English Department finds any present adjustments impossible, however, Prof Norman states they are "certainly not saying No" to further discussion on the issue. He suggests the possibility of the formulation of a committee with student representation to continue the development of a new core curriculum.

Glenn Stairs said he was "disappointed that no change had been appropriately affected in the structure of the English program for next year but they certainly intend to continue discussing the issue."

Students were nestled all snug in their beds while visions of exams danced in their heads.

Fines for mug thefts

by Rob Southcott

Anyone caught stealing or intentionally breaking glassware in either of the Queen's pubs will have fines imposed on them, under a new motion passed last Thursday by AMS Outer Council.

The motion had been bought up due to losses of almost $200 a week that the Underground and the McLaughlin Room have been incurring from the loss of glassware. Under the new rules, first-time offenders will pay a fine of $10 for every item broken, with a maximum of $50, or, if they choose not to pay the fine, they will be requested to appear before the AMS Court, where a verdict and possible penalty will be determined. Any subsequent-time offenders will be requested to appear before AMS Court, where a verdict or penalty will be decided upon.

By establishing such rules, the AMS hopes that people will think twice before trying to break or steal glassware, especially with the fact that such action will cost them at least $10. Despite some doubt about whether or not the AMS can actually compel any convicted person to appear in AMS Court, the AMS sees the new rules as what is needed to control the loss of glassware without having to call in the police.

Structure of A.M.S. to be reviewed by committee

by Shelley Matson

A committee to streamline the organizational structures of the AMS has been established and hopes to begin work before Christmas and complete its report by late April.

Committee Chairperson and Education Commissioner, Vickie Steele, said that she felt that this move was necessary because of the need for greater coordination between each Commission and the burgeoning work-load on the Commissioners themselves.

"There is a problem with events," she said, "a lot of them are really quite useless and shouldn't be a part of the A.M.S."

Steele also noted a problem of jurisdiction.

"Most policy decisions are made in Inner Council, while the Board of Directors makes decisions about services. We on Inner Council now have little say about services. As we grow and have a larger services sector we would like to have a say in the matter."

John Koopman, Vice-President of Operations, expressed some concern over the unrepresentative structure of the Board of Directors.

"It is chosen by the incoming Executive," he said, "and I don't think that the Executive's choices have ever been defeated." Some suggestions have been made that Outer Council act as the Board of Directors but Koopman says that, "this is horrifying as Council is too large and unwieldy a body for those kinds of decisions, i.e. whether the Pub needs a new cash register and which kind to buy."

Steele also pointed out that the committee would also consider ways to strengthen the relationship between the A.M.S. and the faculty societies.

The Committee, chaired by Steele, currently has three members, John Koopman, Eric Evans, and Colin Cantlie and will choose another from applications next week.

Better get your glassware from old Duz boxes or your friendly Texaco man as Queen's Pub beer mugs, broken or snatched, are now going for $10.

Council survives motion

by Rob Southcott

A motion for AMS Outer Council to abolish itself in favour of an expanded Inner Council was defeated at a meeting of AMS Outer Council last Thursday night.

The motion, proposed by Council member Eric Evans, was intended to be a starting point for discussion about Outer Council just as much as it was to be an actual measure. "It was intended to draw attention to the fact that all is not well right with Outer Council," said Evans, "and though it's not surprising that it was defeated, I would have liked to have seen more discussion on it."

Though Council did have some discussion of the motion before it was brought to a vote, the general sentiment was wait for the report of the newly-established AMS committee which will investigate the actual structure of the AMS.

Nevertheless, various Council members stated that they thought that Outer Council members should be better informed and more prepared for their meetings.

Carnage at Leonard caf: food fights and Christmas songs

by Rob Southcott

Last week, Leonard Hall Cafeteria was the scene of a series of devastating food fights which have left it digging itself out from under the mounds of food.

Last Monday, this peaceful haven of lumpy gravy and plastic scrambled eggs was transformed into a scene of terror that left some shaken with disbelief. The shocking event was the notorious 4th Brockington Choral Society's annual singing of "The Twelve Days of Christmas" and the large amounts of food that were hurled at these instigators of such riotous behaviour.

The events began with last Monday's singing of the song's first verse, which was met by a sudden frontal offensive of flying projectiles, which were identified as dinner rolls (without butter), and continued on Tuesday when the second verse saw the members of 4th Brock pelted with fish cakes, lemon rinds and tartar sauce. With these occurrences, cafeteria manager Jim Fougere was forced to send out a call for aid, a call which was met by the AMS declaring an immediate state of emergency in Leonard cafeteria, and sending in a specially trained battalion of AMS Constables to maintain order in the cafeteria.

The team of constables arrived on the scene on Wednesday night, immediately placing their arm-banded personnel in strategic locations throughout the cafeteria.

Ensemble goes to prison

Special

Last Sunday, November 26th, the members of the Jazz Ensemble gave up watching the Grey Cup to entertain the inmates at the Regional Reception Centre (otherwise known as Kingston Pen.). There was a good turnout of inmates to hear the concert and it was obvious they all enjoyed the considerable talents of this group under Professor Duane Bates.

After the concert refreshments were provided by the inmates Dr. D.M. Schurman at the History Committee, who were also

All two of the personnel, that is, At 5:45 p.m., just as the two previous nights, the members of 4th Brock took to their feet and began to sing, and despite efforts on the part of the AMS constables, little could be done to stop the riotous behavior that rained down upon the members of 4th Brock. This sort of occurrence was to continue on Thursday night, and experts cited Friday as the day that the major disturbances would occur.

With extreme tension in the air on Friday night, the 4th Brock choral society bravely performed the famous "Five Gold Rings" verse, and as had been predicted, were the target of salads, rolls, deserts and several dishes of potatoes. The happenings of that night prompted action on the part of 4th Brockington to post a sign for Saturday's meal that stated if the food throwing did not cease, they would stop their seasonal performances. Rumours that the AMS constables had threatened to rip out the vocal chords of all the members of the 4th Brockington Choral Society have not been confirmed, nor have the rumors that Mr. Fougere had intended to equip his cafeteria staff with riot gear.

Authorities are predicting a somewhat quieter week coming up in Leonard Cafeteria, and some are even going so far as to say that students might even actually eat the food there.

responsible for the financial outlay required to provide the food and transportation for the Ensemble.

The concert was arranged by the Citizens Advisory Committee of the Regional Reception Centre with the co-operation of the Administration and Security personnel.

Any other group who would be prepared to provide a similar event should contact Mrs. Olive Schurman at 544-0584, or leave a message for Dr. D.M. Schurman at the History Dept., ext 5700.

Armed Forces crucial to countering nuclear threat

by Sean Dewart

The most important function of the Canadian Armed Forces is to counter the nuclear threat of the Russians. This was the opinion voiced by Vice Admiral A.L. Collier, of the Maritime Command of the Canadian Armed Forces, in his speech last week concerning Canada's need for armed forces, specifically the marine forces.

Although Collier enumerated his responsibilities, and the function of the marine forces in Canada—the enforcement of pollution control, fishing laws, and search and rescue work—the main thrust of his speech was the "Maritime Threat".

"The countries of the Warsaw Pact will conceivably seek diplomatic and political advantages using the military," said Collier, with a hammer and sickle on a red background behind him. Collier doesn't advocate nuclear armament to counter this threat, he feels that Canada needs only conventional strength, and participation on NATO. He described the current situation between the West and the East as a stalemate, a vicious circle that the West has tried unsuccessfully to break.

"Potential aggressors of Canada must know that we will use force. No self-respecting country can consider letting someone else defend them," said Collier in reply to questions concerning demilitarization. When asked to justify growing capital expenditures by the military in a time of economic restraints, Collier said, "Re-equipment will not be inexpensive. But freedom does not come cheap. It's better to spend money today than lives tomorrow."

Gov'ts push cultural exchange

Leslie Shannon

The Ontario and Quebec governments this year are strengthening their support of cultural and educational interaction by students between the provinces.

Research grants are being offered by the Ontario government to support exchange programs for university undergraduates and graduates wishing to pursue studies in French in the province of Quebec.

Awards ranging from $300 to $12,000 will be presented annually to Ontario students engaged in a variety of programs. Among the educational exchanges offered are full-credit course programs, grants for the teaching of credit courses for one or two semesters by Ontario faculty in a Quebec institution, and funds for visits by groups of students involving participation in educational and cultural activities at the host institution.

Exchanges are also being offered to aid groups of students or teaching staff to improve their knowledge of French. These funds will be used to support only new projects and may be used for a number of expenditures including costs of instruction and translation services.

Although participating full-time Ontario students will pay the usual tuition fees, most will be eligible for a $2,000 federal fellowship for official language study.

Evaluation of the proposed programs will be considered by a selection committee composed of representatives of both governments.

Applications are available from the Office of Research Services and the deadline for submission is January 31, 1979. Applicants will be informed of the decisions of the Committee before May 31, '79.

David Suzuki was in Kingston "to sell science to the public" last weekend.

He stated that it is vital for the lay public to have a better understanding of the science because of the rapidity with which advances are being made in all fields of science.

"Within ten years we may be able to control the weather, control our moods, communicate with extra-terrestrial beings, and even perfect cloning. If the public does not understand the principles involved, we will have no means to assess what the impact of these discoveries will be on our civilization, or to decide whether this research should even be allowed to continue."

Suzuki advocated that we receive a more diversified education in high school and university by including mandatory courses in the sciences.

Computing Centre

Non-Credit Courses

The Computing Centre is offering several short, non-credit courses in the winter term, free of charge. All courses are held from 7:00 to 9:00 p.m.

You can register for a course by leaving your name with a Terminal Coordinator at the Goodwin, Mackintosh-Corry, Jeffery, or Dupuis Hall sites. Room locations for each course will be posted at each site one week before the course is scheduled to start.

For further details of each course, ask a Terminal Coordinator for the Education announcement.

The schedule for the winter term is:

INTRODUCTION TO COMPUTING - January 9

INTRODUCTION TO FORTRAN - January 11, 16, 18, 23, 25, 30

INTRODUCTION TO CANDE - January 25, 30, February 1

INTRODUCTION TO APL - January 10, 15, 17

INTRODUCTION TO SPSS - January 29, 31, February 5

INTRODUCTION TO QUIC - January 22, 24

The World in Brief

by Sandi Arthurs

Waterloo - The Ontario Police Commission has recommended that Waterloo Regional Police Chief Sydney Brown, Staff/Sgt. Joseph Lederman and Constable David Westwell be fired and that two other policemen be reduced in rank. This action was taken after an investigative committee found that all five men were involved in raids that led to allegations of police brutality. Attorney-General Roy McMurtry stands firmly by this course of action stating that if the Waterloo Regional Police Commission chooses to ignore the recommendation that Chief Brown be fired, he will not let the matter die.

Peking - "Long live democracy" has been the cry of the people for the last two weeks. There is an apparent movement towards greater democracy in China. The government has begun a quiet, discreet campaign to control the recent public explosion of expression. Vice-Premier Teng Hsiao-ping warned the people in a speech last week that such open expression is not in the interest of stability and unity. Some have suggested that the new happening in China may be a unique communist experiment to create a society which would stimulate personal initiative and be supportive of the fast progress necessary for China's survival.

Utah - This Thursday Dale Pierre, 25 of Brooklyn and William Andrews, 24 of Dallas will be shot at 7:38 a.m. at the Utah State Prison. The two were convicted in the torture slayings of 3 people while robbing a hi-fi store in 1974. The last execution in the U.S.A. was that of Gary Gilmore in 1977.

Ottawa - The federal government's decision on the oil price debate now stands firm. Energy Minister Alastair Gillespie announced that an increase in the price of oil would not take effect as scheduled on January 1st. Mr. Loughheed was willing to accept this delay of a price increase of a $1 a barrel until July 1st in return for an automatic additional $1 increase January 1st, 1980. Mr. Gillespie answered this proposal by stating he considers no increase to be automatic. Premier Loughheed has answered this consideration by clarifying the fact that Alberta reserves the right to revert to its earlier agreement with Ottawa, that is to make the oil price increase effective Jan. 1, 1979.

Montreal - The debate as to whether or not FLQ terrorists Jacques Cosette-Trudel and wife should be extradited back to Canada still continues. If the pair does re-enter Canada Dec. 17, they will be immediately charged with kidnapping former British Trade Commissioner, James Cross. The Font de Liberation du Quebec terrorised Quebec in October of 1970, at which time the Quebec Labour Minister Pierre Laporte was killed. The possible return of the FLQ members was a hot issue at Federal election time in 1974. In 1974 Robert Stanfield, the Conservative leader at the time, criticised Trudeau for his statement declaring the FLQ to be unwanted in Canada. Stanfield felt the FLQ members should be extradited to Canada and brought to justice.

Ontario - The new Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations, Frank Drea, responded to the many consumer complaints concerning "the great transmission rip-off" with characteristic flamboyancy. He took a well-running car with only the vacuum tube removed to several transmission companies for service. Several of the companies had expensive service suggestions when only a small tube needed to be repaired. Charges are being brought against these companies.

Project Green

Plans for planting

by Jo-Anne Stead

Project Green's plans for this year are a landscaped area around the new Union Street frontage, and more student awareness of the Project's goals, according to co-president John Arkelian.

Plans for planting between Theology and Kingston Halls have met with setbacks. They have been postponed until the question of lighting has been settled with the Physical Plant. If approved by the Senate Sub-Committee on grounds, work should begin sometime in the spring.

The most recent accomplishment of the group was the installation of wooden window boxes at the John Deutsch Centre.

In previous years, Project Green members sold buttons to raise money and increase student interest. This year they are planning a different approach, as is already evident by their crest at the corner of Union and University. They will also be selling campus all-occasion cards and distributing leaflets later this year.

"Project Green is always interested in the student's ideas concerning the campus," commented co-president Mary Flint. "Since one dollar of each student's fee is given to Project Green, they should be concerned too."

Caradan to be 1979 Brockington Visitor

by Liz McClung

The Brockington Visitor Committee has selected the 1979 speaker, the Right Honourable Lord Caradan, a world-renowned authority on the Middle East and Africa.

"I am an expert in international frustration," said Lord Caradan, speaking from his experience as a British administrator in Palestine, Jamaica, Nigeria and Cyprus, and later as Minister of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, and United Kingdom Representative at the United Nations (1964-70). He has said of himself, "I have no illusions, but I am not disillusioned. I believe in the obligation of optimism."

The Brockington Visitorship was established in 1969, in memory of the late Leonard W. Brockington, Rector of Queen's for many years. The Committee has brought visitors of international reputation to Queen's, including former Prime Minister Lester B. Pearson, Sir Bernard Lovell, Professor Gunnar Myrdal, Dr. Buckminster Fuller, Claude Ryan, J. Kenneth Galbraith, Sir Walter Perry, and Hugh MacLennan.

"Survival" selection blasted

Orientation Committee

The Editor

The time has come when certain organizations on this campus must critically review the procedures they employ in selecting members for committees which operate within the jurisdiction of their constitution.

Earlier this term A.S.U.S. introduced a constitutional change relating to the procedure by which the Orientation Committee would be selected. Traditionally applicants had been interviewed by a group of 15 people; the A.S.U.S. Executive and the outgoing Orientation Committee. In their wisdom this year the A.S.U.S. Executive, without consulting those closest to Orientation, decided to break the interviewing group into three teams of five interviewers. These groups were then to select those applicants whom they felt should proceed to the second and final interview stage. The final interview team this year consisted of three A.S.U.S. Executive members and one person from the outgoing Orientation Committee.

While the fact that these changes were made without consultation with people more closely involved in Orientation is questionable, for those are the people that one assumes can more readily assess the values of a specific interviewing procedure related to selection of members for a committee on which they have sat, it is another aspect of this situation which arouses deeper concern.

This year the final interview team (the A.S.U.S. Executive) decided that to more readily assess the inter-group abilities of the final applicants they would introduce the use of a technique developed by NASA. This is a simulation technique which places a group of people in a survival situation in which they must reach a consensus regarding the relative importance of materials required for survival. This technique has been adapted for use at leadership conferences and the like to assist people in realizing how they function within a group setting. Thus, at this level, it is a technique which is used to help individuals identify their strengths and weaknesses in group interaction. The second important factor is that the analysis or observation is carried out by trained people who are well aware of the intricacies involved in group interaction.

My contention then, is that this technique was unfairly and ignorantly applied during the Orientation interviews in that 1) it was used as a selection technique rather than something which might be employed after the committee had been selected to aid in its functioning and 2) that the analysis was carried out by untrained people who are really no more aware of group functioning than anyone who has served on a committee.

Thus I feel that some applicants who reached the final stage may have been unfairly and incorrectly evaluated. A.S.U.S.'s only recourse is to reverse their selection decision and re-interview applicants using techniques which they are more qualified to use (if any).

Opinions and facts on the tuition situation

by Dr. W.G. Henry

The other day in the Douglas Library, I was approached by members of an organization called Students Against Cutbacks and Unemployment to sign a petition which, among other things, demands that the freeze on tuition fees be extended. This has been a hot issue all fall. There are the good guys and the bad guys, or the bad guys and the good guys, depending on your point of view, led by Rory Cattanach who says, "So what's a hundred bucks", and Colin D'Eca who admonished, "Tuition fee increases constitute a barrier to higher education". The Ontario Federation of Students appears to have shouted down the Queen's Alma Mater Society Outer Council when it decided to support a tuition fee increase if such action was deemed necessary to prevent a deterioration of the University system. And so the joust continues and this is good.

The root cause of the present commotion about fees is recommendation 7.2 of The Report of the Special Program Review (November 1975, Chairman, the Right Honourable W. D'Arcy McKeough, Treasurer of Ontario). The recommendation is,

7.2 The level of government support be gradually adjusted over a period of several years so as to allow an increase in the proportion of university and college costs covered by tuition fees.

The following table shows the percentage of the total cost of operating Queen's University that is borne by tuition fees and how this figure has changed over the last thirty-five years.

| Year    | Total Cost |
|---------|------------|
| 1943-44 | 790,000    |
| 1963-64 | 7,300,000  |
| 1977-78 | 57,900,000 |

| Government Grants | Tuition Fees as Percentage of Cost |
|-------------------|------------------------------------|
| 275,000           | 47.5                               |
| 3,550,000         | 33.5                               |
| 47,400,000        | 15.5                               |

| Tuition Fees |
|--------------|
| 375,000      |
| 2,450,000    |

Clearly there has been a marked change in the de facto policy. Is it really surprising that Recommendation 7.2 came into existence?

Another way of looking at this problem is to consider the following cost, benefit question. If an engineer graduating in 1979 from Queen's receives $19,800 per year as a starting salary and his fees in his final year are $884.42, and the engineer who graduated in 1944 received $1,980 per year, what were the fees in 1944? No, not $88.44, but almost three times that, $255.00. Considering the decrease in the student staff ratios and the much improved facilities, today's university education is a tremendous bargain.

A number of related ideas and questions come to mind. The authors of the Report admit that "the extension of the post secondary education system to meet citizen needs is both a legitimate public investment and an important social goal..." Is the ratio of tuition fees to government grants out of balance? What is appropriate? Is this part of a much larger subject that could be called "The Pros and Cons of a Subsidized Society?" It is a subject worthy of discussion, particularly in these times.

One thing is certain. There is an answer to the question "Whither the University?" - this was the title of the handout preferred by the students in the Douglas Library. If the provincial government persists with its present policy of financing universities at 4 per cent less than the inflation rate, and those who benefit most directly from a university education do not let it be known that they are willing to carry a greater proportion of the costs, and discounting the unlikely possibility of some other major source of funds becoming available the university will 'whither'.

Wasting money on military machinery a futile affair

by Dave Duff

Defence Minister Barney Danson announced last week that he has reduced the list of prospects for the Canadian jet-fighter contract from six to two. Now he simply has to choose between the F-16 and F-18A. How much will these aircraft cost? The Canadian government will be happy to get 130 planes for $2.34 billion. Yes, that's right, almost twice as much as the Montreal Olympics fiasco. What will these planes accomplish? Well, when enemy bombers attempt to annihilate our far cities, we will be able to count on our new fighters to defend us.

Now let's look at the situation realistically. The only time when Canada would be in a serious threat of being bombed would be during a full-scale (nuclear, if you wish) war. Under such circumstances, 130 jet-fighters would not save Canadian cities from being wiped out. Furthermore, the likelihood of a large-scale nuclear war is quite minimal. In that case, what will happen to our beautiful new fighters? Oh, they'll be used in a few air shows and flown over the Arctic tundra to demonstrate Canada's ability to defend herself. Then, like the CF-104 Starfighters, purchased in 1962, and the CF-5's bought in 1968, they will become technologically inferior and, like the outdated carrier Bonaventure, sold to Taiwan as scrap. Then the Defence Department will spend another few billion dollars to buy some more new toys. It all amounts to a vicious circle of waste.

Baldry late-comers faced consistent policy

The Editor:

The letter by Mr. Bakis was rather misleading and I feel it deserves some qualifications. The Underground was not beyond its legal seating capacity at any point during the Long John Baldry concert (Nov. 21st.). The Pub was however, somewhat out of control, or rather not in as much control as I would have wished. For this reason we chose not to use the full capacity. As he correctly pointed out it was (or appeared to be) "already overcrowded."

The incident to which Mr. Bakis refers, between myself, a senior Constable and the students in line, occurred at and after "last call." Our policy, as it has been for at least two years, has been to lock the outer doors and to cease letting any students in. Those people who are between the two sets of doors are then asked to leave and all but 6 of the "huge crowd" left as a result of this request. We realise that this may cause some inconvenience in some cases but we cannot enforce a policy if we allow exceptions.

If the concert was such a special event which had to be attended, then why did Mr. Bakis not arrive earlier? The same could be said for the other individuals who chose to voice their objections. Those who really wanted to see the show arrived in good time and had a good time.

Couldn't $2.34 billion be better spent?

its operations. Maybe the federal government will take a hint. Just think, with $2.34 billion saved by not buying any jets, Canada could not only pay for the Olympics, but could buy back a few unwanted Canadian dollars on the foreign exchange and prevent a seventy-five cent dollar.

Oppression and tyranny rules in Cambodia

by Drew Fagan

Cambodia is a nation hermetically sealed from the outside world. The inability of reporters, foreign government officials or tourists to gain free access to the country has meant that the only information to be secured comes from Cambodian refugees, the small percentage of citizens who are able to successfully flee to Thailand. From these stateless individuals come tales of forced evacuation of the urban centres and the establishment of agricultural communes where rice is grown in conditions not unlike American slavery of the last century. Anyone even remotely involved in the previous regime's government of military forces has been systematically disposed of, as have any individuals who have shown any opposition to the state, or are unable to prove their usefulness by working sixteen hour days in the fields. Genocide, in the name of class revolution and the implementation of an egalitarian society.

Unlike other totalitarian governments, the terror that is ubiquitous to Cambodians is faceless Pol Pot, who is assumed to head the ruling party, (as he was the leader of the Communist forces that conquered the nation in 1975) is as unknown to his citizens as he is an unknown quantity to the outside world. Without a government press, or information posters as utilized in China, Cambodians are not even provided with the dubious benefit of national propaganda. To them, those who hold power are the Angkor - "The Organization" - Khmer Rouge soldiers who hold absolute power over the citizens working on the communal fields. To the leaders, Cambodia is essentially an agricultural country, and, as such, this capability must be developed before industrialization and urbanization can be established. Larger areas than ever are being given over to growing rice, and yet, unlike previous years, there is no food for export and starvation has become as commonplace as the mindless use of terror.

Today, officials seem to thrive on an apparent ideological hatred of those whom they claim to serve. When their numerically small Khmer Rouge forces entered Phnom Penh, they found a bankrupt society; a city teeming with hundreds of thousands of refugees, and controlled by a wealthy, corrupt government fed by American aid. This produced in the Communists a zealousness and purity of purpose previously unknown. All vestiges of materialism and religion were destroyed. Intellectuals and teachers disappeared as did the entire educational system. The ignorant became an honoured class, the only pure citizens of the state. In order to reeducate the masses, they were evacuated, and with it came the reign of terror that continues.

Estimates of the number of victims of the Communist government range near one million in a country whose total population is just seven times that figure. From Auschwitz to the Gulag Archipelago to the Cultural Revolution, nations have stood back and allowed these travesties of justice to occur. In the name of

Ern's Etiquette

by Eric Evans

One of the foremost prerequisites of being a "social" person is in coming from Montreal. You don't really have to come from Montreal, you simply have to convince others of this.

Montrealers have several very distinct traits that make them both unique and socially acceptable. To be a Montrealer, you must be able to convince all observers that you have disco in your blood. Your clothes, your movements and your appearance must make you look like you've spent long periods of time in a heavily disco-oriented environment. However, don't be obvious about it. Montrealers, although they derive most of their social backbone from the disco-culture, must be prepared to denounce disco if the conversation seems to favour that course of action.

Fundamental in being, or convincing others that you are an honest-to-goodness Montrealer, is reminding everyone about Montreal being the social and cultural centre of the universe. You might try developing an argument to be used in social situations claiming that Montreal is still actually bigger than Toronto.

Throwing a few real French words into the conversation can't hurt either - it'll remind everyone that you're bilingual (everyone at Queen's from Montreal is, of course, bilingual). Besides, chances are that nobody will ask you to prove it.

Montrealers must always be certain to remind all those who care to listen about how in touch with the "French Canadian Problem" they are. Only they, living in Westmount or Beaconsfield can "really" understand how the French-speaking Quebecois feels. Being in touch with the pulse of the nation is a great conversation maker, and your authoritative views will be sure to amaze and impress those around you. If anybody dares - it has been known to happen - to dispute your ability to understand French-Canadian opinions when you live in an Anglaiser suburb, you can hit them with your multi-cultural experiences. Why, you even know how rural Quebec thinks about issues because you have a cottage in rural Quebec (i.e. Knowlton, Brome). Or if you really want to build up credibility, claim to have a separatist friend attending the University of Montreal. This is pretty daring though, so you should be certain of your audience.

Now that you've convinced everybody that you're from Montreal and have firmly established yourself as a dominant social entity in your own right, you can have fun. A great pastime is to put on a condescending air towards southern Ontarians. You can drive people wild with envy at your social capacities simply by belittling the attitudes of southern Ontarians towards Quebec and the learning of languages. After all, that's why Montrealers go to school in southern Ontario - to serve as an example for culturally deprived, egotistical Ontarians who seem to feel that life is centered in Toronto (imagine such a silly notion), not Montreal.

Insulting Toronto is a way of life with all Montrealers; it being hard to imagine a more cosmopolitan, alive, exciting, tax ridden city than Montreal. Besides, Montreal has a building with the world's largest hole in its roof, a new class ("millionaires des Olympiques"), the second best football team in the country; and Jean Drapeau.

national sovereignty, no action has been taken against the Cambodian leaders, save a number of weakly worded resolutions in the United Nations. If the world body is unable or unwilling to take positive action against this regime of terror, then it remains as ineffective as ever, and the nations that could have intervened but did not must take equal responsibility for the genocide that is destroying Cambodia.

Building on tradition

"Just right" at St. Andrews

By Kathryn McDermott
Queen's University Exchange student
From earliest times, education was at the head of St. Andrews, and so it is today. The university of St. Andrews is the oldest in Scotland, chartered in 1412 and given university status in 1414. A prime function was to educate the clergy, but today, with 3600 students, attracted from many countries, the main disciplines also include Arts and Science. The university, although ancient and full of traditions, continues to be a lively place for experiments in learning. It believes in bringing young and old together in a system of tutorial teaching and social contacts.

Corrections on tenure story

The Editor

I would be grateful if you would publish the following corrections with respect to front page story and editorial in the November 28 edition of the Journal:

1. Arbitration of an appeal by a professor who is refused tenure will not be under the Ontario Labour Relations Act. (This assertion has been made by a student speaking in the Senate, but is nowhere found in Senate documents.) Arbitration will be under The Arbitration Act. This difference is very important since the Labour Relations Act does not apply to relations between the University and the academic staff.

2. The draft brought before the Senate last Thursday is not a "final draft". It is the draft based on the Senate's decisions on the Discussion Paper placed before Senate last December and published in full in January. The Senate reached a large number of decisions in the course of nine meetings between December and June. All these decisions were published in the Gazette. The draft regulations are SCAPTL's effort to implement these decisions. It was made very clear at the November meeting of Senate that a number of amendments have been expected and that the Senate did not intend to complete its consideration of the regulations in one meeting. Indeed, we shall be fortunate to come to a final decision within two further meetings - although the committee certainly hopes we can do so.

It is important that the student body generally not receive the impression that this important matter is being pushed through hurriedly or quietly. In fact, there has been open, public and exhaustive (if not exhausting) deliberation over the issues involved in appointment, renewal and tenure, over an extended time. Students have participated actively in the process no doubt will continue to do so.

D.A. Sobermann,
Chairman, Senate Committee on Appointment, Promotion, Tenure and Leave

Traditional "pier walk" at St. Andrews

classroom or tea-house. It is good fortune for all in St. Andrews that the students and townsfolk work together, as they have done for centuries to produce a unique environment that has become famous. The St. Andrews student is a full-time member, and those who are sympathetic to this atmosphere discover that St. Andrews can never be forgotten.

St. Andrews is a comparative haven of peace among the stormy scenes of some universities, isolated on a rocky peninsula on the East Neuk of Fife (even more isolated since the closing of the railway); it has a way of life very much its own - one of traditional independence, of traditional customs (like Raison Monday celebrations), and of traditional processions (Pier Walk on Sundays and formal occasions). As it is small, one soon gets the feeling of knowing everybody (at least by sight).

Thus, a special attraction of St. Andrews as a university lies in its history, extending over five and a half centuries, and given reality by the survival of many of its mediaeval buildings and customs. Its location is also particularly fortunate; and in its size, it strikes a happy mean; small enough to retain a close sense of identity and personal contact, large enough to possess the facilities to attain the level of academic achievement which distinguishes the great universities.

Unemployment Insurance

By Bill Burgess and Ross Sutherland

First, what is a student?

Students are young season workers who will soon be "new entrants" to the full time work force. Often a student is a worker who could not find a job and so continues to go to school (thus artificially reducing the unemployment rate).

The cutbacks have most relevance to students because of their status as young, seasonal, and future workers. These groups, along with women, are the ones most directly effected by the cutbacks in unemployment insurance presently before the House of Commons. How will the proposed cuts in Unemployment Insurance affect new entrants to the labour force, particularly former students.

See if they will affect you by answering the following questions.

If you've already signed a job contract, the UI changes will have no immediate effect on you. Of course, they may still hit a spouse, lover, family member, and so on.

Also, remember that the Economic Council of Canada projects an unemployment rate over 8% until 1985. Everyone's "secure" job has an enhanced degree of uncertainty.

Are you expecting permanence with a government job? Ottawa recently eliminated 6000 jobs, and this pattern will likely continue. You should make the UI changes your concern.

If you don't have a job waiting for you after graduation, once again you're hardly alone. According to a Guelph University survey, almost one fifth of their graduates were still unemployed six months after graduation.

Of those working, many had jobs

Official Rationale

The government announced that the cutbacks are needed to make UI "less generous", to "provide incentives" for the unemployed to get jobs.

It claims that young workers and (especially married) women have a "low attachment" to the labour force. Their alleged "overuse" and "abuse" of the UIC are singled out at justification for administrative and legislative restrictions to the program.

It is also suggested that the cutback savings will be put into job creation programs.

The government's own figures totally contradict these notions.

The Problem is Jobs Not people

The statistics are becoming commonplace: "25 officially unemployed persons for every job vacancy in Canada"; "job vacancy to total job ratio has dropped from 1% in 1972-73 to .4% today"; "most job openings are for low skilled, low paid positions with unsafe work conditions and little job security".

People do want to work. The problem is that this is a depression. There are not enough jobs.

Overuse of UI?

In direct contradiction to the government's assumptions, the proportion of unemployed young and women workers on UI is less than the average. In metro Toronto youths aged 14-24 are 43.2% of the jobless, but only 18% of the UI claimants.

Women, who are 45% of the official unemployed, account for only 36.8% of the claimants. If you include the women drawing maternity benefits the figure is still only 42.8%.

Overall the ratio of UI claimants to total unemployed in Ontario has declined 30% from March 1968 to March 1978. The ratio for women has declined by 50%.

By using facts and not myths, it can be argued that workers are not overusing, but rather underusing unemployment insurance.

Quit Work For Pokey?

The government's implicit assumption that young and women workers quit work to go onto UI, (after a 6 week waiting period remember), more often than others is not founded in fact.

The latest figures (August) show that the proportion of (unemployed) young workers who lost or were laid off their last job in Ontario is 54.7% compared to 51.8% for all other age groups.

The proportion of unemployed women who left their last job is not higher than men - 27.6% compared to 28.7%. Women are not, as Bud

Have you been able to get regular summer employment?

If not, you are not alone. About one in six students were officially unemployed last summer. For you, the changes to Unemployment Insurance will not be immediately relevant because not having had a job you are automatically denied the possibility of collecting benefits.

If you cannot find work when you get out of school you may be eligible for $191/month, maximum on welfare. That is, if you live alone, have no assets or income at all, and are willing to submit to the closest scrutiny of your personal affairs.

If you are one of the precarious majority who had a summer job then proceed with some hope. But look ahead!

Did you work at a job that deducted UI premiums? Did you work at least 12 insured weeks?

If yes, you still have a fighting chance (but you'll have to fight for it).

If you said no to either question, Do Not Pass Go, Do Not Collect $110/week (the average UI benefit). Do check your local Sally Ann listing!

What are your job prospects if you do not return to school next year?

well below their training levels or were in short term government work projects. One quarter were earning less than $150/week.

Remember Bambi Meets Godzilla? If you answered no to the previous questions and are about to leave school, then Godzilla's foot is about to take that final step. CRUNCH. The existing inadequacy and further cutbacks in UI will exclude you from claiming benefits.

It will be impossible for anyone who has worked full time every summer, all summer, to collect UI when he/she cannot find a job after leaving school.

One of the proposed changes (see insert) destined for legal status in a month or so requires that a successful claimant have worked 40 insured weeks in the previous 2 years. The luckiest students might have 32. Tough luck!

Lets see: You have 1 in 6 chances of not finding work in the summer. There's about the same chance of being unemployed after you leave school, and then the likelihood that, if you do get a job, it will be short-term.

Total these up for an idea of the odds you'll be stranded out of work and income. Incidentally, if you rolled female on the genetic dice your chances are a good deal worse

Fall Sports Finale

King

This fall Queen's athletes gave us all something to cheer about. Those faithful fans who followed our teams throughout one of the most exciting and successful seasons ever, will remember a Queen's spirit that never gave up.

But it is not only the victories that will be etched in the minds of the athletes, but also the camaraderie and exhilaration of competition and the spent but content feeling that comes after giving one's all.

Queen's has one of the smallest sports budgets of all the QUAA universities yet one of the most expansive and successfully run programs for athletes striving to achieve excellence. The long hours given by team coaches and managers, trainers, those maintaining equipment and those organizing schedules which can never be measured, all made invaluable contributions to the achievements of our athletes. The last whistle has blown but the spirit lingers on.

WIC WRAPUP

Congratulations go out to Janice Hebert and Janet Raymond, who placed first and second respectively in the recent WIC tennis tournament. They finished on top of a field comprised of representatives from Arts 79, 80, 81 and 82, Nursing, MBA, Commerce and Engineering.

Bev Webb of Arts 80 is the current leader in the WIC Jogathon. Come out and join her on the track during any of the free jogging times, or alternatively, get involved in the WIC Skatathon or Swimathon. The emphasis here is on participation!

That just about wraps up our WIC sports for the fall term. Next term we are looking forward to a great winter season of Ice Hockey, Curling, Basketball, Competitive Volleyball, and much, much more. So why not join us?

The WIC executive would like to wish you all a Merry Christmas and a Happy New Year. See you next term!

BEWS season update

Bews has experienced a superb first term with participation very high and memorable games recorded. It would be impossible, in an article of this nature, to account for and laud all matches played this fall. However, several sticks and convenors have submitted their impressions of the highlights to date, so with their guidance, I will attempt to note those highlights.

In the past two weeks championships in several sports have been claimed. Commerce '79 defeated, previously undefeated Meds, in the Softball final. Meds was attempting to add that championship to their Harrier, Track and Field, Relays and Tennis championships of earlier this term.

The Innertube Water polo league was incredibly close this year. Chemical and Meds were strong all year and provided stiff competition in the playoffs. Civil eventually had their season-long unbeaten streak ended by Commerce '80 in the finals.

Civil remained defending champs in both individual and doubles Paddle-ball. Steve Blair and Rich Hamel captured the doubles title and Rich Hamel defeated Jeff Bech (Mining) in the singles final.

Mechanical is enjoying a terrific season in Bews. They are leading in the John Paul Standings and are currently third in Bews Standings. MBA and Commerce '79 have done well in both in Bews and the John Paul. Civil and Chemical have bettered their last year's position in the standings, while Meds have maintained a firm position throughout the first term.

A Season to Remember

Sports Feature Photos: DAB, DUMOUCHEL, EVANS, FRAUGH, GIDNEY, GROOS, JAF, JUDITH, KING, McAULEY, WOODS.

Fall season summary 1978:

Waterpolo
third in OUAA

Coach Simon Beitler has probably lost 10 years life expectancy this season watching his Waterpolo team. The Gaels finally came through however, by moving up into third place in the OUAA this year behind Carleton and McMaster and they did it by beating U of T in the fifth overtime period of the consolation final - the longest battle in OUAA history.

The scene was set when the Gaels finished second, two points behind Carleton, in regular season play. This meant that they had to play McMaster, the perennial Waterpolo powerhouse, in the first round of the final. McMaster slowly moved out over the Gaels then went on to win the tournament 8-0. This meant that Queen's and U of T (who had lost to Carleton) would play for third place.

The Gaels started strongly but watched their 3-1 lead, on goals by Mitch Dent, Chuck Leighton and Marty Rosen fade to a 4-4 tie at the end of regulation time. The overtime was nerve-wracking. The first period was scoreless. Then U of T scored to go ahead 5-4. With three seconds left in the second period Mitch Dent broke through the field and scored as the buzzer went - more overtime. The Gaels, rejuvenated, went ahead 2 goals with Bruce MacDougall and Dent scoring. It looked like it would be all wrapped up but U of T scored with 2 seconds left in the fourth overtime period to tie it once again. This set up a sudden death situation. The back and forth play of the fifth period caused the U of T defense to breakdown, and on a two-on-one break, Marty Rosen became the game hero, neatly tucking the ball behind the U of T goalie.

Next year looks good for the Gaels - all the veterans are returning and new blood will be coming in. The experience gained this year is going to show next year. The team wishes to thank all its supporters and Coach Simon Beitler for all they have given - see you next September guys!

Field hockey gals' future bright

The Senior Field Hockey squad this year proved that last year's success was no accident, as they continued to be one of the strongest teams in the OWIAA. Missing a return ticket to the Nationals by merely one point, Queen's 3 wins, 2 ties and 2 loss record was good enough for a close fourth place finish. However, the Queen's game this year was by far the best field hockey ever played by this university, and this is reflected in six Queen's players being chosen for the Ontario squad this year.

The intermediates continued their winning ways this year thanks to a talented group of newcomers and two invaluable veterans. Their work and dedication this year brought them second place in their division, but more important, has guaranteed a solid future for Queen's field hockey.

Strong finish
for Oarsmen

Strong performances by the Queen's Men's and Women's Rowing teams and all the Queen's Rowing Club have proven that Queen's oarsmen are serious competitors. The Men's varsity eight won the finals. The women's varsity eight came second in a photo finish. Queen's also came second in the men's coxed four, men's novice and the women's novice. The women's junior varsity crew rowed to first place in their meet.

The men's and women's varsity eights also went to Boston and rowed in the largest head race in the world - The Head of the Charles. The men were impressive in their move from 28th position to 11th. As well, the women moved from 35th position to 19th.

Queen's oarsmen have had an impressive season and much of their success is due to their undeniable enthusiasm and dedication, not to mention the dedication of the coaches.

Athletes of the week

Now that our fall season has concluded and the arrival of snow has ushered in the winter sports, a look at the Intercollegiate teams tells us Queen's is still holding her own against her rivals. Men and women's ice hockey, basketball, volleyball, badminton, squash and swim teams are among those who have begun competition.

This week we congratulate 3 Women as Athletes of the Week. Cathy Beaumont, Celeste Jennings and Wendy White swam for the Synchro team, each winning the event they entered, helping the team leave the meet in first place. Cathy Beaumont placed first in the Novice Figures, a class for those who have never competed in provincial or national meets, performing a combination of six separate skills. Celeste Jennings won the Senior Figures in which the six skills are a higher degree of difficulty. Wendy White swam a Solo routine with music, and her first place was based on both the composition as well as execution of the sequence. Once again the Synchro team has maintained its standard of excellence.

Another outstanding athlete representing Queen's this week as Carla Peplar of the Women's Swim team. Her 100 metre breast stroke win was a first for Queen's in a few years, and her second in the 200 metre individual medley displayed her strength and stamina. She was backed by an excellent day for the whole team.

Synchronized swimmers Celeste Jennings, Wendy White, and Cathy Beaumont.

Men's track and field
OUAA champs again

Gidney

The Women's Track and Field teams showed that they are going to be a contingency to be reckoned with in the future years. They competed extremely well this year with a relatively young team.

Several members of the team suffered injuries during the year which forced the coaching staff to work with a somewhat limited team. Despite all the problems the girls registered fine performances at Hamilton, Waterloo and Windsor.

At the OWIAA championships held in Kingston, they competed very well, but could not keep pace with the incredible strength of the University of Toronto's team.

The Men's Track and Field team had one of their most successful years of competition this season. They put the icing on top of the perfect cake when they won their second consecutive OUAA championship over the University of Toronto.

The team competed quite well in preliminary meets held in Hamilton, Waterloo and Windsor, but it wasn't until October 21st in Kingston that they put together an excellent team performance to win the Tart Mackenzie Trophy, emblematic of track and field supremacy in Ontario universities.

Congratulations are in order for Head Coach Rolf Lund and his highly competent staff - oh, congratulations, guys!

Third place for tennis

It was a rebuilding year for the Queen's Tennis Gaels. The team, which included three freshmen and one veteran, finished the season in third position behind York and U of T.

Queen's played two matches prior to the Eastern Sectionals. In a close, well-played team match the Gaels were defeated by St. Lawrence College in Canton, New York. At the Kingston Indoor Championships Jim Skirda and Doug Dittmer captured the doubles title and John Naccarato reached the semis in the singles.

Coach John McFarlane was pleased with the effort and the ability of Gaels Mark Hooey, John Naccarato, Doug Dittmer, Jim Skirda, and Don Bradley.

1978 Golf team grounded

The Queen's golf team, defending OUAA champs, had an average fall. Queen's was fifth of ten in invitations at Brock and Waterloo. The team placed fifth of twelve in the semi-finals at Guelph, qualifying for the finals hosted by Queen's at Port Hope. Due to a bad second day (inexperience), the team placed fifth of five. Toronto won by one shot over York. Individual highlights were provided by Frank Dixon and Gord Morland at Guelph, and by Dag Enhorn at Port Hope. Only Morland is graduating, so Queen's looks strong for next year.

Deals

Outstanding year for X-Country; women grab title, men just miss

The Men's Cross Country Team went undefeated this season until they met U of T in the OUAA championships where they finished eleven points behind the victorious Blues.

During the season there were many bright moments for the team. Adam Shoemaker and Rob Livingston went to the Nationals where they finished third and sixth respectively in their age categories. The team made a "perfect sweep" of the first seven positions of the RMC Invitational. They won the York University Invitational for the fifth year in a row.

Coach Dave Grant deserves a lot of credit for this tremendous contribution to the team this year.

The Women's Cross Country team proved they were the best team in Ontario by capturing the OWIAA Championship at Brock University.

The girls suffered their share of midseason injuries so it was not until the final week of the season that the team gained the needed conditioning for competition. Under Coach Curt Bolton's guidance the girls outran UWO for the title.

Sailors run for top positions

The sailing team concluded a successful fall season with a fifth place finish in the 18 school Timme Angston Regatta held over the American Thanksgiving Weekend in Chicago. Mike "Stickey" Glew and Sari Cross came on the final day to finish seventh in "A" division, while Terry McLaughlin and Janet Raymond had three firsts and three seconds winding up third in "B" division. Tony Snell acted as coach and alternate.

The past few months have seen Queen's sailors capture two Canadian Championships (doublehanded and triplehanded), and a fifth place in the North American Triplehanded championships, as well as dominating the racing at R.M.C.

In the new year, the team will be participating in the Windjammer Regatta in New Orleans, February, the Trux Umpstead in Annapolis, March, and the North American Two Man and Teamracing Championships in Chicago in June. Open to all sailors at Queen's will be the Canadian Intercollegiate Singlehanded Champs being run out of Geneva Park, Orillia in May. These regattas will provide the team with the chance to improve its current ranking as the tenth best squad in North America.

Rugby teams reign supreme

The Queen's University Rugby Club enjoyed their finest season in seven years with a sweep of the OUAA championships for both the first and second XV's.

The first XV's advanced to the OUAA finals by posting an impressive 7-1 record during the regular season.

The Gaels, lead by Captain Bill Payne and Vice Captain Steve Wilson, captured the OUAA championship on their home pitch edging the Guelph Gryphons 16-15.

Undoubtedly the Gaels second XV was the finest reserve squad ever fielded at Queen's as they rolled to eight consecutive regular season victories while yielding only 10 points.

The Gaels second XV capped their perfect season by trouncing the University of Western Mustangs to capture the OUAA championship.

Judith

Soccer success

The thrill of victory and the agony of defeat were both present this season for the Soccer Gaels. For the entire regular season they played superlatively in capturing the League Cup. However in the OUAA championship match they fell victim to Laurentian 2-0. Andy Goodman and Austin McChie led the team in scoring with 6 and 5 goals respectively, while Carl Saunders led the league with 6 shutouts in 11 games. Midfielder Mark Bennett was the lone Gael chosen to the OUAA Allstar Team for the second time in his 4 year career. All in all it was an exciting and worthwhile year for both spectators and players alike. Having dethroned CIAU champs, York, this year, Queen's looks forward to beating Manitoba, 1978 CIAU winners, in their next campaign.

No. 1

After a season of derision by the national media, the Golden Gael football team walked off with the national championship crushing the U.B.C. Thunderbirds 16-3 in the College Bowl.

For the Gaels, the game culminated a perfect season of ten wins and no losses. But the Gaels had to battle for their victories, edging Bishop's 15-14 to end the regular season, then defeating Carleton 17-13 in the playoffs.

After quarterback Jim Rutka was injured in the first McGill game, Bob Mullen stepped in to head the Gaels, suffering incredible punishment along the way. The offensive line got stronger as the season progressed and slotback Bob O'Doherty was selected most valuable player in the OQIFC-East.

Defence was the foundation of the team, allowing only 27 points in four playoff games and 84 over ten games. Dick Bakker was an all-Canadian lineman for the second year in a row. Middle linebacker Ed Andrew was voted MVP in the College Bowl. The defence would bend but never break, the secondary was never beaten deep on a pass all season.

After such a fine year, the Gaels tradition of excellence will be upheld. Queen's fine coaching staff, under the tutelage of Doug Hargreaves, know that pride will carry the Gaels to victory again.

Cutbacks

year's UIC cuts will be 6½ times that amount. The difference is being used to help finance explicitly pro-business budgets, especially to underwrite massive tax breaks for corporations.

economist W. Gillespie has calculated that the combination of unemployment induced tax revenue shortfalls and higher UI expenditures account for almost all of the combined deficits of federal, provincial, and municipal governments!

Why, in the midst of a severe depression, with a chronic lack of jobs, and increasing human suffering, is the government forced to perpetrate myths and create lies in an attempt to justify UI cutbacks that can only worsen the present situation?

If one is serious about answering this question it is necessary to understand the cutbacks and the actions of the state for the cutbacks are rational, to argue otherwise would be to trivialize history, our society and any attempt at understanding and consciously directing our lives. The next section outlines the real capitalist rationality of the cutbacks.

Capitalist Rationality and Cutbacks

Contrary to the apologist's accounts, unemployment is not due to the characteristics of those in the labour force - "unskilled, overqualified, too young, too female, too choosy, too many wanting to work", etc.

Nationalists, who attribute Canada's high unemployment rate to foreign ownership and resource dependency, are only accounting for about the top 2% of the jobless rate.

The problem is capitalism cannot "afford" to let us all work.

Unemployment is a necessary and inevitable part of the boom and bust system of "managing" the economy to assure long term private profitability. In Canada, the official rate of unemployment has exceeded 3% for over 80% of the time since 1921.

Today's jobless rate demonstrates the bankruptcy of reformist attempts to control the capitalist economy. The massive social unrest of the dirty 30's and the prospect of renewed unrest as WW2 veterans came home forced the government, in its 1945 White Paper, to adopt full employment as its primary economic policy goal.

This major reform, won by working class pressure, was to be accomplished by maintaining high levels of aggregate demand, in part through the provision of basic social services like health and education. These became available for the first time to the majority of the population.

Despite these commitments and state management of the business cycle unemployment has been rising in ever increasing proportions since

WW2. By the early 1970's serious stagflation clearly indicated the end of the post war economic boom that had made even relative success possible.

When the 1945 promises no longer coincided with the dictates of private profitability and their capacity to "fine tune" the economy, governments abandoned them - first only implicitly, but now quite explicitly.

No longer could capitalism claim to promise everyone the right to work, their share of national income, and the basics in social services. Is Labour demanding too much? In the first half of this year union wages rose by 6.2% while inflation rate rose 8.6% and corporate profits by 24%.

And profits for what? For grandiose energy schemes and ripping out resources to supply foreign industry and to swell multinational and Canadian financier dividends. Not production to ensure jobs, affordable housing, decent environmental conditions or the other things we could choose if the economy was controlled by the great majority who work and produce the wealth.

This is capitalist rationality. The rationality that demands a cut in individual real wages and in the social wage (eg health and education) in order to secure private profits. It is the rationality that cannot recognize the concurrence of too many goods to sell and a falling standard of living.

Capitalism shifts the burden of its failures onto the backs of its most direct victims. The government's capitalist logic is that, in particular, the most vulnerable victims - young and women workers - should be used as cannon fodder in the battle against threats to capitalist class control of the economy.

The U.I.C. cutbacks are part of this scheme to protect the status quo. Along with slashing other social services maintaining deliberate high levels of unemployment, legally suppressing wages, and directing massive subsidies to Capital, the cutbacks are being used to erode workers' strength and the democratic rights which were fought for so hard.

The economy is being "purged" so as to return to the "good old days". Unemployment is necessary to depress workers' wages and militancy. Cutbacks are required to shift public resources towards private profitability.

This article has argued that the proposed cutbacks to the UIC are socially regressive. It has tried to show that the official explanation is contradictory and based on unmitigated falsehoods. Lastly we have attempted to demonstrate that the cutbacks are inherent to capitalist rationality.

The choice is clear. Social forces must either support the continuation of capitalism and the consequences that entails; or they must support the progressive moves towards democratic social control of the economy and society.

The cutbacks being enacted on Jan 1 1979 are a small issue in this conflict. But nonetheless they are its immediate and concrete form, and one that is very relevant to students.

Details of proposed UIC cuts

In the midst of the worst depression experienced by most Canadians, 130,000 jobless workers will be disqualified from UI benefits next year, and another 270,000 in 1980-81. UI expenditures will be reduced $580 million next year and $935 million the year after.

(This comes on the heels of last year's major cutback which disqualified an estimated 269,000 workers this year by raising the insurable weeks worked needed to qualify by an average of 50 %.)

The following are the main points of the proposed policy:

1) The weekly benefit amount will be cut from 66.6% of previous earnings (up to the maximum of $160.) to 60.0% (and a new maximum of $148.). This year's average benefit amount of $110. will fall to $99.

2) Stricter eligibility requirements will especially penalize new entrant to the work force and re-entrants like women returning after childbearing responsibilities. In addition to the 10-14 insured weeks worked in the last year currently required, a further 26-30 weeks worked for a total of 40 weeks in the last two years will be needed to qualify for benefits.

3) Repeat claimants will have their work requirement raised from the current 10-14 weeks to 20 weeks for a second claim that year, unless the unemployment rate exceeds 11.5%. (The original proposal was to require as many more weeks of insured work as UI benefits were collected. Under strong pressure, since this would penalize short term job takers, and its very harsh effect on workers in seasonal jobs and those in depressed areas, this measure was withdrawn.)

The proposed cutbacks are aimed most directly at new entrants to the labour force. This means particularly school leavers, the young workers, and women, who often re-enter the workforce after periods of raising new workers.

Capitalism is denying these people along with millions of others the right to participate in the production of society's wealth, and individual self responsible life and hope for the future, by further driving them into positions of dependency and oppression.

Etrog award winner a reel loser

by Mark Henderson

The Canadian Film Awards had their 30th presentation in Toronto this year, closing the Toronto Festival of Festivals in the grand (and borrowed) tradition of the Hollywood, spectacular. The big 'winner' was The Silent Partner, an All-Canadian production financed by the new Toronto hot-shot producer Garth Drabinsky. Every effort was made to ensure U.S. distribution and generate excitement in the Canadian press. Elliot Gould, Susannah York, and our own Christopher Plummer got top billing and inevitably Toronto served as the setting for the production. Unfortunately, The Silent Partner is a classic example of bad entertainment whose raison d'être is the almighty dollar.

The prime mover of the plot is money, $46,000 stolen by a bank teller during an actual robbery, who is hounded by the short-changed crook. Elliot Gould plays the shady teller who learns of a plan to rob his bank, and has his serene lifestyle shattered when he keeps most of the money for himself and raises the ire of the vicious villain. Complications arise of course, and The Silent Partner details the resulting conflict mixed with some dumb comedy.

This film is simply bad news. Almost every aspect of the film-making process lacks inspiration and conviction from the people concerned. Obviously some of them felt that it possessed big profit potential, an accurate assumption considering the popularity generated in only eight weeks of distribution. This is where the role of the Canadian Film Awards becomes significant, its credibility in judging good art seems subordinate to becoming a mouthpiece for the industry.

The Silent Partner was awarded 6 Etrogs including Best Picture, and is well on its way to becoming one of the most successful Canadian films ever made. Director Daryl Duke, a marginal talent who began with the CBC over 15 years ago, must be singled out as being responsible for The Silent Partner's shortcomings. Lacking the confidence and ability to create suspense through visual composition and pacing, Duke foregrounds the violent and perverse actions of Christopher Plummer. We are subjected to a pointless scene in which Plummer tortures and brutalizes a young prostitute, portraying him as totally evil and therefore one-dimensional. The stand-by formulas for sex and sadomasochism are resurrected here, their most offensive form. They serve as purely gratuitous stimulation.

Susannah York and talented French-Canadian actress Celine Lomez have little to do except express confusion (York), and look sexy and disrobe for the camera (York and Lomez). The characters they play are superficial and sexist. Lomez, first Plummer's and later Gould's girl, has the added distinction of losing her head on the jagged edge of a fish aquarium, complements of a jealous Plummer. (Gould is a tropical fish nut, so this scene may have some deep significance which escaped my attention.)

Oscar Peterson contributes an original music score, probably a brainstorm of Drabinsky's to lend "class" to the production. Peterson's slick jazz score is generally dull, serving only to add "mood" to the action. It adds about as much class to The Silent Partner as the 6 Etrog awards do.

Elliot Gould wisely chooses to shuffle through the whole affair relying upon his characteristic grin and good-humoured foolishness. He's the best thing to be found in the movie, along with a small role played by John Candy from Global's Second City. Gould's confrontations with the villain allow for some good dramatic over-acting, a relief after the constant barrage of unmotivated sex scenes and dirty jokes. When it's all over, and Gould escapes with his money and Susannah York, the cheap tediousness of The Silent Partner has succeeded in overwhelming any interest in the outcome. In the end, the couple's big chance to escape from the boredom of their lives is our chance to leave the theatre as quickly as possible and forget that The Silent Partner or the Canadian Film awards ever existed. As for Garth Drabinsky, his new partnership with K-Tel International is currently backing The Changeling, a $6 million effort with George C. Scott. A word of warning therefore goes out to movie-goers everywhere. Drabinsky plus K-Tel is a combination no one should be subjected to.

Queen's artist wins first prize

by Madeline Mills

Normand Dutrisac, a sculpture student in the B.F.A. program, has been awarded $400 first prize in the 'Artventure' exhibition held at the Royal Bank Plaza, Toronto.

The prize winners were selected from student exhibitors in the field of sculpture who represent numerous Ontario art departments. The second and third prize went to students of the Ontario College of Art. These three artists will be asked to participate in a final group exhibition later next year with the prize winners from the other exhibitions in the Artventure program.

Dutrisac, works in steel because he says, "it's flexible, I can get my ideas out faster than in wood or fiber. I want to create a void with two or three lines that are sectioned or severed that will suggest some sort of visual plane. It's form for form's sake. I see a combination of steel pieces which suggest a construction that will work visually and I go on that—often it may be an optical illusion or maybe some specially balanced elements that create a visual tension".

Dutrisac, a French-Canadian from New Liskeard, had no training as a youth as there was no program provided. He loved to draw and always knew that he would become an artist. His older brothers went to O.C.A. and he went, first to Ottawa U., next to Sudbury community college and then into third year at Queen's, where sculpture became his sole medium.

"The B.F.A. is a good course", Dutrisac said, "it's not a big department and there is a good teacher student ratio. At O.C.A. a professor might have forty students; here, he would have eight or nine. Also, the professors are good, the course is flexible and the facilities are adequate."

Dutrisac has many influences. David Smith, Douglas Bentham, Andre Fantex and his French-Canadian culture "The culture", he said, "is very strong and I try to follow it but now it is so far away."

Rob Young and friends played at last Thursday's W.C. pub. A new trend?

"Live" from West Campus

by Brent Lavictoire

Rob Young should be no stranger to Queen's audiences by now. As well as numerous appearances at Bitter Grounds, Rob has opened for such notables as Bradstreet at Grant Hall. Last Thursday's West Campus pub was treated to a varied and very relaxed show from Rob, bass player Chris Riding, and (her first appearance with Rob) pianist Sarah Cunningham.

After opening with a short solo set, Rob was joined by Chris and, later, Sarah as the group moved through a variety of folk, mild rock, blues and jazz tunes. Combining original material with stylized renditions of Stills, Fogelburg, and Brewer and Shipley, Rob and "The Scrubbers" displayed great vocal and instrumental poise.

Of particular excellence were their versions of Lowell George's "Weed, Whites and Wine". The Buffalo Springfield classic "For What It's Worth" and Rob's own song "Home Again With You".

Rob handles his guitar masterfully; he's equally adept with flat and finger picking and his rhythm is perfect. Vocally he's just as good, possessing a strong, well-controlled voice. Though new to the electric, Rob's jazz stylings were light and immaculate despite some equipment problems. Chris Riding compliments Rob's style with a loose, inventive bass line.

For her mini-set Sara displayed an equally free flowing piano style. Her two original songs, "It's Taking Me Time" and "On the 23rd Floor", demonstrated her skill as a composer and her agility as a pianist.

Apart from one or two tables of loud talkers everyone at the pub enjoyed this welcome departure from the usual Thursday evening format. Congratulations to Veg for his new commitment to live music. Lets have more of the same next term. (How about George Thorogood next?)

First birthday for Another Space

by Julia Gorman

Another Space Gallery, at 191 Princess Street, just celebrated its first birthday last week. To celebrate, four students from the Queen's B.F.A. Program, Anne McCarthy, Anne Paxton, Jane Northey and Barbara Louder organized the exhibition Work in Progress. The show, which will continue until November 30, is made up of fifty very recent works by ten artists in their third and fourth year of the B.F.A. Program. The curators have succeeded in choosing artists whose works, executed in varying mediums, compliment each other and present a cohesive whole. The pieces are linked by their experimental nature. This exhibition points out that the idea need not be a serious one, and the works of sculptors Wendy Woon and Susan Price are meant to reach back into the viewer's imagination.

The printmakers work with varying techniques to achieve interesting effects which are invariably a more serious look at imagery. The subtleties of color achieved in Steve Elliot's photoscreen prints are strikingly off-set by Karen Dugas-Bialik's black and white photoetchings which deal with light as an almost tangible subject matter. The textural quality of Karen's work is seen in Janet Cardiff's etching "Dream in a Landscape", while Anne McCarthy prefers to juxtapose photographic images of the mind in her prints.

Three sculptors represented in the show, Jane Northey, Anne Paxton, and Barb Louder use their work to reach out into the viewer's space, taking advantage of the dramatic possibilities of art. Jane's fiberglass cardboard floor in the small gallery becomes a stage set in which to present Barb's "Walking on Water" and Jane's own constructivist pieces, while the individual elements of Anne's "Ritual Circle" seem to relate to one another as actors in a scene.

Work in Progress is not meant to be a final representation of ten artists' work, but rather as evidence of the development and diversity of their ideas. Perhaps the show will provide incentive for more students at Queen's to give us a glimpse of their work, taking advantage of Another Space Gallery.

Contemporary Canadians and the Old Masters

by Peggy Walker

Two exhibitions from the permanent collection at the Art Centre are currently being displayed until December 10th. The European graphics and Old Masters prints contain some magnificent examples of works by such artists as Francisco Goya, Theodore Gericault, William Blake, and Albrecht Durer as well as Canadian examples such as David Milne. It is also an attempt to explore print-making techniques illustrated by works from the Italian and Northern Renaissance to the present day.

This exhibition displays a history of techniques accompanied by an explanation of the different these techniques from such fine examples as Goya's That Certainly is Being Able to Read. This etching of 1799 belongs to his famous Los Caprichos series which satirizes the social and religious problems existing in Spain during the eighteenth century. This lively caricature was purchased by the gallery this year. Another recent acquisition is an engraving by William Blake, depicting an Illustration to the Book of Job.

The other exhibition contains Canadian contemporary oils and acrylics. Most of these works are from the former collection of Samuel and Ayala Zacks. In 1962, they gave over one hundred works to the Art Centre and provided the gallery with the most comprehensive collection of Canadian contemporary works existing at that time. Artists represented in the exhibition are Jean-Paul Riopelle, Tony Urquhart, Graham Coughtry, Michael Snow and Paul-Emile Borduas.

Heriot captures essence of Canadian landscape

by Peggy Walker

The Agnes Etherington Art Centre is currently holding an exhibition which is the first attempt at a comprehensive picture of George Heriot's life and the nature of his work. This exhibition continues until December 31st. As the elite of Kingston congregated at the Art Centre last Sunday for the opening of George Heriot: Painter of the Canadas, Dr. R.H. Hubbard, Cultural Advisor to the Governor General and Chief Curator at the National Gallery of Canada in his opening remarks, stressed the need for an increase in the study of Canadian art. It provides not only aesthetic value but also a background to our growing heritage and is valuable as a means of historical evidence. Other notables at the opening were Flora MacDonald, M.P. and Andre Bieler, Canadian artist. This exhibit does not only include works of a Canadian nature. Heriot studied drawing at the Royal Military Academy in Woolwich, England and came to Canada in 1792-1816 in several army positions. In his watercolours of Canadian topography, he has captured the essence of nature and the landscape portrait. Later, he was promoted to Deputy Postmaster General and this provided the opportunity for extensive travel. The sketches made from his journeys provided the basis for his later monumental landscapes and two illustrated travel books on Canada. After its Kingston showing, George Heriot: Painter of the Canadas will be circulated by the National Gallery of Canada to galleries in Toronto, Montreal, Ottawa and Windsor.

JOAN ARMSTRADING: TO THE LIMIT

To the Limit:
Joan Armstrading
reviewed by Bruce Stratton

Joan Armstrading's latest release, "To the Limit", is yet another fine album from this sensitive and intelligent English songwriter. On her last three albums Armstrading has displayed a style which incorporates elements of blues, jazz, and rock. The excellent reception of this style by the recording public has provided no reason for her to change her sound. Consequently, "To the Limit" is exactly the album one would expect to follow "Show Some Emotion."

Once again Armstrading is concerned with personal relationships and that old staple used by so many songwriters the world over - LOVE. Armstrading is able to be both kittenish and cool. On songs such as "Let it Last" and "You Rope Me You Tie Me" Armstrading shows a tough, non-nonsense side of her nature. But she is not cold-hearted by any means.

As she says, "Treat me good and I'll treat you right."

In the past Armstrading's music has been linked with the feminist cause. Seeing in her lyrics a rather self-sufficient tone, various feminists have been quick to claim Armstrading for their own. Although she has taken pains to dispell the notion that she is a mouthpiece for the feminist movement, Armstrading illustrates on this album exactly why she has been branded with this label.

At times she displays a very pronounced "I'm alright jack" attitude. One gets the impression that Armstrading is very capable of standing on her own two feet, thank you very much.

"To the Limit" was produced by Glyn Johns, a veteran who has worked in the recording field with such notable as The Rolling Stones. The result of John's efforts with Armstrading is an album whose sound is rich and full in parts yet is restrained enough to showcase Armstrading's excellent voice.

"To the Limit" is a very listenable record. It is quiet enough to be suitable for use as background music. There is enough substance to the album, however, to allow it to stand on its own as a serious collection of songs. One can sit down and listen to "To the Limit" with a critical ear and still not be disappointed.

This new album by Joan Armstrading will in all likelihood appear on many a shopping list being made about this time of year.

Other People's Rooms:
Mark-Almond
reviewed by Bruce Stratton

Perhaps the only people in the world who still use expressions such as "good vibes" are members of religious cults and jazz fusion musicians. Jon Mark and Johnny Almond, two gentlemen who still employ such archaic expressions, fall into the latter of the two categories. Their latest album, called "Other People's Rooms" and released under the duo's tradename of Mark-Almond, is a veritable treasure-trove of embarrassingly trite expressions and sentiments. To make things worse, these sentiments are expressed by Jon Mark in an intolerably breathy near-whisper.

The greatest crime perpetrated by Mark-Almond on "Other People's Rooms," however, is that by allowing such banalities to occur on the vocal track, they have buried their own talents as instrumentalists. The fact of the matter is that Jon Mark is a fine guitarist while Johnny Almond is a versatile and polished musician.

Both musicians played with John Mayall in 1969 when he abandoned his electric style for the revolutionary "blues without basing" technique. It is not surprising, then, that "Other People's Rooms" aspires to a high standard of musicianship.

The music on the album is rather uniformly mellow in a fusion-influenced manner. There are no dazzling solos on the album but neither is the music uninteresting, there is always something going on. The only problem occurs when that something is Jon Mark singing.

If you're a Barry White fan with artistic pretensions then this album is right up your alley. If, on the other hand, you're a normal human being you'd be better off either buying an old John Mayall LP or else waiting for Mark-Almond to release a totally instrumental album.

We abstain - therefore we are

Outer Council's decision not to abolish itself last week is the firmest stand it has taken on an issue since it approved "in principle" raising tuition fees. From this, we can probably (but not necessarily) assume that Outer Council wishes to continue its meagre existence. "Make no mistake about it, we want to continue to sit on the fence" seemed to be the collective message last Thursday night. This could have something to do with Outer Council's new policy of having donuts at the break.

The motion received little discussion for a myriad of reasons. Many council members seemed relieved to learn that a committee that they had set up a few weeks earlier would be discussing Outer Council's role. This effectively solved the problem for most of council - "no problem, we have a committee to discuss this, so we don't have to. That makes sense." Other members found their own reasons to avoid the issue. Dave Court, Commerce Society President, felt that he had better things to do on a Thursday night than discuss the purpose of Outer Council. Rory Cattanaach, Vice-President Operations of the AMS spent most of the debate attempting to "move the question" and hence force a vote. This may have had something to do with the untimely arrival of the donuts during the debate.

Dave Brown, who actually contributed to the debate in a meaningful way, had a speech prepared in the event that the motion passed. It ended, interestingly enough, with "You won't have Colin Cantlie to kick around anymore."

The debate itself, that Eric Evans, the motion's originator, found "disappointing", did bring out a few issues. Those who had prepared for a debate commented on the attributes of council with such glowing terms as "poorly prepared", "uninvolved", and "disgraceful". Even Mr. Court had to agree that some council members were poorly prepared. He stated that he had read about the motion (which had appeared in the previous Outer Council meeting two weeks earlier) in the Journal two days previously for the first time.

When it came time to vote, Council members keeping a close eye on the donuts, the results were predictable. Nobody voted for the motion, but five people did abstain. Mr. Evans asked that his "non-committal, wishy-washy abstention" be recorded, but the significance here missed most of council as they rushed for Tim Horton's finest. Mr. Bartlett also recorded his vote for the 497th time.

Also of interest, John Koopman, the Grandpa Walton of Outer Council, managed to fall asleep during the debate.

New grants announced

Tuition to rise $35

by Kim Fennell

Tuition fees at Queen's will jump 5% next year in response to changes in funding by the Ontario Government.

Bette Stephenson, Minister of Colleges and Universities, announced the "formula fees" used in the calculation of the universities' operating grants will be increased by 5%. This means the government is expecting universities to have higher revenue from fees, although it has left it to the discretion of the individual schools as to whether or not they will increase tuition. Universities have the choice of either increasing tuition or losing revenue.

The fee hike will mean about $35.00 for university students and $20.00 for those in community colleges.

Stephenson also announced that operating grants for post-secondary institutions will increase only 5% the following year. This, in fact, amounts to a cutback in real dollar terms because of the higher rate of inflation.

Vice-Principal Jim Courtright predicts that tuition fees will continue to go up over the next few years. "Tuition fees presently only make up about 12-13% of the total cost of running a university, whereas 30 years ago they accounted for 30-40%. We must realize that one of the best bargains in Canada today is a university education, but that there is growing sympathy among taxpayers for the philosophy of "Users should pay more."

Courtright stated that the Ontario Economic Council has suggested tuition fees should eventually increase up to the point where they pay for 25% of university costs.

AMS President Dave Brown pointed out AMS policy has been to accept tuition increases only on two conditions. The first is if the money is not used to downplay the provincial

Second nod for Watts

by Beth McKenzie

The reappointment of Ronald L. Watts to a second 5 year term as Principal and Vice-Chancellor of Queen's University was announced at the December 8 meeting of the Board of Trustees.

The decision to reappoint Watts was made after a unanimous recommendation by the Search Committee for the Principal (SCP). No other candidates were considered for the position, according to a member Board Watts stated, "I am very honoured to be asked to return, and am pleased to accept the position. Although there are sure to be difficult times ahead, the support which my colleagues and the students of Queen's have shown in the past has encouraged me to continue as Principal."

Watts, a Rhodes Scholar and holder of a Doctorate in Philosophy, first came to Queen's in 1955 as a lecturer. He obtained a full professorship in the Department of Political studies in 1965 and served as Dean of the Faculty of Arts and Science from 1969 until he was first appointed Principal in 1974.

Last February Prime Minister Trudeau appointed Watts as one of eight commissioners to the Task Force on Canadian Unity. According to one of his aides, this position has been demanding up to 50% of Watts' time. The commission has been preparing a detailed report on the relationship between the powers of the federal and provincial governments, and the importance of the relationship to the future of a united Canada.

In addition to these duties, Watts continues to hold the position of Vice-Chairman of the Council of Ontario Universities. He has also returned to the classroom this term to teach a class in the Department of political studies.

The forty-nine year old Watts resumes his post as Principal and professor.

Senior Journal editors step down

by Doug Ronson

Three Journal editors were forced to resign their positions recently due to academic pressures.

Ross Finnie, Opinions Editor, Martha Bell of Sports, and Entertainment Editor Chris Copp all gave their resignations to Journal Editor Chris Hall.

Each said that the twenty to thirty hours a week that they were spending on the paper was causing their grades to suffer seriously. "I hope to continue working for the paper and writing more, but academic pressures, particularly thesis requirements, make the editor's job too much", Finnie commented. Bell echoed his feelings, citing the hours that must be devoted to do a proper job at the Sports desk: "I was really disappointed, since I'd have loved to continue working with the paper. But it's just not worth it."

Copp also stated that academic pressure was the reason for his quitting.

contribution and the second is if a substantial amount is used to bolster student aid. Brown said neither condition has been met and that we should therefore oppose the tuition increase.

"My prediction is that either of two things may happen: 1) The government will take off the ceiling on tuition fees, or 2) fees will be unpegged between academic programs. Either would be disastrous."

Brown added, "I'm concerned about the pattern emerging for tuition fees. While we have to seriously consider the $35.00 increase, I am more concerned with the long-term implications. We should probably expect more fee increases in the future."

Hugh Christie, the Queen's Rector, stated, "The majority won't feel the $35.00 increase very much, but it's the people at the margin we have to be concerned about." He added, "If we had a perfect student aid plan then it would be easier to justify. But we don't and so a $35.00 increase means we have to work harder towards achieving one."

The Ontario Federation of Students has attacked the government's decision and has termed it, "another nail in the coffin of quality education." While the tuition fee increase is important, the OFS feels the underfunding of universities is more critical.

Alan Golombek, OFS spokesman said, "With tuition going up largely because of under-funding, the students are being nicked and dimed to death. Resources that are necessary are shrinking."

Bitter end

Members of the Bitter Grounds executive cited a number of problems that have plagued the coffee house's operation. Clark Hall is only available on Saturday and Sunday nights, and Sunday night performances have a long history of being unsuccessful. However, few performers are willing to do only a one night performance. This, combined with the rising cost of good performers has created a major problem in attempts to provide high quality entertainment.

The other major problem has arisen from a declining interest on the part of the student body. With these difficulties in mind, it has been decided that the continued operation of Bitter Grounds is simply not feasible since it is highly unlikely that it will become self-financing. As Cooper put it, "There just isn't the demand."

Students give paper "the boot"

By Warren Everson

A student newspaper beset with rising controversy and competition was cut off from student funding and officially disavowed when University of Waterloo students voted against The Chevron in a November 30 referendum.

Eighty two percent of 5,091 students voted "no" to the question "Should the Chevron continue to be the official student newspaper of the University of Waterloo, retaining its current office space and its current student levy?"

Over thirty five percent of the eligible voters turned out for the referendum, which was petitioned by the Engineering Society. The turnout was considerably higher than past votes in Waterloo.

Chevron organizers have vowed to continue printing, despite the referendum. Editor Dave Carter said

"We're convinced we still have a substantial readership and we're going to go on publishing."

The referendum came as a climax to a two year battle between the Student Federation and the Chevron, a battle punctuated by an official closure of the paper in 1976, an occupation of the offices by deliant Chevron workers, an eviction order that was overturned in the Ontario Supreme Court, an investigation by Canadian University Press, two referendums and occasional violence between the Chevron staffers and Federation supporters.

Federation supporters have accused the Chevron of biased reporting, and claim that the newspaper has been a sounding board for members of the Marxist-Leninist Party.

In reply, the Chevron protests that the Federation has spent the last two years determined to undermine and muzzle the press.

In a twenty four page report to the students published in September the Chevron listed its major complaints against the Federation, claiming harassment of its staff, financial and editorial interference and undemocratic attacks against the paper.

"Smit's (president of the Federation) harassment of the Chevron has been virtually a daily feature since he took office one year ago," the Chevron stated in an editorial written immediately after Smit had frozen the paper's budget earlier this year. "It is becoming more and more obvious that Smit will go to any end to harass, hinder and attempt to kill the Chevron."

The battle between the Chevron came to light in September of 1976, when Federation president Shane Roberts suddenly closed the Chevron offices and ordered the workers to leave. They refused, and began a nine month occupation of the offices, punctuated by one incident of violence, when new president Doug Thompson organized a group of 14 to remove staffers and lock the doors.

The Federation also got a court order evicting the Chevron workers, but this was overturned in the Supreme Court of the province. During this time, the staff published the "Free Chevron".

In June of 1977, the Chevron was reinstated as the official paper of the campus. An alternative paper, the "Real Chevron", had folded in the interim period.

Despite the intensity of the conflict, Waterloo students say the battle did not make a great deal of difference to the average student. "Nobody paid any attention to either the Chevron or the Fed's" said one third year Arts student. "We're all just sick of the bitching back and forth anyway."

Though the Chevron has vowed to continue publication, the paper will face competition from a new publication put out by the journalism club The Imprint has been circulated since September, and according to one contributor, appears to have been well accepted on campus.

AMS Election battle in sight

by John Bakis

For the first time in two years there will be an election to decide next year's AMS Executive.

As the deadline for nominations approaches, there are at this time two teams in the running.

Richard Binhammer, AMS Internal Affairs Commissioner, and David Corbett, Speaker for AMS Outer Council, and their respective teams will be vying for next year's AMS Executive.

By Friday, January 19, at 5:00pm, nominations from each team of Presidential and Vice-Presidential candidates accompanied by 250 signatures must be submitted to the Chief Elector Officer at the AMS Office.

Corbett, with his team of David Lindsay for Vice-President (Operations) and Nancy Burns for Vice President (University Affairs), feels that the formation of more than one team of candidates is a "healthy sign."

"There is now a good reason to vote in the spring referendum," said Corbett. "I expect a higher voter turnout."

Last year the AMS Executive was unchanged and thereby acclaimed as opposing teams could not be mustered in time to beat the January deadline.

Although Richard Binhammer refused to comment at press time, reliable sources state that Jeffrey Beck for Vice President (Operations) and Susan Morris for Vice President (University Affairs) will round out that team.

Article 5.5 of the Parking Regulations states in part "from December 1 to March 31, inclusive vehicles parked on surface lots between midnight and 0700 will be towed away if in the opinion of the Parking Supervisor they impede snow removal operations."

Since much of our snow removal program will be carried out starting at midnight, those who must use the parking lots for overnight parking are asked to use the spaces on the perimeter of the lots. This will ease the problem, reduce the incidents of towing and result in a much higher standard of snow clearing.

AMS Executive Election

3 Positions (as a team)

President

Vice-president Operations

Vice-president University Affairs

Nominations are due by 5 p.m., January 19th in the AMS Office.

Note: Nominations must be supported by at least 250 signatures and student numbers of AMS members, and accompanied by a letter of acceptance of nomination from the candidates.

At least one representative from each team MUST attend a meeting in the AMS office at 5 p.m. January 19th.

If there are any questions please contact Michael Birchard, Chief Returning Officer

The World in Brief

Ottawa The seasonally adjusted unemployment rate dropped slightly to 8.1 per cent last month, but the actual number out of work rose by 20,000.

Ottawa Prime Minister Trudeau (in Vail Colorado this week) is the only one of the 32 member Cabinet who officially took his vacation out of the country after Finance Minister Jean Chretien's advice to spend vacation money at home. However, 11 other Cabinet Ministers found that they had vital business matters to attend to in southern climes, including Chretien himself.

Peking Chinese scientists say they have developed the first safe and effective birth control pill for men. The pill, known as gossypol, has been available in Chinese clinics; health centres for 6 months.

Toronto The three editors of the Body Politics, a Toronto publication catering strictly to the gay community, were charged with sending obscene and scurrilous material through the mail, after publishing an issue containing an article on pedophilia called "Men Loving Boys Loving Men". The trial has drawn a lot of attention from the gay community who see it as an infringement on their right, also from Evangelicals who feel that such articles pose a threat to Canadian Youth.

Phnom Penh The dictatorial militaristic regime of the Pol Pot - Ieng Sary clique collapsed when Vietnamese forces conquered the Cambodian capital of Phnom Penh on Jan. 7. Some reports indicated that Pol Pot may have been killed. The rebels claim to have "freed" Cambodians.

France Canadian skiers suffered a setback in their assault on the World Cup, when Ken Read, winner of last Saturday's race and his team mate, David Murray, who finished 14th, were disqualified for wearing non-regulation ski pants which did not meet with regulations on air permeability. The disqualification cost the team 25 points.

Washington As of January 1, 1979, the United States officially recognised mainland China. Though this move caused great joy in Carter's camp it sparked great distress in Taiwan. The American delegation sent to discuss the procedures for withdrawal of American interests from Taiwan was met by an angry mob throwing rocks and brandishing weapons. American companies are rushing into China to take advantage of the new and extensive market opportunity.

Tel Aviv Ronald MacDonald is not flattered by imitation. The U.S. hamburger chain claims infringement of its trademark and is asking the court to refrain MacDonald's from selling their "Big Mac's" to Israelis - They are asking for $1,100 in damages.

Montreal Jacques Lanctot ended eight years of exile on January 6 when he returned to face a slew of charges including the kidnapping of British Trade Minister James Cross and conspiracy to kidnap Israeli diplomat Moshe Golem. Jacques and Louise Cossette-Trudel, who returned earlier and face similar charges are now free on $100,000 bail, awaiting a preliminary hearing.

Montreal All traffic signs in Quebec will soon cease to be bilingual and stop signs will read only Arret after a recent decision by the Quebec National Assembly. The change will be made at a cost of $40 per sign.

Queen's - disaster strikes

The new year brought with it a raise in minimum wage and legal drinking age. Underground patrons are reminded that the only legal identification card for Ontario residents wishing to enter drinking establishments is now the "Age of Majority Card". Students asked for proper identification at the Queen's pub will be denied entrance if they cannot produce the Age of Majority Card. Application forms may be obtained at the Underground.

Poverty meal Tuesday

by Kirsten Morris

Queen's students will have an opportunity to have the plight of Third World children graphically demonstrated to them on January 16.

On that day, Leonard and Lower Ban Righ cafeterias will only serve what the AMS describes as a typical Third World meal. Dinner will consist of rice (with sauce), salad and a beverage. Those not wishing to participate in the project may eat at Upper Ban Righ, where the usual Saga food will be served.

The dinner is intended to help raise money for the four foster children sponsored by the AMS. A basic stipend of $910 is provided for the basic needs of the four children, who are between the ages of six and nine. However, an additional amount of $800 is required for education and to cover family debts. The Outer Council has already agreed to donate $75, but much more is needed. (As well as this "Foster Children Dinner", buttons will be sold in Mac-Corby this Monday and Tuesday).

Saga Foods quite readily agreed to donate the money saved on food January 16 to the foster children. Since the savings will be calculated on a per-plate basis, that is by the number of people who eat dinner in Leonard and Lower Ban Righ cafeterias on Tuesday, simply missing a meal will not help the plan at all.

Hugh Dodd, AMS External Affairs Commissioner, hopes that the dinner will help make Queen's students more aware of the deprivation endured by most people in the Third World, as well as supporting our foster children.

Padre reappointed

Janet Brick

Rev. A.M. Lavery, "The Padre", has been re-appointed Queen's University chaplain.

The one year appointment will be his second post-retirement term.

The Padre is pleased with the re-appointment, saying of it and his 32 years at Queen's in general that: "I consider myself fortunate to be one-tenth of one per cent of the people who really like their work and wouldn't be doing anything else. It's a great place to be."

The Padre is appreciated by all people associated with Queen's. Principal Ronald L. Watts stated in announcing the re-appointment.

"The Padre", he said "has made a unique contribution to the life of the University and has earned the deep respect of the students, staff, faculty, parents and alumni."

Bookstore ripoff?

The Editor:

Another innocent victim falls into the greedy clutches of the Campus Bookstore. I went in this morning to purchase a required text for one of my history courses. The publisher's recommended price of $3.95 had not been very well hidden by a gummed sticker, the campus price was $4.70. My naive image of the "co-operative student bookstore" now shattered, I went to speak to the manager, confident that he would give me a reasonable explanation for such a drastic price increase.

Summoning my courage, I approached the manager's secretary, "May I please speak to the manager?" "I'm sorry the manager is busy at the moment. Can I help you?"

"I don't understand why this bookstore would charge 75c more for this book than the publisher's price. I would like an explanation."

"Well," the secretary began, quite offended by such a confrontation, "We paid $4.95 for the book and we're only charging you $4.70. That's 25c below our costs."

"I find that difficult to believe. The publisher's retail price is only $3.95. Since the store buys in large quantities, surely you must pay far below the retail price."

"Yes, it does seem strange; however, we were charged $4.95 per book."

"I think I would like to hear that from the manager," I said, smiling politely.

Finally, the secretary went into the manager's office. The manager looked up from behind his desk, peering at me from behind his glasses, obviously not very impressed by what he saw, (admittedly I have trouble looking ferocious) he quickly looked back down at his papers, dismissing me entirely.

The secretary returned confident in her victory. "The manager has confirmed my story. We were charged $1.00 more than the publisher's listed price and thus we had to pass that cost on to you. The price remains at $4.70."

"You mean he refuses to see me?" I asked, incredulous.

"He doesn't think it's necessary," replied the secretary, adding as an afterthought, "He's really very busy."

Beaten, I went to the cashier, paying the full price of $4.70. What else could I do? The manager et al at the Campus Bookstore knows that they can ask any price for a mandatory text and the students will still buy it. You would think, though, that the manager would have the decency to defend his position when challenged, instead of hiding behind his desk, ignoring the confrontation entirely.

The Editor:

After reading the article entitled "Unemployment Insurance Cutbacks" by Bill Burgess and Ross Sutherland, I felt compelled to write. There are many contradictions in the article which any intelligent reader will see. However, the main fallacy of their argument lies in their choice of solutions. They state that there are two solutions to support the present system or to adopt a democratic socialist state.

Messrs. Burgess and Sutherland can be thought of as two young aspiring doctors seeking to cure a heroin addict. They maintain that one can leave the addict to his dependency or increase his daily dosage of heroin. They totally ignore the third and most logical choice, to help the addict withdraw from heroin.

They state that our present economic system is a capitalist one. It is not. It is a mixed economy, a combination of socialist and capitalist economies. They seek to restrict our choice to socialism or "the continuation of capitalism and its consequences." What they mean is the continuation of a mixed economy and its consequences. There is only one consequence of a mixed economy and that is socialist state. One must choose, then, between socialism or an as yet untried system: pure laissez-faire capitalism. We have seen the results of socialism across the world. The result of capitalism, even though it was partially stifled, is our industrial civilization.

An interesting example of Messrs. Burgess and Sutherland's viewpoint can be seen in whom they say must make the choice. Is it each one of us as individuals? Is it the individual, relying on his own ethical and moral premises, who has to choose between freedom and what is basically economic slavery? No, it is some vague, undefined "social forces" which make the decision. In other words we have no choice.

But we can choose. We, as individuals, can choose to withdraw from the addiction to heroin or we can choose to increase the dependency.

And die

With friends like this...

by Gil Gross

The most significant and controversial international development of the past few weeks has undoubtedly been Jimmy Carter's stunning announcement of the establishment of U.S. diplomatic relations with mainland China. Recognition of the Peking government was inevitable, for thirty years, successive American administrations have denied the existence of a nation containing nearly a quarter of the world's population, vast resources and huge potential for international trade.

However, the timing and circumstances surrounding the "break-through" tend to leave serious doubts about the integrity and motives upon which the new Washington policy was based. For one thing, the deal was negotiated quickly and in complete secrecy as opposed to the Panama Canal Treaty, for example, which necessitated over ten years of negotiations, during which any progress was almost invariably open to the scrutiny and debate of U.S. public opinion. The mystery surrounding the China deal, gives the impression that Carter settled for less than American public opinion might otherwise have accepted.

Carter was also in need of a diplomatic coup at the time of his dramatic speech. Enthusiasm over Camp David has been on the wane, as Israel and Egypt seem locked in a virtual stalemate, with a treaty long overdue. Negotiations with the U.S.S.R. on a new SALT pact have all but fizzled, contradicting the optimistic predictions made by State Department officials of a signing by the New Year. Iran, one of the United States' closest allies and most essential oil suppliers is in pieces and Carter has been helpless and humiliated. And so, recognition of China, with its added benefit of new markets for American goods, was Carter's ace in the hole, and he used it in weakness and desperation, rather than in a position of political strength.

At what price has this triumph been achieved? Taiwan, a longtime American ally, has been virtually abandoned. Carter did not even insist on a basic reassurance from Peking that the island would not be invaded. Furthermore, Taiwan was never consulted during the negotiations, and was informed of its new status just hours before the word was passed to the world at large. Such trivial regard for the interests of an ally will leave other U.S. friends, such as Israel, South Korea, and Japan with lingering fears over their own expendability.

Was the triumphant recognition of China a bold, diplomatic move? Or was it a decision made out of weakness and political expediency, in which U.S. credibility and integrity were traded off for a few propaganda points? A bitter, betrayed Taiwan would certainly agree with the latter.

Apathetic look at the donut, responsible look at the whole

The Editor,

I was disturbed to read your editorial of Dec. 5 ("We abstain - therefore we are") because, in my opinion, your interpretation of the actions of Outer Council was, once again, deliberately obtuse. You seemed to regard the reluctance of some of the members of Council to enter needless debate as apathy. As one of the members who advocated an early vote in the debate regarding dissolution of Outer Council, I still feel fully justified in having done so. The motion was introduced with a lack of conviction. It appeared that the mover's intent was to call attention to the fact that some members of Council may not be performing up to par. Indeed, the mover's attempt to withdraw the motion immediately prior to the vote supports this belief. To me, it was illogical to propose disbanding a structural body because certain members may not have been satisfactorily discharging their duties. Surely it is the responsibility of the students who elect a representative to ensure that he, or she, is fulfilling his, or her job.

Reflection upon the motion in the question prior to the meeting led me, and other members, to dismiss it as inappropriate and to press for early closure of the debate. It was not therefore "Tim Horton's finest" but a desire for efficiency which lead certain members of Council to urge immediate defeat of the motion to dissolve Outer Council.

After a slow start, the "Spread the Christmas Cheer" program gained momentum, and completed its work successfully. Over 100 presents were placed under the Christmas trees in the John Deutsch Centre and at Ban Righ. The presents were gratefully received by the Salvation Army and passed on to numerous underprivileged Kingston children.

Thanks to the faculty, staff and students who donated presents, to Outer Council reps who encouraged others to "spread the cheer" and a special thank you to Rory Cattnach, Fiona Grieve and Marcia Turner, who were the driving forces behind the program.

Forum Free press threatened by pedophilia panic

by Drew Fagan

Underlying the trial of the Toronto-based gay magazine, The Body Politic is the issue of freedom of the press and the right of government to halt distribution of any material which it views as obscene. While the issue is debated as to whether the article in question was unfit for public consumption, the much more fundamental concern of whether those in authority should have the right, in principle, to protect the public from such supposedly scurrilous material has been largely ignored.

Freedom of the press is the very basis upon which a democratic system of government is built. The ability to be critical of the institutions that hold such a control over our lives ensures that those who wield the power of the state remain responsive to the needs and demands of the citizens. Within this freedom to express the views of the populace, lies the liberty to write of issues and opinions that are not held by the majority, that may, in fact, be viewed as reprehensible and alien by the public.

The article in question in just such a case. Pedophilia is, no doubt, one of the most distasteful of topics. In the effort to suppress the rights of the Body Politic to publish, two viewpoints on the essay Men Loving Boys Loving Men have emerged. Neither provide a basis for which to censor the magazine.

The first opinion, held by many individuals, is that while the article does not make a value judgement of either endorsing or condemning pedophilia, the essay does cross the invisible line that separates erotic journalism from obscenity. In effect, they are stating that since they find the article to be indecent and scandalous, the public at large should be denied the opportunity to read the essay and make up their own minds. By so advocating, they fail to realize that only through open discussion can such deviant behaviour be dealt with and better understood. Suppression of such issues only serves to maintain society's lack of understanding of the problem and to eradicate any stimulus towards better coping with such activities. The solution for those who find the article obscene is readily available, without relying on the need for censorship. Rather than taking the issue to the courts, they should have simply refrained from reading it and advised others not to indulge. The final opinion should be, as always, left to the individual. Those who are enthralled by the article should be free to read it, those to whom the article is repugnant should refrain. There is no need for the authorities to set our values for us.

The most violent and outspoken opposition to the article and the magazine has emanated from a number of conservative evangelical ministers. The opinions of these clergymen and their supporters, who are quick to express their concern for the dignity of the family and the protection of their children, is that the article was unequivocal in advocating pedophilia and portrayed it as a natural and enjoyable act. Such an article, they claim, can only lead to increased degradation of children and marked effect on sexual deviancy in our society. By pressing for censorship, they are forcing their morality on the public and to think that such an article would induce hundreds of adults with problems of sexual identity to swarm into the streets raping young children is nothing less than absurd. Furthermore, these religious zealots seem to have unjustly combined, as

Orientation selection defended

Open letter to Mr. Glenn Pettifer,
This letter is a response to your ill-founded allegations and half-truths regarding the selection of the A.S.U.S. Orientation Committee for 1979.

It should be made clear that the A.S.U.S. executive may alter the selection procedure at any time it deems fit. This year the executive felt that the old procedure (fifteen interviews to one applicant) should be replaced to make the whole system more productive and less imposing. We instituted a two-stage process. In the first stage, each applicant was interviewed by a committee of five people composed of executive members and members of the out-going Orientation Committee. In the second stage, an attempt was made to discover which individuals functioned well as a part of a group. Since the Orientation Committee must work together closely, it was felt that tasks that would force them to work together would be useful.

The committee to carry out the second stage of interviews was made up of the A.S.U.S. executive member, one Orientation '78 Committee member and one individual voted upon by the executive and the Orientation Committee, this year an executive member. There were not three executive members on the final selection committee, the President of A.S.U.S. and yourself, as former chairman of the Orientation '78

Committee were asked to sit in on the final interview in an ex-officio role. You failed to attend. The A.S.U.S. president did attend, but only as a non-voting chairman. He did not contribute to the discussion of the candidates or to the final selection.

You claim that the final stage of interviews was unfair as we used a technique introduced by NASA. If you had seen how we used the technique, in an attempt to see how the applicants worked together, you would have realized that no in-depth analysis was used as an attempt to study group dynamics or anything of the sort. You are quite correct when you state that any member of the Orientation '78 Committee or the A.S.U.S. executive could have evaluated the results. Indeed, you also forget that this test was only one section of the final interview. For the purposes that it was used, the situation was highly appropriate.

A.S.U.S. has no intention of reversing its final decision, due to your misinformed allegations. The selection procedure is not perfect to be sure, and we welcome any constructive criticisms or suggestions as to how it may be improved, but arresting the progress of Orientation '79 at this point would do more harm than good.

Ross Bartlett
Becky Farrar
A.S.U.S. Executive

criminals, those who write of such illegal acts and those who actually perform them. The paranoia that is evident against those who have, in their view, written an article advocating pedophilia is unfounded as this nation has adequate laws to protect the public from those unstable people who perform such illegal actions. No prosecution of those members of the press who analyse or advocate such acts is warranted.

In a democratic society, the only method that can be used to reach laws reflecting the mood of the populace is to allow freedom to express all viewpoints, regardless of their deviancy from the sanctified opinions of the public at large. Those who hold minority views must be protected and allowed to express them, or we drift into a state where our values are imposed from above. As such, censorship has no place in our society.

Our Foster Children

by Cecilia Cranston

Carmen Escalante, Magaly Arce, Anouald Edouard, and Eka Kristanto are children of the Third World. They live a life of poverty which is totally foreign to most Queen's students.

However, something that very few students here are aware of is that for 3 years our university has been helping these children toward a better life by adopting them through the Foster Parents Plan.

Eko, Magaly, Carmen and Anouald are typical of millions of children in underdeveloped nations. They live with their families in overcrowded one room dwellings.

Though the parents try to find work they do not earn enough to buy adequate food, clothing, shelter and medical care. The children are unable to afford anything more than the most basic education.

It is easy to see that the future for our foster children does not hold much promise.

Magaly Arce lives in Villa Latina, Bolivia. She is 9 years old and her social worker describes her as bright and happy. About 2 years ago her father abandoned the family so Magaly lives with her mother, Pilar, her 2 year old brother Oscar, and Pilar's 12 year old brother Eulogio. They share a one room hut, with a dirt floor and poor ventilation and light.

Pilar is a seamstress and makes $30 a month and Eulogio works as a porter. When we became her foster parents Magaly was able to start school.

Her city Villa Latina is an industrial town overcrowded with unemployed ex-farmers. The annual income in Bolivia is $150. It is one of the poorest countries in Latin America.

Carmen Escalante-Ecuador

Rice dinner at Leonard

The 19 dollars that we send to each foster child is not by itself enough to guarantee them a secure, productive future. The AMS will be holding a fund raising drive next week to collect money for furniture, school supplies, and other necessities for the children and their families. Some money will also be donated to the "Self Help Projects" in their communities. The goal is $800.

Rice and salad suppers will be served at Leonard and Lower Ban Righ cafeterias instead of the usual menu. (Upper Ban Righ will be serving the regular menu). The money raised will be used for the foster children.

Students in residence as well as students living outside are encouraged to participate in the rice and salad supper. The regular price will be charged to those not living in residence who buy the meal.

In addition, "I'm a Foster Parent" buttons will be sold in a Mac-Corry booth on Monday and Tuesday of next week.

FELICES PASCUAS

Carmen, Magaly, Anouald, and Eka

October, 1977

Dear Foster Parents,

I have gotten you letter, in which you ask about ma.

I think you are happy because you have a father, well I don't have one, and just my mother works for us and she does hard work for living, and for our education.

I have finished my finals, and I have turned on my next grade.

Here we are in vacations, but it came before because of the VIII Bolivarian Olympic Games.

I have a dog and its name is Coqueta, it likes to play, but cries a lot and when the dog is sad it does not eat anything.

We are in the Spring season, and the birds are flying out and singing.

Nothing else to tell you, and good bye with a big hug from your foster child,

Magaly Arce and family

Magaly Arce.

Eko Kristanto and his family live in Yogyakarta, Indonesia. Eko is 10 years old. He has two brothers, Dive Suyanto, aged 7, and the baby Suhartanto. Purwantiningsik, Eko's sister is 4.

Their father is a farmer and carpenter, and their mother sells spices. This produced an income of $14.22 per month before Queen's University started contributing.

Eko and Dive Suyanto go to school and receive extra tutoring from workers at the FPP office.

Anouald Edouard lives in Haiti with his 3 sisters, Marie Mirielle, Margareth, and the baby Adeline, and his 2 brothers Carlos and Guerland. Yolande Domiere, a friend, also lives with the family.

Anouald is 9 years old. Arnold, his father, used to be a bricklayer but for the past year he has been unable to work because of illness. Anouald's mother, Augusta, supports the family by working as a small vendor, earning about $35 a month. An annual progress report shows that the family has two meals a day and appreciates the help received from Queen's.

Carmen Escalante is 12 years old. She and her family live in Ecuador. Her father is a fisherman and her mother does laundry producing an annual income of $57, of which $46 is spent on food.

Carmen has two brothers Juan and Marcos, and three (3) sisters, Maritzon, Nelly and Lourdes.

A major difficulty encountered when such a large organization as Queen's University becomes a foster parent is the lack of personal touch with the children. A few students are answering and exchanging letters with them letting them know that we care, but the children would like to know a few more of us.

Anyone who would like to write a letter to one of the children can contact Cecilia Cranston at 549-4263.

The Alma Mater Society of Queen's pay $19 a month for each of the children through Foster Parents Plan of Canada.

This money goes toward the costs of food, shelter, clothing, medical, and educational expenses for the children and their families (Only 12% of the FPP's budget was used for administrative purposes in 1977).

The community in which the child lives also receives some money from the FPP General Fund for "Self Help Projects" which involve setting up small industries and farms, or improving the housing sanitation, medical and educational facilities.

As far as possible the FPP hires and trains local people for work in each area that it serves. In these ways they hope to help the whole community as well as to maintain the child on a day to day basis.

In addition to the $228 they receive annually, Magaly and Anouald have each received cash gifts from Queen's students. These gifts can be allocated where the foster parents see fit, or where social workers in the various developing countries wish to allocate them.

Whenever we send a cash gift, the social worker sits down with the foster child's parents and discusses its use. This way the family can decide on its own priorities.

September 11-78

Dear foster parent

I am very happy to write to you this letter to greet you and to hear from you recently.

How are your activities? For me I am keeping better and we are praying for you so that you may enjoy a good health. It is hot and I have to bath every day to get cool. My father is keeping fine and we are praying for you to enjoy a good health also.

My greetings to all your family May God bless you.

Your foster child Edouard Arnold

Superman bites the dust

by Mark Henderson

Superman is essentially a Marlon Brando movie. Although he lasts only 15 minutes into the film, the remaining two hours are atrocious and not worth the time of day. Superman represents the cheapest example of big movie hype, with a seven million dollar advertising campaign that could have produced Easy Rider ten times over. According to one source, the public had seven billion chances to hear about the movie before it hit the screen, but all the high-sell promises are never delivered. Christopher Reeves plays the lead and is as unconvincing as the special effects which cause him to fly, turn back time, and rescue America from the forces of evil. The film also projects extremely unhealthy moral values and is boring to boot.

Marlon Brando's role as Super-man's real father manages to begin the film promisingly, as he plays the role totally straight and rises above the material he's immersed in. Once the planet blows up and his child is sent to earth, the film loses its direction and relies on moments of humour or action to hold one's attention. The arch villain (Lex Luther) is played for laughs by Gene Hackman, with blatant homosexual overtones that I found tasteless rather than entertaining. Mythical confrontations of this kind, between good and evil, can be great if they are well structured and thought through (ie Lord of the Rings). Unfortunately Superman veers off course and chooses to concentrate on the romance between the super hero and Lois Lane. With a story as simple as this one, it can't afford to dilute its focus, and boredom sets in quickly. Lines like, "I never drink and fly" don't solve the problem.

The moral values of Superman (the hero) stands for are archaic and imperialist to say the least. The film associates him with Jesus Christ, gives him a god-like power to judge and deal out justice, and portrays him as buddies with all institutions of law and order. His journalistic disguise, while true to its comic book source, perpetuates this divine right to interpret facts and lock up that mean faggot Lex Luther for trying to harm good, honest American citizens. It's all too much for the film's fantasy framework to take and becomes quite offensive.

I can ignore a certain amount of cultural and sexual bias in my movies if they are well done, after all, I've been a Clint Eastwood fan for years. But Superman is technically unimpressive and occasionally sloppy. Special effects must contribute something to a film to have any impact, but here they're tacked on and are merely gratuitous. The flying sequences, supposedly the crucial aspect of the film's success, are as fake as they were in the Flash Gordon serials of the 1930's. Superman ultimately represents an elaborate scheme to cash in on the current fantasy/spectacular trend started by Star Wars. It isn't a particularly good attempt, but the film's backers (Ilya and Alexander Salkin) probably won't mind.

Marlon Brando shines in Krypton's crystalline world as Superman's father.

NFT premieres Bunuel's "That Obscure Object of Desire" tonight.

NFT screens Bunuel

by Mark Henderson

Consider if you will, a wealthy, middle-aged aristocrat who meets a young Spanish beauty and is overcome by an uncontrollable desire to possess her. She admits that she loves the man but refuses to have sex with him. That Obscure Object of Desire, Luis Bunuel's most recent excursion into the realm of the surrealist sensibility, examines this curious relationship with the force and irony that has established him as a master of world cinema. The National Film Theatre, located in Ellis Hall, is presenting the Kingston premiere of the movie tonight at 8 o'clock, and it should be an event to remember for those who grab the opportunity to attend.

Bunuel has been a source of shock and indignation for some and bizarre joy for others over the years. Originally from Spain, he returned to his homeland in 1961 to direct Viridiana and so outraged the Franco regime that he and the film were promptly banned. Few conventional morals are sacred to this man, as That Obscure Object of Desire makes hilariously clear. Mathieu, the Frenchman "possessed" by desire (brilliantly played by Bunuel regular, Fernando Rey) is constantly irritated by terrorist bombings wherever he travels to search for his "obscure object" the alluring Conchita. She is strangely played by two actresses, who randomly alternate scenes for no logical reason. Whether this elusive girl is just a tease or someone who stands for individual liberation is left for us to decide.

What ultimately lies beneath the film is a savagely personal criticism of values upheld by Catholicism and Western bourgeois behaviour: conventional notions of sexuality, religion, and class relationships are humouredly slandered by Bunuel's surreal eye. A flashback style provides a lot of the comedy in That Obscure Object of Desire, as Mathieu replays to a weird group of fellow train passengers, his adventures and frustrations with Conchita. He tries to bribe the girl's mother for her affections by contributing money to the church, he buys Conchita a beautiful Spanish villa, and even uses police pressure to win her over, but all efforts fail. She seems to taunt him, or trick and use him until he becomes desperate.

One must see the film to fully appreciate its wonderful complexity and wit. It is bizarre in the most entertaining fashion and definitely check it out tonight. You won't regret

The top five albums of the year:

by Bruce Stratton

It is somewhat ironic that, although 1978 was by no means a lean year as far as pop music was concerned, there were no albums which stood apart from the crowd. Groups such as The Rolling Stones and The Who produced good, but not exceptional, albums. Ian Dury, Elvis Costello, and Talking Heads released albums which helped to make Punk and New Wave a form of music that can be listened to as well as talked about. Canoe, Harmonium, and Bruce Cockburn all put out albums which were interesting and enjoyable, even if somewhat predictable. Many artists released albums which were good; few produced albums which broke new ground.

George Thorogood moves it on over.

The following albums are in no particular order.

George Thorogood and The Destroyers
Any fears that the blues were dying in the late seventies have been dispelled entirely by the two albums that George Thorogood released in 1978. Both George Thorogood and The Destroyers and Move It On Over contain elemental, hard-hitting, blues-based rock and roll. Music to dance to in crowded, sleazy bars.

Cars: The Cars
A very impressive debut album, Cars is a catchy blend of New Wave, Punk, and pop. The album is also something of a breakthrough in that two singles taken from it became the first New Wave - Punk influenced songs to receive airplay on AM radio in North America.

Q: Are We Not Men? A: We Are Devo!

Although something of a sensational joke, Devo's first effort was nonetheless one of the most interesting and entertaining of the albums produced in 1978. It could be said that last year was the year of Brian Eno. This album is one of his most fascinating and accessible works.

Jazz: Ry Cooder
A very fine reworking of various tunes dating back to the Jelly Roll Morton era. Cooder's interests are proving themselves to be as electric as his taste is impeccable. This unsung album is worthy of investigation.

Comes a Time: Neil Young
This record is as good as any Young has produced. For any Neil Young fan this is enough of a reason to warrant the inclusion of Comes a Time in the best of 1978.

Most Alarming Demise:
Keith Moon, Terry Kath, et al not withstanding, the "Death of Folk," as reported by the Globe and Mail, was this year's most upsetting passing-on. Confirmation of The Globe's report was found in the disbanding of Short Turn as well as the behaviour of David Bradstreet and Valdy.

Slick Merchandising Maneuver:
Last year saw the advent of "picture-discs". This product is not only inferior to regular old black vinyl, but it also sells for three times the normal inflated price.

Most Worrying News:
Almost one in every twenty Canadians bought "Bat Out Of Hell."

Most Tasteless Disco:
"Disco Devil" was released last year. This fantastical record featured disco versions of "Under My Thumb" and "House of the Rising Sun". A close runner-up in this department was the collection of disco Christmas Carols.

Choreographer of the Year:
This award goes to the inspired soul who choreographed Kate Bush's performance shown on Saturday Night Live. Truly amazing.

The Paul McCartney Fizzling Star Award:

This year's winner being Bob Dylan for "Street Legal" as well as his recent tour. Maybe now that he has paid off the debts incurred in making Renaldo and Clarissa Dylan can go back to making real music.

Ry Cooder's "Jazz" deserves more attention.

Banning of the Year:
A free set of moral blinders goes out to the folks down at the AMS for their uncalled for actions with regards to the (Battered) Wives.

Were you impressed with 1978?

No. 1 Rolling Stones; Some Girls
The Rolling Stones haven't rocked like this in years. Some Girls may be their best ever. Every single track on this album sizzles.

The Stones have always been their best when they're upset and rude. Jagger and the boys have reached a pinnacle of vindictiveness on Some Girls. Titles like "When the Whip Comes Down", lines like "Laughter joy and loneliness and sex and sex and sex" and the infamous "Black girls just want get..." provide an easy indicator for the album's mood; it's sultry, bored to violence and bustin out all over the place.

Instrumentally the album is just as ferocious. Every beat spells frustration and anger. Even the mildly comic "Far Away Eyes" speaks of the Stones' oppressive boredom.

Several influences must be thanked for jolting the Stones back to their former selves. The effect of Jagger's recent problems with various legal suitors and his estranged wife Bianca is obvious. Thanks World for hassling them out of their recent complacency and special thanks to Bianca for being such a sleaze; it adds the perfect touch.

No. 2 Steve Hackett: Please Don't Touch
Hackett's departure from Genesis may prove more fatal than the loss of both Peter Gabriel and Phil Collins. Any group relying heavily on instrumental flow, such as Genesis, must suffer when they lose their best musician. While Gabriel's two solo albums and his "alternative lifestyle" might be termed "interesting, a term which might also be applied to Collins' Brand X product, Hackett has created an album that is richer, fuller and more diverse than the Genesis members have ever produced, individually or collectively.

A lot of the energy and excellence which lies in those magical grooves of Please Don't Touch is owing to the perfect combination of vocals and instrumentals, among the most compelling ever recorded. Steve Walsh of Kansas and Richie Havens, who handle most of the vocals, benefit as much as Hackett from their association; they've never sounded better. Other guest artists include Phil Ehart, also of Kansas, and keyboards wizzard John Acock. Also, Acock's and Hackett's production rates second only to Allan Parsons.

The themes of the album, inspired by the literature of C.S. Lewis and Agatha Christie, deal with forgotten worlds and life's intangibles - the yearning of love, the sorrow of loss and the void of ambition.

Hackett's talents as a composer and arranger are only overshadowed by his guitar mastery. His numerous special crafted twelve string guitars are so fluent that it doesn't seem humanly possible to create such complex runs. The best in the business when it comes to electronic effects, Hackett is one of the rare performers left who controls, and is not controlled by, the tools of his trade. Again, obvious parallels may be drawn with Parsons.

No. 3 George Thorogood and the Destroyers
Thorogood's two albums released this year are equally excellent. Though the premiere has a slightly more traditional blues edge, Move It

Chuck Mangione: Children of Sanchez

Always seeking the unexplored jazz, Mangione has outdone himself with Children of Sanchez. The album's intensity is directly owing to the creative pressures Mangione forced on himself and his band during the mammoth recording session which produced over 23 hours of music for the Hall Bartlett film.

Children of Sanchez covers an amazing spectrum of mood and music. Mangione creates a most are those which pack a lot of emotion musically. Seger's latest, though a studio album, sounds as close to the "real thing" (Seger live) as I can imagine. It's a dynamic recording.

In many ways it closely resembles Jackson Browne's Running on Empty. The hectic life of a touring musician shines through. A devoted tourer, much of Seger's fame lies in his stage performance. Stranger in Town faithfully captures a concert atmosphere without the production headaches and external trappings. A solid album from a solid artist.

Honorable Mention
Wavelength, Boys in the Trees, Hemispheres, Brother to Brother, and S2nd Street. Interchangeably, these albums would occupy the next five positions on my list if it were expanded to a top ten. Probably the best efforts yet by most of the artists responsible for these albums. Watch for Vanelli's newest to be a big seller in '79, it's just been released and deserves extra attention.

Biggest Disappointment
After waiting two years for Valdy, next release I wish we could wait another two. Hot Rocks is stone cold.

Most Confusing
Disco Bob's Street Legal should keep us on our toes and waiting for some time.

Best Produced
Alan Parsons's is, without a doubt, the most talented producer in the industry. Pyramid continues his line of marvellously original albums neatly packaged under a unifying theme.

Most Influential
If Elvis Costello were never to record another album, My Aim is True and This Year's Model would suffice. There's a big change happening in music right now and we can all thank Costello for it. Otherwise, people like Thorogood would still be playing cheap bars. Remember though, Elvis may be King, but Todd is God.

Worst Album
Anything falling under the heading which begins with a "D", and ends with an "O" and is usually suffixed by a "sucks".

outstanding adaptations and rerecordings of almost forgotten classics ever pressed. Chuck Berry's "It Wasn't Me", T.J. Arnall's "Cocaine Blues" (made famous by Johnny Cash), and the title track, an old Hank Williams tune, will have you hoppin' in seconds flat.

A close copy of the early sixties Stones, Thorogood and the Destroyers are members of an increasingly peopled movement back to the basics in music. Thorogood's blues numbers, in many cases, out "blues" the originals, while his rock and roll cuts scream for more volume. On top of it all he's probably the best slide guitar player around.

The back up band is simple, the vocals are rough, and the sound is dynamic. You thought John Baldry was exciting to see live! Thorogood and the Destroyers are a sight not to be believed live; their energy is more than infectious, it's intoxicating. The band is presently touring Ontario universities. If the QEA could land them for a night I'd kiss Opzoomer's feet.

remarkable flow throughout the two discs, alternating the "feeling" with ease, and it feels good.

Mangione says of his colossal effort, "Writing and recording this music was one of the most intense and emotional experiences of my life. I consider it to be some of the strongest music that's ever come from within me."

No. 5 Bob Seger: Stranger in Town
My preference in music should be obvious by now. The albums I enjoy

Diverse film selection makes up year's best

by Mark Henderson

Trying to impose the term "best" onto 5 of the hundreds of films released last year is a difficult and somehow unfair task to undertake. However, I have managed to persevere and choose a handful of cinematic gems which I liked more than the rest in a generally dull year for the movies of a commercial nature.

The Last Waltz (Martin Scorsese: Warner Brothers) is possible the best rock film ever made, and certainly the most impressive I've seen. It is an emotional and loving record of the last concert given by The Band, before they called it quits after a long and successful career. Pre-planned to the last detail and filmed with two of the world's most respected cinematographers, the film represents a beautiful synthesis of event and afterthought. Interviews with members of The Band sit-set the songs performed, with a host of guests contributing their talent and admiration for a group of musicians who used a unique mellow-rock sound to communicate their feelings to a whole generation. The result is a bittersweet, nostalgic farewell, courtesy of director Scorsese and people like Bob Dylan, Muddy Waters, and Eric Clapton who provide the film with its highlights. Bravo.

Pretty Baby (Louis Malle: Paramount) is an extremely sensitive and complex film that didn't see the light of day in this province. Its inclusion in this list is valid though, as Malle's "European" sensibility produces wonders with the story of prostitution in New Orleans during the Great War. Pretty Baby succeeds on the levels of character delineation, nostalgic contemplation, and self-reflection of the voyeuristic nature of cinema. Keith Carradine plays a rather strange photographer who undertakes compiling a record on film of the women who are born, live, and die in the district of Storyville. His stay at one particular brothel results in his marriage to a 12-year-old prostitute, played by Brooke Shields. Malle questions the morality of the situation admirably, as well as the mentality of a society which forced legal prostitution out of the south, leaving the viewer with a mysteriously sad feeling. Sven Nykvist's cinematography is inof Peckinpah's vision of the Old West and contemporary American culture. This Kristofferson plays the hero, searching for the elusive meaning for his own existence and becoming a symbolic leader of a convoy of misfits and the common folk of America. He represents individuality in a society of mass conformity, as Peckinpah infuses his sly pessimistic way of seeing to give Convoy a deep feeling of loss amidst the action and conflict.

His reputation for excessive violence is wonderfully ridiculed throughout, especially in a barroom light where a bottle of ketchup manages to cover everyone involved. And slow motion too! The superimposed shots of the 18 wheelers seemingly gliding through one another across the desert sands in a symphony of motion creates a quasi-surrealist effect of amazing poignancy. Peckinpah affirms his mastery of artistry within an entertaining framework, and Convoy provides a shining beacon among the Hollywood lights of 1978.

Pretty Baby (Louis Malle: Paramount) is an extremely sensitive and complex film that didn't see the light of day in this province. credible, creating a rich collage of images dominated by browns and reds. A truly exquisite experience. Although 1900 (Bernardo Bertolucci: Paramount) was completed in 1976, it wasn't released in Canada until last year. A 4 1/2 hour epic that traces the rise and roots of fascism in Italy, its accumulative power is devastating. Bertolucci is a Marxist of sorts and he gives 1900 a personal and ideological flavour not usually seen on this continent. It rings true in many ways though, as the films touches upon the economic, cultural, and individual reasons why fascism became so popular. Donald Sutherland plays one of the most evil human beings I've seen on film, while Robert De Niro scores as a man caught between social position, personal ties, and his confused conscience. 1900 is long but amazingly cohesive and engrossing. A landmark movie.

Luis Bunuel's That Obscure Object of Desire is my personal and biased pick for THE BEST film of 1978. It's almost impossible to describe a Bunuel film to the uninitiated viewer, but suffice to say that the movie is challenging, witty, cynical, mad-dening, and highly entertaining! Coincidentally, it's having its Kingston premiere at the NFT tonight and I've expanded on its merits elsewhere in this paper. Bunuel gives one a new way of thinking about desire that you soon won't forget.

Gaels salvage tie with late rally

by Chris Cuthbert

A tie with the cellar dwelling Ottawa Gee Gees is usually nothing for the Queen's Golden Gaels to get excited about but the Gaels had reason to be pleased with Tuesday night's 3-3 draw in Ottawa.

The Gaels, playing their first league game in over a month and with four key players missing from the lineup, staged a tremendous last minute comeback to produce the tie.

The final minute flurry featured Kevin Treacy and Dale Sandles scoring goals 19 seconds apart with goaltender Barry Ashby pulled for an extra attacker. A costly crosschecking penalty to Ottawa's Hugh Mitchener opened the door for the Gaels' comeback. Treacy's marker, at 18:44 of the final frame came with Mitchener in the penalty box and the Gaels utilizing six attackers. Seconds later the rattled Gee Gees iced the puck causing a faceoff deep in Ottawa territory. Again Ashby was summoned to the Gaels bench for a sixth attacker. The Gaels mounted the pressure until sandles whipped the tying goal past Ottawa goalie Bill Thompson from a goal mouth scramble.

"The team played pretty well considering the long layoff and it was sure a lot of fun coming back like that," stated coach Fred O'Donnell.

The Gaels had taken an early first period lead on another goal by Treacy who was sent in alone by a nifty Joe Minken pass.

Ottawa picked up the tempo in the second period, outshooting Queen's 13-5, and tying the game on a goal by Dave Saunders.

The third period saw Ottawa score two quick goals to take the lead. Defenceman Gerry West, again a standout for Ottawa, scored the prettiest goal of the evening on a brilliant end to end rush, splitting the Gaels' defence and deking goaltender Ashby. Rick Makuch followed 43 seconds later blasting a shot between Ashby's pads. That set the stage for the Gaels' last minute heroics.

Ashby and Thompson turned in fine performances in their respective nets with Ashby kicking out 33 shots including 15 in the final period. Thompson turned aside 20 shots in the Ottawa net.

The tie pulls the Gaels a single point ahead of the York Yeomen and within two points of the second place Laurentian Voyageurs. As the playoff race in the QUAA eastern division heats up the improving Gee Gees could play the role of spoilers.

"They're going to knock off one of the other clubs", said O'Donnell. "The Gee Gees are a pretty well balanced team and they'll beat you if you're not ready for them."

GAELS SHORTS-Tony Manastersky

took a shift on the Gaels' defence making him one of the few players ever to be in uniform for the Queen's football and hockey teams in the same year. Barry Ashby took a shot on the face mask in the second period but stayed in the game and turned in a strong performance. Ron Folk returned to the lineup after recovering from a broken wrist suffered Nov. 14 in Ottawa.

Gaels host Vees this WKend

by Chris Cuthbert

The Queen's Golden Gaels entertain the Laurentian Voyageurs this weekend in a doubleheader which could put the Gaels on track for a playoff berth or derail their aspirations of post season play altogether.

The Gaels will have three regulars returning to the lineup for the weekend encounters Centre Ron Davidson (returning from the very successful Olympic White team), Willie Wing (bruised instep), and Mike Conway (knee) are welcome additions to the lineup which tied Ottawa 3-3 Tuesday night. Still sidelined with a shoulder separation is blueliner Joe South.

Queen's swept a pair of games from Laurentian 6-5 and 9-6 early in the season at Sudbury but have been winless in their last six games.

A pair of victories by Laurentian at Jock Hartly Arena last season which eliminated the Gaels from the playoffs, should be an incentive factor for the Gaels this weekend.

The Gaels have played an exciting brand of hockey this season and should draw large crowds for the Friday night (8:00 p.m.) and Saturday afternoon (2:00 p.m.) contest. As well, CFRC 1490 will broadcast the games with Al Wilson and Scott Whitley calling the action.

Can-Am Wrapup

by Don Mackinnon

Before fewer fans than those who watched Queen's defeat U.B.C. in the College Bowl, an American allstar college football team convincingly defeated a plucky Canadian squad, 34-14.

The Canadians, who entered the game with high hopes of improving upon last year's 22-7 defeat, were able to hold the high-powered American offence in check for the first thirty minutes of the game. Leading 14-8 as the third quarter started, the American's crack quarterback, Dave Marler of Mississippi State, threw his second long touchdown pass to Martin Cox to break the game open. Minutes later, Ira Matthew of Wisconsin returned Bob Cameron's punt 58 yards for a touchdown.

In the fourth quarter, the teams traded touchdowns, the score ending 34-14.

The Canadians fielded a team that opened a lot of eyes. Without the speed of the Americans, and generally a bit smaller, they nonetheless showed quality players at all positions. Queen's Dick Bakker at defensive tackle recorded a sack late in the game to climax a strong personal effort, and Bob O'Doherty, for the second year in a row finished as the Canadian's leading receiver.

John Vernon, the most under-rated linebacker in Canada, completed the trio.

This year's American team was reputed to be, and looked, better than last year's. From that squad, ten players made the N.F.L. This year's club should yield even more gold for N.F.L. scouts. Yet the Americans left the field knowing they had played a football team near the quality of their own. As All American Martin Cox conceded, "They were good. They were great guys and great sports".

Work for V-ball girls

by Lee Prowse

The Queen's Women's Volleyball season continues this weekend at the 12th annual Waterloo Invitational.

"Realistically, coach Donna Gallagher says, the team is going into the tournament with a play to learn attitude." She plans to play all the girls in order to increase the experience of the young squad. Queen's has been seeded as a weak team and will be pitted against strong squads from Ontario, Quebec, Manitoba and New Brunswick.

Of the six teams in the "elite" tier in the OUAA Waterloo is in first place, York holds down second and Queen's and McMaster are tied for fifth.

A training session in Florida planned for the holidays was cancelled and the girls followed personal conditioning programs.

This weekend's tournament will provide a good opportunity for the girls to improve their play. Coach Donna Gallagher is looking for an improved second half of the season and believes her young team is capable of holding their position in the elite league for next season.

LSAT WEEKEND REVIEW SEMINARS

If LSAT scores represented a pure assessment of general intelligence and aptitude, there would be little reason to try to "prepare" for the examination. But in fact the LSAT is a specialized test on which your performance is influenced by your previous achievement and experience, particularly by your familiarity with the test itself.

The LAW BOARD REVIEW CENTRE'S LSAT Review Course involves thorough training and experience in the most important skills and reasoning processes tested by the LSAT. Unlike commercially published "preparation manuals," and materials supplied by the test publishers, the LSAT REVIEW COURSE builds upon a solid instructional approach to each section of the exam. We analyze the nature and content of each subject and discuss the strategies that lead to best performance.

Because of our commitment to effective class sizes and optimal student-instructor interaction, the LAW BOARD REVIEW CENTRE'S classes strive for an atmosphere of friendliness and concern. Comfortably-sized classes (usually with 15 to 20 students, never more than 25) provide lively group discussions while maximizing attention to individual needs.

With guidance from the LAW BOARD REVIEW CENTRE'S LSAT Review Course, you'll really do the preparation you keep thinking you'll get around to on your own.

Queen's Bands at Can-Am Bowl

by Tom Mohr

Canada lost. But the Can-Am Bowl in Tampa, Florida involved a host of smaller triumphs, and a large, vociferous Queen's contingent played its part. For 109 members of the Queen's Bands, the Can-Am Bowl marked the culmination of an unsurpassable year.

Performing with a winning team, travelling to Halifax to play at the Atlantic Bowl, and, finally, dazzling the crowds at the Can-Am Bowl, moulded a motley group of horn-blowers and drum-bashers into a top-flight band. And in Tampa Stadium on January 6, it showed, 11,000 spectators and a large television audience reacted enthusiastically to their "friends from the north", particularly the Highland dancers and pipe band. For Canadian fans, the Queen's Bands were arguably the only thing to cheer about around Tampa that day.

That sterling performance was achieved, says Band Manager Cliff McCracken, through an unparalleled dedication to high standards this year. Those standards were met through plain hard work.

"The heavy-duty practising began in Sherbrooke (in late October of last year). Traditionally, past Queen's bands have never been worried that much about the show they put on. This year, we have tried to stress greater discipline and higher standards, even before the Florida thing came up," he said.

The "Florida thing", though, was the plum the Queen's Bands were determined to pluck. Western's band had made the trip the previous year, but band members felt they were Canada's best university band this year. In mid-October, it all came through. Queen's Bands were chosen to represent Canada in the Can-Am Bowl.

With the Florida trip confirmed the frequency and intensity of Band practices increased. It began in Sherbrooke prior to the last football game of the season against Bishop's, and continued up to the College Bowl. The Highland dancers continued their practices twice a week right up until the Christmas break.

Upon arriving in Tampa on January 2, the pace of practicing became hectic. Up at 7:30 every morning, on the buses by 8:45, then solid practice between 9:00 and 12:30 for the brass band, pipe band and Highland dancers while the cheerleaders practiced on the beach.

Finally, the day of the game arrived, and before television cameras and a sparse crowd of 11,000 the Queen's Bands put it all together. At the end of the game, in a quaint gesture of Canadian-American diplomacy, cheerleaders from Queen's and those representing the United States exchanged their sweaters.

Canada had lost. Not Queen's Bands, though.

Students suffer in partisan combat

The students, a somewhat forgotten element in the conflict between the Waterloo Student Federation and the Chevron, have voted in referendum to remove the Chevron as the university paper. Although this might appear to be the "nail in the coffin" for the Chevron, the events of the past years tend to suggest that the conflict is far more deep-rooted than yet another student referendum could correct.

From the stormy start of the debacle in September of 1976, the conflict has been carried on between the two highly partisan factions, ignoring the basic demands of the students for a newspaper representative of the campus and a government able to moderate the situation. Neither demand has been realized.

However, Waterloo students are not the only ones who have been drawn into the fray. The continued heavy-handed tactics of the Federation in closing down the Chevron, thereby occasioning violent confrontation, was at once a challenge to "freedom of the press". On this issue the Canadian University Press (CUP) embarked upon a defence of the Chevron supported by the member papers. The commitment of CUP led to an Inquiry Commission which found the Federation at fault for trammelling the "freedom of the press."

However in the months and years following the initial confrontation in 1976, it became apparent that the editors of the Chevron were not representative of the student body. Moreover, their chief personnel represented the Maoist organization, the Communist Party of Canada (Marxist - Leninist) and equated their struggle against the Federation with class struggle.

The ironic part, or rather one of the ironies, was that some of the principal figures involved were not students and had not been for years. Provisions at Waterloo allow non-students to run student organizations. Former Federation President Shane Roberts, for instance, graduated last fall with a B.A. after nine years as a student. Neil Docherty of the Chevron is also in his ninth year of association with Waterloo, albeit not as a student.

Perhaps, if the Chevron had run as a representative campus newspaper the conflict would have been averted. Had the Chevron abided by conventional journalistic principles the merit of their "freedom of the press" case would have been enhanced. Instead the Chevron opted for a highly partisan and biased stance even to the extent of criticizing letters to the editor and launching personal attacks on their authors.

Although we do feel that freedom of the press has been continuously circumvented by the Federation, the results of the referendum cannot be categorized as reinforcing their heavy-handed activities. No, the referendum quite clearly represents a desire by the students to enjoy representative campus newspaper for their money.

Unfortunately in the case of Waterloo the students may once again be in a position of enhancing the self-serving coalitions that do not necessarily represent their best interests.

Hopefully, for their sake the referendum will signify the end to the Chevron dilemma and a new beginning of healthy debate and discussion between the student newspaper and the student government. Given the poor structure of the Waterloo student institutions and the highly emotional nature of both sides commitment in the struggle, the student referendum could be little more than a temporary enhancement of the Federation position in an ongoing and complex conflict.

More means less

The Ministry of Colleges and Universities has issued its decree. Operating grants for post-secondary institutions will increase by approximately five per cent next year - an increase well below the present rate of inflation in Canada.

This trend of continually funding post-secondary institutions below the level of inflation means a significant decline in the real dollar spending power of Ontario universities and, most certainly, a further decline in the quality of education; fewer staff, more obsolete equipment, and the necessity of accepting current library deficiencies.

More importantly, it further epitomizes the relatively low priority placed by the Davis Government on post-secondary education in this period of financial constraint.

But all these arguments have been heard before. And, quite obviously, they have made no impact upon the leaders of our provincial government.

Of equally pressing concern is the announcement that the "formula fees" used in the calculation of the universities' operating grants will be increased by five per cent. This increase will no doubt be passed on to the students in the form of a tuition fee hike, estimated to be in the vicinity of $35. Such an increase further hinders the ability of financially needy students to attend university. Despite promises of an adjustment to the Ontario Student Assistance Program (OSAP) to accommodate the fee increase, their plight remains uncertain. Granted, the OSAP program is much better than it used to be, but the actual changes to the program are as yet unspecified, and the imperfections of the system have been especially glaring of late, with unprecedented bureaucratic foul-ups and delays in processing.

Finally, it is worth mentioning the stand taken by the AMS on this proposed fee increase, particularly since it represents an abrupt about-face from their earlier mis-directed and naive support of the principal of a fee increase of up to a hundred dollars as being preferable to a further "deterioration of the University system". Dave Brown decries the violation of the qualifications the AMS had formulated - no corresponding decrease in government funding, and full OSAP adjustments to compensate the financially disadvantaged for the fee increase. It is unfortunate that Outer Council did not foresee what Brown now terms as the emerging pattern of more fee increases in the future without the guarantee of preserving the quality of the university system.

Perhaps the AMS will now realize that in Davis doublethink "more means less."

Taxi license denied over ads

by Shelly Matson

Doug Robinson of Amherstview Taxi Co. had his 1978 city cab licence taken away on January 9 by Kingston Police and will be refused a 1979 licence until he complies with a city bylaw by removing the advertising signs on his eight cabs.

Robinson offered lower fares than the other cab companies in the city by distributing coupons worth $1 off every ride. He said, "Modern was upset when I cut my prices, but I still got $3 to the train station and the money was good enough for me. Modern could have charged the same and still make money." Amherst got 317 calls to the train station in one week when they began using the coupon system, and most of these were from students.

The signs, which span the trunks of the cabs, promote CKLC Radio, a car dealer, and restaurants. They are going to remain on Robinson's cabs, the owner insisted. Robinson's company also accepts Mastercharge and ChargeX and the cars bear stickers publicizing this. The stickers have caused him problems too.

"Stores have ChargeX stickers in their windows. I'm just doing what they do, except my business is on wheels," he noted.

The old city bylaw didn't prohibit advertising on cabs explicitly, but Robinson was warned by police last August, when he first began the practice, that the bylaw disallows taxis to carry any numbers besides their operating number.

The Board of Police Commissioners recently tried to eliminate any doubt in the matter by rewording the clause in the bylaw pointedly to prohibit advertising and promotional material on city-licensed cabs effective January 1. Robinson complained that "The old bylaw didn't prohibit advertising; therefore, they made up a new bylaw. It's not very fair."

Mayor Ken Keyes said that this was a "misconception." "The bylaw has been the same for a number of years," he said. "The City Solicitor simply suggested a change in wording to make it clearer."

Robinson said, "The police figured that if they threatened me enough I would take the signs off. First they gave me until December 31 to take them off, and when I didn't, they gave me 48 hours, but I still won't take them off."

He conceded that there might have been pressure from other cab companies in the city to make him remove the signs, but he can't be sure. When contacted by the Journal, Modern Taxi Co. owner Gerry Ball said, "We don't care what Robinson does. We'd like to put signs up too, but he sort of ruined it for us. You just can't go ahead and put them up without going through the proper channels." Ball concluded that he didn't see anything wrong with signs themselves, and that there had been some talk of supporting Robinson.

Robinson said Keyes told him that if he removed the offending signs, he could get his licence from the city renewed and then put the signs back up again. He noted that he would probably be charged if he followed the Mayor's advice and said, "He was trying to trick me into doing something like that."

Keyes denied this and said "I explained it carefully to Robinson several times. He can't renew his city licence without taking off the advertising, and I told him 'Whether or not you put the signs back on is entirely up to you' but I assured him he would be charged if he did."

Keyes added, "Robinson wants to

Outer Council namedrops

New Pub title wanted

Staff

In a surprise motion Thursday night, AMS Outer Council passed a motion to rename the Queen's pub. ASUS reps, Eric Evans and Kim Fennell presented the motion on the grounds that the pub's current name, The Underground, is "unimaginative, seldom used and generally dull."

Fennell stated "Most people, including myself, have never liked the name since Outer Council picked it two years ago. What we would like is something catchy, something that people will use." Evans added "Other universities have unique and interesting names for their pubs, and I'm certain that someone at Queen's could come up with a better name than The Underground—perhaps something that reflects the Queen's Scottish tradition."

Outer Council will be sponsoring a contest to find a new name for the pub over the next month. Ballot boxes will be placed in the pub this week. At its next meeting, Outer Council will appoint a selection committee to screen the submissions. A short list of the best submissions will be presented to Outer Council for the final decision. There will be a prize for the winning suggestion.

Evans and Fennell stated that "this might be something that the student body could get involved in since it's apparently not interested in important issues such as fee increases, cutbacks, and tenure."

be charged to see whether he breaks the bylaw, he thinks he can prove that section of the bylaw is not legal. Its better to bring in research to change legislation."

Robinson reacted to Keyes' suggestion that he produce proof that other cities have advertising and give examples of their legislation by point out that he got most of his ideas from cab companies in Sault Ste. Marie.

Keyes commented that "an ad on a cab be a bit of a ratty-looking thing—it's something that needs controls. A cab shouldn't be a showplace; the people deserve better than this."

When it was pointed out to Keyes that Kingston city buses carry advertising, he replied, "The Kingston Advertising Agency acts as a regulatory body. The signs are all the same size, two-dimensional, and content is controlled. Robinson's signs are three-dimensional and may be creating a hazard to passengers."

Robinson's problems did not end with the municipal administration. He also had a confrontation with Police Chief Rice last week when the Whig-Standard took some pictures of the cab driver in front of the police station. Robinson says "The Chief called me and told me that the Whig-Standard doesn't have the right to take pictures anywhere they want to and that he would have his lawyers after me. He later denied this statement to the Whig-Standard when questioned because he couldn't defend it." Chief Rice was unavailable for comment.

Robinson will appear in front of the Police Commission on Thursday. "I hope there will be enough pressure that my licence will probably be given back to me. One of my cars was charged under the new bylaw a week ago, but the charges won't stick as the Kingston Police have no jurisdiction over township cabs."

Amherst Taxi can't answer calls from within the city without a city licence, but continues to answer them from the train station, still charging $4 to campus, without a surcharge for luggage using trunk space, or skis.

Planning Board hesitates over new regulations for Sydenham houses

by Beth McKenzie

The Sub-Committee of the Kingston Planning Board presented its report on the November proposals concerning the housing problem in Sydenham Ward, an area inhabited predominantly by students.

The committee found that the first proposal, "That 4 unrelated persons be defined as the maximum number of unrelated persons to occupy a dwelling unit", was impractical as it would be too difficult to enforce. They estimated that there are more than a hundred dwellings in Kingston which are inhabited by five or more unrelated persons.

The second proposal, to limit the area of a lot to be covered by dwelling space (a proposal designed to combat the additions being constructed by many Kingston landlords) was found to be more feasible.

The committee also considered a proposal to re-designate the "student ghetto" area around Queen's (bounded by Union St., Barrie St., Johnson St., and University Ave.) as a zone for co-operative housing rather than for single family dwellings, to alleviate the problem of illegal co-habitation. They would then strictly enforce the limits on non-related persons sharing a dwelling in all areas outside of these boundaries.

This Sub-Committee, which had been set up to deal with complaints from the Sydenham Ward Ratepayers Association about the appearance of the housing within their ward, reached no final decisions on any of the proposals.

GM aids Quest

Staff
The electrical and mechanical engineering departments will benefit substantially from a recent $25,000 cheque from General Motors of Canada Ltd., for Queen's motors, the university's $10 million fund-raising drive.

The cheque, presented by General Motors representatives, John C. Larmond and C. Kenneth Greenman to James M. Courtwright, Vice-principal of Development and Information, is the first instalment on a $125,000 pledge.

New strategy for old problem

OFS mass picket line "a failure" Brown and Dodd propose lobbying

by Kim Fennell

An angry Dave Brown and Hugh Dodd have formulated a new strategy for approaching the Ontario government for more university funding. The AMS President and Commissioner of External Affairs are embittered over the failure of an OFS mass informational picket line which took place last November 16.

As Brown stated, the action "was neither mass, nor as it turned out, informational. We sold the idea to Outer Council that the action would be informational and not just a demonstration. As it turned out there were 300-500 students at Queen's Park and it was nothing more than a rally."

The OFS had planned to have informational pamphlets there for students to distribute to the media and general public but because of an "administrative foul-up" these never arrived. Brown and Dodd both feel, however, that the mistake was inexcusable.

Brown stated: "We've come out with egg on our faces. I feel we've been duped and this has destroyed a lot of the OFS' credibility."

The AMS has therefore decided upon an alternative strategy for this spring. Dodd presented a policy paper to Outer Council last Thursday which suggests using lobbying as a method of gaining ground with the government.

The proposal outlines methods for lobbying at both the local and provincial levels. It also suggests that March be declared a "lobby month."

For the OFS. Each campus student government across the province should set up appointments with MPP's on a particular day in March to lobby on the issues of student concern.

Dodd stated, "I feel most comfortable with this method for reaching government officials and I think it's the one most Queen's students would prefer. I also believe that rational discussion is the most effective way to produce change in provincial government policy."

Dodd added "The mass informational picket line was not mass at all. There was only 300-500 people there and I think this shows a lack of activist commitment on campuses across Ontario. I would seriously question the effectiveness of this method."

Dodd concluded by saying "After talking to student representatives from U of T and Wilfrid Laurier, I think there is a general mood emerging across Ontario in favour of lobbying rather than mass action."

Third team running now

by Rob Southcott

With three days remaining before the deadline for nominations, a third team has announced its intention to run for next year's AMS Executive.

The team, headed by Tom O'Shaughnessy, is in the process of gathering the 250 signatures that are required by the Friday deadline. O'Shaughnessy, a second year math and chemistry student, is accompanied on his team by Janine Gilman, a third year Commerce student, for Vice-President (Operations) and David Carpenter, a third year Geography major as V.P. (University Affairs).

Unlike the other two teams in the running, headed by AMS Outer Council Speaker, Dave Corbitt, and Internal Affairs Commissioner, Richard Binhammer, none of O'Shaughnessy's team have previous experience in the AMS. Despite this, they claim that they intend to be well-heard in the upcoming campaign.

Age limit causes concern

by Liz McCling

Aside from disappointing many incipient alcoholics, the recent hike in the drinking age has presented problems for the Orientation '79 Committee. The ASUS Executive, the AMS executive, and the Orientation Committee are faced with the task of changing certain events of Frosh Week, and of encouraging a different attitude towards Orientation.

"The big problem concerning alcohol is that no one knows the full extent of the changes and restrictions that the new drinking age will cause," said Glen Davidson, AMS Chairman for Orientation. The AMS is looking into the new rules laid down by the Liquor License Board and will set their policy concerning alcohol related events as soon as possible.

Becky Farrar, of the ASUS Executive, seconded this opinion, stating "drinking will be big problem. We'll need more innovative suggestions for activities in Frosh Week." The social-cultural director of the Orientation Committee has suggested something along the lines of the Milk and Cookies Dance in Grant Hall.

Bus-It: full service for $100,000

by Rob Southcott

This week, the Alma Mater Society executive will negotiate a new contract for Bus-It which will possibly give Queen's full service on all Public Utilities Commission bus routes.

According to AMS president Dave Brown, the AMS is hoping to reach a contract that will expand Bus-It service from the present two routes to all four routes that the PUC runs. "If we can get what we consider a good deal on Bus-It, we'll put it to referendum," said Brown, stating that he considered a "good deal" to be the proposed full service for a price of about $100,000.

In addition to considering the expansion of Bus-It, the AMS will also be conducting a survey this week to examine the feasibility of maintaining the current late night shuttle to the West Campus. Brown said the PUC estimates show that ridership on the shuttle, which runs between 11:30 p.m. and 1:00 a.m., are quite low, and thus the AMS wants to see if its $5000 price tag is justified. Brown stated that if the number of riders proves to be excessively low, that there is the possibility that the shuttle will either be cut back to only a Monday to Thursday run, or that it will be scrapped altogether.

The World in Brief...

VANCOUVER—A new quest for the West has been initiated in the province of B.C. as a new Crown corporation was created by the Social Credit Government last year. Sawmills, pulp mills, oil and gas reserves and pipeline interests totalling over $100-million in value has been turned over to the people of B.C. in the form of a share-distribution scheme. Five free shares of Resource Investment Corp. will be given to each resident of B.C. providing he is a Canadian citizen.

TORONTO—TTC expects another large deficit for the third year in a row. After a $52-million dollar deficit last year - it could be a record $65-million this year. The great increase will be largely due to provisions for increases in wage rates, employees' benefit costs and prices for power and fuel.

EDMONTON—Two students at the University of Alberta were charged when it was discovered they were tampering with a $9-million dollar computer at the University. They cracked a code to make changes in the billing system, pried into computer files of other people and consequently screwed up the system. This is Canada's first computer fraud court case.

TEHRAN—Premier Shapour Bakhtiar announced a 17-point reform programme as a means of restoring order in Iran. Mr. Bakhtiar also announced that his government will shut off oil supply to Israel and South Africa but still continue to supply the U.S.

CANADA—The Canadian branch of Levi, Straus Inc., one of the world's largest makers of bluejeans, has pleaded guilty to fixing prices of its products in Canada and also refusing to supply discount merchants. H.D. Lee of Canada Ltd. is on trial in Montreal for similar charges.

UNITED STATES—An investigation by the U.S. Federation Aviation Administration was initiated when a Canadian pilot reported being buzzed by a Cuban jet fighter 50 miles from the Caribbean country's coast on route from the South Caicos Islands in November. Apparently his distress call frightened the jet pilot off - three other planes were not so lucky as they have disappeared while flying the same route.

HONG KONG—Deputy Premier Ieng Sary of Cambodia left his country on route to China. The premier told news reporters the war would continue and that Cambodian hatred for the Vietnamese is even greater than that for the Americans during the war.

TORONTO—The president of Consumer's Distributing Co. Ltd, Jack Stupp, the president of Standard Securities Ltd, Gordon Winthrop and Allan Manus the former Toronto Stock promoter have all been arrested on charges of conspiracy to manipulate the market price of the company's shares.

ONTARIO—The LLBO has decided to forbid further junior hockey sponsorship by beer companies due to the new drinking age of 19. This will shut off financial support of hundreds of thousands of dollars which Labatt's Ltd and Molson's Brewery (Ontario) Ltd. have donated for the past seven years.

Assistant news editor John "the Greek" Bakktis exclaims in delight as he is presented with a large voluptuous sheep.

Closings cause concern

by Eric Evans

The decision by the Ministry of Education to close the Hamilton and Toronto campuses that make up the Ontario Teacher Education College (OTEC) has created concern among some observers.

The November announcement by Bette Stephenson, Minister of Education, that OTEC would be closing its doors in August was related to the declining demand for new teachers. Speaking of all teaching graduates from both OTEC and the university faculties, Miss Stephenson stated that "just over one-quarter of the 5480 graduates from the 1977-1978 year found employment."

Miss Stephenson explained that "The Ministry cannot in all good conscience continue to train persons at the two OTEC campuses for a shrinking job market, particularly when teacher training is available at 10 faculties of education."

The major concern felt by some observers about the closing of OTEC is based not on the loss of the new teacher training program, but rather on the loss of specialized training programs for teachers with established jobs at an elementary level.

Evelyn Gigantes, NDP education critic states that, "While the current limit on enrolment at OTEC in Toronto is 300 pre-service trainee teachers, 615 teachers are benefitting from specialized in-service training in special education, French, French as a second language, English as a second language reading, music and library service courses tailored for the particular needs of Ontario's elementary students."

These programs are available at University education faculties, but Gigantes states that these "faculties do not have the specially-qualified personnel required to provide training appropriate to the elementary level of education."

Further concern has been exposed by municipal education authorities in the Toronto and Hamilton areas. These boards of education have had, according to Bob MacKenzie (NDP, MPP Hamilton East), a long history of close collaboration with OTEC, which has benefited the students in these areas.

Gigantes has suggested that OTEC staff members (100) be added to university education faculties to ensure specialized training for elementary teachers—education faculties at universities offer a Kindergarten to Grade 13 (K-13) certificate. Stephenson has promised to assist OTEC staff members to find new employment in their own specialties.

Hot air leaves her cold

The Editor,

It's a wonderful thing that an institution such as Queen's, so crushed under the weight of cutbacks, should display such unlimited benevolence to the world at large. Queen's University, victim of the materialism of the Canadian people and government, sets an example to humanity by responding in an act of benevolence aimed at warming the cold and hostile atmosphere in which we live.

The act of benevolence I refer to is, of course, the great blasts of warm air that Queen's sends into the environment through the ventilation system of Jeffrey and other halls and various other locations on campus (manholes, underground pipes, etc.). I think that an organization with so little to spare for its own students, with an inexhaustible resource of engineers who are learning all about energy conservation and who are eager to put their learning to use right at home - I say that I think this organization should be highly commended in its persistence in sending out to the general environment, donations of such obvious benefit to all.

I suppose, perhaps, I am being a little harsh if I seem to imply that Queen's is dispensing into the open air, funds that could better be used in the library for the edification of students. Oh no! For while this dispensation of hot air from the well-stoked furnaces of Queen's contributes to the general atmosphere of Kingston, the students are the direct beneficiaries, you know. Why, I go out of my way to walk behind Jeffrey Hall on a wintry day, so I will be warmed on my chilly way by that heat-belching ventilator.

Rah, Queen's! This is yet another example of your economy and well-organized general financial administration. I'm sure our financial supporters would be proud of the contribution you are making to humanity. Sandy Stephenson

Out of skillet into Tories

by Simon Rozanski

The real question before Canadians in next year's main event is: Can the Conservatives run the economy any better? Only an illusionist with ironclad Liberal Party loyalty would argue that the economy has been well run. The unemployment and inflation rates speak for themselves.

For anyone with a taste for circus, there is the center ring of Jean Chretien, swearing by all that's holy that our dollar is freely floating in response to the marketplace, while the government spends two billion dollars, in vain, to keep the marketplace from working.

But voters preparing to tell the government to "kick-off" must consider what they're turning to, as well as from. This consideration must include the economic competence (incompetence, if you're Liberal) of the Conservatives.

When Finance Minister Jean Chretien came to his present portfolio, the deficit was already large. Those budgets which produced it were the creation of the white-haired hack of anti-Trudeau Liberals, John Turner. But, did the Conservatives call then for tighter financial discipline and smaller deficits? Not on your life! The crux of the Tories' 73 budget attack, was that Turner's deficit was too small and a Conservative government would have instituted a bigger one.

We would have had wage and price controls sooner if the Conservatives had been in power, but

OPEC learns Western ways

by Tyseer Aboul Nasr

The last increase of oil prices caused much frustration among many of us. One Queen's student thought it was truly "mean" of the OPEC countries to try and make more money out of their one source of income. In his opinion, these countries should sacrifice any possible increase in their income to help the Western and North American society keep its high standard of living. Though I know this is the manner in which most people think, it struck me as a peculiar suggestion in a capitalist world. Has any business corporation in North America ever considered reducing its profits for the benefit of society?

Has any one of us ever thought that these countries might be in need of this money; not to watch coloured T.V. or waste more fuel on the highways; but to buy food? Just bread, not brandy or champagne.

The problem is that people here have no idea how people in other parts of the world live. You need only a one-day visit to any of these countries to know how badly they need this money

Has it ever occurred to anyone that while Americans go on wasting their energy (as they admit they do), they ask OPEC to keep prices down? In other words, we are asking OPEC to help the average North American maintain a luxurious style of living, instead of using this money to feed their people adequately, or to provide them with shelter, education and health care. Here, these may be a few of the many things considered as the normal basic rights of a human being. In other countries, they are not.

Can anyone ask OPEC to sacrifice the fundamental needs of their people to help us maintain our luxurious life? Can we ask them to do so while we have never thought of reducing the prices of the industrial products that these countries so desperately need? Can we ask them to do so while the U.S.A. throws excess wheat in the ocean to avoid bringing its market price down, at a time when millions die of hunger? If some people can, I can't!

there's no reason to believe that Tory controls would have been more successful than Liberal controls. When you look at the record, you can search in vain for a clear sign of basic philosophical difference between Conservative and Liberal economic policy. The difference is in terms of the ins and outs. The Liberals have been the ins and tend to be centralizers, while the Tories have been the outs, and stress provincial rights. The real issue here is between different views of political expediency, and not different principles. The nightmare of the dollar offers the Tories a chance to tell the government to cease intervening and let the dollar find its own level. This isn't what they're saying. A Tory government would have relied on high interest rates, rather than on foreign borrowing to prop the dollar up. Higher interest rates would severely blast Canadians with a new cycle of inflation but the Tories are concerned with double-talking, not honesty. Alter 10 or 15 years with a Liberal government, there may be minimal pecuniary advantages to changing, but the alternative is far from superior.

Clark to railroad PM on summit talks

by Dave Duff
Hon. Joseph Clark
Globetrotting Peacemaker
c/o Menachim Begin
Tel Aviv, Israel

Dear Mr. Clark,
Sorry for having disturbed you during your important world trip, but I thought that someone should let you know that all hell has broken loose since you left. Yes, I'm afraid it's true. The latest polls show that The Enemy has turned the tide.

Senator Keith Davey says that the country has come back to its senses, but you and I know better. Yes Sir, after more than fifteen years of liberal Governments, Canadians have gone quite mad. They're afraid to take the big plunge and send our leader back to teach law at the University of Montreal. "Besides," as any anglophone will tell you, "that Frenchman knows how to tell Rene Levesque where to put his Sovereignty-Association!"

Mr. Trudeau rode in more than a decade ago preaching the Gospel of National Unity, and whenever a significant threat to "The Regime" appears, he jumps on his stallion all over again. A year ago when things were safe for The Government, he said, "Things are under control...the nation is going to be all right". Now he says that "there is real danger" and that only he has got "the right answers."

Not only this, Sir, but he says that it's terrible that you would sit down and negotiate if Quebec were to vote for Sovereignty-Association. Last year, though, he stated, "What I am basically saying is that if Quebecers, by an overwhelming majority ever decide they no longer want to be part of this country...somebody will have to sit down and negotiate with them..." Yes, is it astounding that supposedly rational beings can continue to support him. I think that part of the problem is that Canadians are too forgiving. As you can see, Mr. Clark, they've already forgotten the arrogance, the Macdonald Commission, the Post Office, the dollar, unemployment and inflation, as well as the fact that in ten years he hasn't achieved the miracle of National Unity that he promised us.

The point is, though, Sir, that I believe the situation calls for a dramatic counterstroke on our part to halt the swing of the pendulum. It's not too late. You're still two points ahead of him nationally and doing better than that in English Canada. Therefore, Sir, may I be so daring as to suggest that while you're in the neighbourhood, you try to perform a miracle of your own and put together a Middle East peace treaty. Mr. Clark, I still have faith in you. The country needs you to put an end of the long rule of The Emperor, whether it realizes it or not. A Base Borden summit conference could do for you what Camp David did for Jimmy Carter. Think about it please. A Devoted Follower

Over the Christmas holidays, I had the opportunity to do something that I very seldom do while at school—watch television. It's surprising how easy it is to forget TV and its dubious pleasures when there isn't one around, but it's equally as surprising how addictive it can be when you share your living accommodation with one.

My immediate reaction to TV after long periods of abstinence is incredulity, both at the material presented, and at how many people's lives revolve around the television set. My next reaction is of indignancy. I feel insulted by TV producers and advertising agencies because the material they present seems to be appealing to individuals in a semi-comatose state. This indignancy is quickly followed, however, by embarrassment. I'm the dummy who is sitting there abusing my brain cells and I could just as easily get up and turn off the set—there is always the knapsack full of books I brought home but I keep on staring, only moving to refer to that bible of modern post-industrial society, the TV Guide.

As my life begins to become divided into hour and half-hour long segments, I find myself watching anything, out of desperation, rationalizing that there is a show I want to see on the same channel in half an hour. Much to my discredit, I even find myself watching Good Times and the Newlywed Game. As my mind slowly turned into "new improved jello with flavour crystals" over the holidays, I knew that my only hope was to get out of the house. Unfortunately, even a drinking expedition to a local hotel with some old high school buddies couldn't save me. The beverage room had a seven foot TV screen so that I could see Gilligan's Island and Hogan's Heroes reruns larger than life.

I attempted to seek refuge in the numerous football Bowl games, but even this couldn't protect me from the solid-state hypnotic effect of Magnacolour. I learned how macho it is to drink light beer and what kind of shampoo Frank Tarkenton uses. And, on top of this, NBC has a half-time "New Look Sports Spectacular"—whatever that means. With the American track team losing world supremacy and an Olympics coming up next year, NBC shows such fine sports related shows as the AFC and NFC Cheerleader Classic (the "Dallas Cheerleaders in Japan" was another not-to-be-missed goodie) and the Hollywood Stuntman Competition. My life just wasn't complete until I saw a man of questionable intellect attempt to see how many times he could roll a brand new car and still live. Correct me if I'm wrong, but this all seemed mildly decadent to me.

The interesting thing about TV is that almost everyone realizes that it's numbing our heads. You can tell this simply by the number of people who insult TV commercials, and that great American tradition which has come to mean so little to us, the situation comedy. Everybody seems quick to disclaim their addiction as if it were something to be ashamed of—which it is. You can always tell the closet TV fiend by the speed with which they deny their dependency. Don't get me wrong though, I'm not immune either. I even watched The Jeffersons once.

The thing that I always wonder about though, is whether or not the network executives and TV commercial producers really think their material is good—or whether they sit laughing to themselves in their offices, thinking of even more atrocious practical jokes to play on the North American public.

TV can be very educational. Where else can you learn to spell relief, R-O-L-A-I-D-S? Or, for that matter, where else can an underage child develop the proper attitude towards sex, violence, and alcohol-abuse than right in his own home in front of the TV set? For this reason, a show like Charlie's Angels is a useful teaching aid for young children in that it shows them what life is really like. This, of course, has always been one of TV's strong points—its portrayal of reality. Why else would shows like Spiderman, The Incredible Hulk, and Wonderwoman be on at prime times?

So, all of you closet TV addicts, reveal yourself. Your friends may not like you, but the big multi-national corporations will.

Japan actively pursues alternate energy policy

by Paul Tinari

Like so many of the industrialized countries of the world, Japan was hit very hard by the sharply increased price of oil in 1973, and since that time the number one priority for Japanese industry has been to find alternate sources of energy to import from the Middle East.

The Japanese government had, until a few years ago, followed a policy which was very similar to that carried out in the United States, where the most productive coal mines were subsidized, while inefficient ones were closed. Shortly after the oil crisis and embargo by OPEC, the Japanese government realized that if its industries were to survive, it would have to drastically increase its coal production in a desperate measure to decrease the country's dependence on imported oil. In the last few years, Japan has pumped billions of dollars into research into methods of coal liquefaction, gasification, and pollution control. With some of the new knowledge obtained, several new types of coal burning thermal power generating plants are being built, which are said to be much more efficient than any of the plants currently available in North America.

Japan is a nation of very poor mineral wealth, so every effort has been made by the industrial sector to reclaim as much material as possible from waste, and to use the heat discharge from generating facilities for such purposes as domestic heating, and the heating of year round greenhouse establishments which have sprung up in amazing numbers.

Civil engineers in Japan have pioneered the use of solid waste as structural reinforcement in construction projects, and in the nation's universities work is proceeding at a hectic pace to try to harness the power of nuclear fusion. In being the only country to have been devastated by nuclear devices, it is understandable that the people of Japan are very reluctant to see nuclear generating plants established in their backyards, and so every effort by the government to build nuclear stations has met, and can be expected to meet, stiff opposition from the people of the country, especially the older folk who remember the devastation of Hiroshima. This has proven to be a serious problem for the government and they are attempting to solve it by placing more emphasis on alternate energy technologies than any other country of the world. With Britain, for example, they are global leaders in the development of the machines necessary to harness tidal and wave energy. They are also very much interested in wind generators as a source of power, principally for isolated communities in the northern islands.

An important lesson to be learned here is that it is possible for a country to switch the patterns of its energy consumption, but it takes a determined, and unified effort. In Canada alternate energy schemes are still to the most part experimental concepts which have never been outside the confines of the lab. This is why we should take a very good look at Japan, so we can see for ourselves what can be done with the right incentives. So far, we have been spared any serious problems with regards to our energy policies. We should not expect to be spared from the consequences of our wastefulness for very much longer.

Watered-down wisdom

The Editor,
When Katie and I went for a tea break last October at the University Coffee Shop, she offered to pay and was furious that my large cup of tea cost 5c more than a small cup. Why, she argued, must one pay 5c for two more ounces of water?

Yesterday I was with Karen at aforementioned coffee shop. She came up with a brilliant answer to my dilemma, but my enthusiasm was short-lived. There was a fatal flaw in her argument. Let me recapitulate. Karen said that if a tea bag, a small cup and 7 ounces of water cost 25c, then a tea bag, large cup, and 9 ounces of water should also cost 25c. Why pay 5c for 2 ounces of water? "Hah!" I exclaimed, "You have not accounted for the increased cost of a larger styrofoam cup." "Not so," said Karen. "The cost would be so minimal as not to be detectable by the naked human eye." (Incidentally, Karen, who is a chemistry student, once told me that styrofoam, once formed, cannot be broken down. I suggested that the world would soon be covered with styrofoam, to which remark she replied with a pitying look.)

I pondered Karen's plan. Charge 25c for a large or small cup of tea, and let the buyer choose, according to his/her thirst and mood. The flaw immediately became apparent.

"Karen," said I, "there would be riots. People would not be able to accept receiving different quantities of the same article for the same price. The concept upsets the fundamental nature of the cap-"

"You're right," interrupted Karen, having immediately caught my drift. "I can see it now. People would arrive, find out about the large-or-small-cup-of-tea-for-the-same-price policy and faint. The floor would be littered with unconscious bodies. The doors would become blocked. We're just not ready for that kind of unconventionality."

At which we both pondered the wisdom of Saga Foods, which, indubitably, in its far-reaching wisdom, had already reached the same conclusions. Better to charge 5c for 2 oz. of H<sub>2</sub>O than be faced with the task of clearing the cafeteria floor of stacks of insensate consumers

Orientation controversy continues

Open Letter to Ross Bartlett and Becky Farrar

In your reply to my letter of December 5, 1978 you initially state that Orientation is not an autonomous body. You will see no suggestion in my letter that the changes in the interview structure be made by the Orientation committee. My point was, however, that the committee could have, at least, been consulted before the changes were made.

I do remember the meeting between the ASUS executive and the outgoing Orientation committee where the committee was asked for comments on the new selection procedure. Perhaps, however, you have forgotten Ms. Farrar's comment that even if the committee did disagree with the changes that they had already been made and were to be implemented this year.

You then go on to suggest that I chose, at that point, to remove myself from the proceedings "despite repeated invitations". I find it necessary to suggest that the repeated invitations must have been mere products of fancy. I received only one invitation to become involved in the proceedings - twenty minutes before the final interviews were to take place.

"Since I failed to attend" you assume that the information I received was only second-hand. You seem to make the assumption that second-hand necessarily implies incorrect. I feel that I am quite well-informed regarding the proceedings which did take place.

This brings me to my final point. In offering a justification for the use of the NASA technique you suggest that the technique served quite well for the purpose of ASUS. The survival situation was not designed by ASUS as a selection technique and therefore cannot serve those purposes without misapplication.

You are quite correct when you say that it is too late to reverse your decision. My concern was not that undesirable people may have been chosen for the committee but that some persons may have been unfairly assessed given the nature of the selection technique. In the future I suggest you employ interview techniques which are accepted as such and which all people are familiar with.

POSITIONS AS WARDENS, DONS AND SENIOR RESIDENTS

Positions as Wardens, Dons and Senior Residents are available to persons who are interested in helping to create the best possible educational living environments in the Men's, Women's and Co-Educational Residences.

On behalf of the residences boards, the Dean of Woman and the Director of Residences would be happy to receive enquiries from both single and married senior students and members of staff who believe they could make such a contribution to the residences as an integral part of the University community. Persons appointed to these positions will be provided with accommodation in the residences.

Wardens, Dons and Senior Residents will be expected to share their interests and the benefits of their experience, to contribute to the intellectual and cultural life of the residences, and to help new students familiarize themselves with the facilities and resources of the campus. In addition to regular dons, the Women's Residences place two dons in a bilingual-bicultural project and would therefore like to have applications from bilingual persons. There may also be openings for dons with expertise in German language/culture.

Initial enquiries should be directed promptly to the Office of the Dean of Women, Victoria Hall (547-6109).

Closing date for applications is Wednesday, February 28, 1979.

THE DREAM'S COMING

"I used to think banks were filled with women who followed orders - and men who gave them."

Lotta Harsanyi, B. Comm.,
Queen's University, 1974.

"I used to think banks were huge and impersonal. Add to that my notion they weren't fussy about women in management, and you can see I had a grim view of the banking business."

"Boy, was I wrong."

"Before graduating from Queen's, I talked with one of Toronto Dominion's campus recruiters. He explained about the dozens of management opportunities available at Toronto Dominion - everything from market research to international banking. He talked about TD as a young, progressive company - one that wasn't going to pay lip service to my thoughts and ideas. And one that wasn't going to hold me back because of my sex."

"I was impressed with the recruiter. And so I decided to give TD a chance."

"They put me through their Banklab Training Course and it gave me some important insights into management. Then I became an Administration Officer at two different branches, and now I'm into Commercial Credit - my real area of interest."

"Right now the future looks bright and prosperous. My goal is to be the best at what I do."

"For me, TD is more than a good place to work - it's a good place to build a career."

The bank where people make the difference

Look for TD recruiters on your campus soon.

Old Dan's Pictures

A linkage of light via the past opens the eyes.

From old image Nova Scotia the sun's beam reflects salt ocean and orchard.

Falling on chemical salts, a change in the chains holding to form a life-ancestral.

The posture in code,
bonded by light,
is developed in the dark.

From negative to positive, then an expansion
within the frame of light provided, fixity,
a black and white print.

But most interesting, Dan, we hand-tinted those black & whites made from old negatives you handed down, shading provided with as much deliberation
as the impact you saw of wave on water.

The Intelligensia

Through these banged boards
Held by rusted nails & something of incredible strength
A poverty permeates;
This collection things forming shack over-run, as all things here are overrun,
Rocks over earth
Weeds & green struggling through, competing for cracks,
Brambles snarling & hiss
For sun, subsistence;
And they grow fat on roots &
slaughtered pigs,
Grandmother, her son, 2 hired hands,
widowed daughter-in-law,
3 girls & the idiot boy, Brian;
All living so thick so rich
In permeated air
A poverty of mind.

Sons of cousins, these kindred Of cattle, where daughters wed brothers
& soil sits as dust on rock-beds,
Boots, the backroom harness,
Settles in sheets, in the creases of sex,
Vibrant in fingernails

And through all this, an intelligensia Of beast & burden,
of cogs & tractor wheels,
Cracked skulls & drownings;
Adapting to drought, the inevitable dust
Of surplus Wheat, spoiled fruit, children beginning children,
An intelligensia evolving as Rain washing through soiled mud-Scattered seeds like hand-me-downs among the kids,
Patches of food of wood
Of cloth for quilts, rags 'round pipes, black wrenches.

I am a health pilot here,
Car cocky with crutches & canes,
Aids for the aged;
They welcome me to their homes,
Demonstrate their sufficiency
Weaving unsteady & confident
Past stoves throbbing with fire,
Over crippled collies, tatted rugs,
Cats & kids darting between,
Eager for the barn,
Or hen-house

Patient with my urban complexities,
My governmental offerings, my smiled policies;
Always thanking me for what I've done,
My nothing;

I want to rid my body
Of the grease of their tables
The manure of their fields;
To stand beside this poverty of mind
And not feel-stunted

Lakeshore, Kingston

Squirrels feed eagerly among the yellow leaves.
Lakeshore again and the gulls turning
The branches of the tree
are invisible with the sun behind them,
the branches of the tree show clearly in front of the sun reflected in water.

The blue clouds darken.
The small grass
The sun seems a part of this sky
The branches of the tree move slowly
The sound of the water

The end of an era: Stan Rogers closes the Grounds in style

by Rob Young

The week before last, the following ad appeared in the Globe and Mail for Stan Rogers at the Groaning Board: "Folksinger returns with his spellbinding ballads." As I sat in the audience at Bitter Grounds last night, groping for an adjective that would best describe the music of Stan Rogers, I found that I could do no better than a lowly ad writer for the Globe.

Stan's music is truly spellbinding. He is possessed of a strong and moving voice which he uses with great effectiveness. His guitar work is, for the most part, very clean, and his 12-string, although used quite sparingly, always fits perfectly with the particular piece. But it is the power of the material through his interpretations which seems to lure his audience into the palm of his hand.

The pattern for the evening was set with the first two numbers. Stan opened with one of his better known tunes, "45 Years", a beautiful melodic love song. This was followed by a modern day version of the work son, "Xerox Line", which featured Garnet Rogers and bassist David Eadie on "wahoo's". In this manner Stan and his band lifted us up and brought us down throughout the entire evening, and his momentum didn't lag for a minute.

It was an emotional evening at times, but it was not due so much to the closing of Bitter Grounds as to the power of the music. On Archer Fisher's "Sammy's Bar" the blend of the voices of band and audience was so moving that it brought Stan to tears. The emotion was offset beautifully and lightened by Garnet and David's sidesplitting comic relief.

The musical talent of the band shone through particularly on Doug McArthur's "Skyway." Garnet's fiddle was blazing and David's bass contributed greatly to the dynamic power of the song.

I can't say much about the guest set because in a surprise move to both myself and the audience, I found myself on stage facing probably the largest Bitter Grounds audience I've seen.

As Stan said, "there was no reason why this audience couldn't have been duplicated throughout the term". There might have been no need for a farewell performance. There is a tragic beauty that accompanies the closing of a club, but along with that, there is a certain bitterness that the support and solidarity came just a little late.

National Theatre School looking for talent

by Julian Cunningham

In a recent press release, the National Theatre School of Canada announced its upcoming audition/interview dates and deadlines for the next academic year.

The National Theatre School is a post secondary school which undertakes the professional formation of future actors, designers and production personnel for Canada's professional theatre.

The acting course involves a three year period of instruction in mime voice, movement, dancing, and fencing—the aim being not to perfect the actor but to perfect his instrument.

Theatre technique, and design make up the two sections of the production course, a two year program. Applicants must choose their preferred section.

Auditions/interviews will commence in March/79, reaching every major city in Canada. Applications must be submitted to the school no later than February 15th, 1979. Inquiries and/or application requests should be addressed to the National Theatre School, 5030 St. Denis St., Montreal, Quebec H2J 2L8 (tel: (514) 842-7954) as soon as possible. Candidates will be informed of the date and place of their audition/interview shortly after the application has been received by the school.

All applicants must be high school graduates and between the ages of 17 and 24

Arts Week next week

An early prediction for this year's Arts Festival—success due in large to the immense diversity of its activities. Here are some highlights of the festival. A full itinerary will be printed in Thursday's Lictor.

On Saturday, Jan. 20th, there will be a film competition in Dupuis Aud., and a Martial arts/Mime demonstration in the Polson Room. Both events begin at 2:00 p.m. A.B.F.A. Juried Art Show will conclude the day's events at 7:00 p.m. in the Red Room, Kingston Hall.

Thespians will enjoy the series of noon-hour shows presented alternately by the Drama Guild and Queen's Musical Theatre in Mac-Corry, from Tuesday, Jan. 23rd to Friday to Jan. 26th.

For concerned aesthetes, a panel discussion on government cutbacks in the arts will be held on Tuesday, Jan. 23rd in Dunning Aud. at 8:00 p.m.

The Festival organizers are also offering activities ranging from poetry readings to a night of the classics with the RMC Choir from jazz to the Sonare Trombone Choir.

Included in the itinerary, but not sponsored by the Arts Festival, are some delicious drawing cards: Karen Kain and Frank Augustyn with Entre Six Dance Company; Harry Chapin, and (of particular interest) the return of Ed Bickert's jazz trio to Kingston. After the disco-jazz of Maynard Ferguson, Bickert will be a breath of fresh air.

Learn how ballroom dancers do it. Catch Antigone. See a little live entertainment in the Quiet Pub—every day of the festival in Blake's immortal words, "Kiss the joy as it flies." It takes off Friday

Zuk latest guest artist in series:

Vaghy continues

by Fiona Grieve

Playing to a hometown crowd is always different from playing anywhere else. The relaxed receptiveness of the audience is countered by a sense of obligation to perform well for friends, colleagues and students. The Vaghy String Quartet and pianist Ireneus Zuk did this last Saturday night.

All five performers are members of the Queen's faculty of music. The Quartet, who have been artists-in-residence here for the past ten years, continue to contribute much to Kingston's musical life.

The concert opened with Dvorak's ezetto for two Violins and Viola. The musicians held back somewhat the Introduzione. However, they warmed to the Larghetto which allowed, maintaining a strong, smooth line of melody throughout. The last two movements were played with drama and energy. Dvorak's contrasts were clearly brought out, adding interest to both this piece and the Piano Quintet later in the programme.

The Beethoven quartet, played next, was a demanding work. Its most dramatic movements were characterized by intricate and showy passages played at high speed. Even the more lyrical ones had a sense of urgency, holding the emotional pitch high. Although marred by momentary weaknesses in the intonation of the lower parts in the last two movements, these were the most exciting and were well-received by the audience.

After intermission came the Piano Quintet in A Major by Dvorak that most of us anticipated with pleasure. Nor were we disappointed. Despite a restart necessitated by a wayward string, the artists kept their concentration. Starting from a grand opening, this piece was the highlight of the concert. Particularly of note was the Scherzo-Furiant which positively sparkled. My only regret was not being able to see the pianist.

The hometown crowd went home well satisfied. Those who have not yet made it out to one of the Vaghy Quartet performances this year should take the trouble. These artists play something for every taste in classical music and do perform regularly here. Their next performance in Grant Hall is scheduled for March 7 and I suspect they will also offer concerts elsewhere at Queen's during the term.

Book Review

1982

by Ross Hermiston

"1982" by Norman Alcock, et. al., $4.00 paperback

A million dollars in crisp new thousand dollar bills is the size of an ordinary brick. A billion dollars in crisp new thousand dollar bills would make a pile as high as a 31 storey building. The world's annual military expenditure is the equivalent of a pile of crisp new thousand dollar bills reaching 27 miles into the sky. Four hundred thousand million dollars is being spent on military stockpiles. Our battered world can neither afford nor risk such a dangerous explosive situation. As Canada is on the brink of adding millions to this stockpile with the purchase of the latest new fighter jets, 1982 should be compulsory reading: research shows that increased arms expenditures increase the likelihood of war.

1982 is a well-researched study of the conditions of violence including concrete recommendations for a sane approach to security and peace. The authors' plan is to reduce military expenditures beginning in 1982. The three intervening years are to be spent planning how to systematically accomplish this; how to productively invest funds saved on disarmament; how to develop an independent peacekeeping force.

A computer path model of international violence indicates that international wars have been provoked by size of arms spending, numbers of multinational subsidiaries in the 3rd World, numbers of military alliances, territorial disputes and colonialism. An interesting finding of the research is that wars tend to occur when there is a balance of power between nations - the reverse of the argument that perpetuates the arms race.

The book includes interesting research on the economic gap between rich and poor nations and recommendations that monies saved on arms expenditures be invested in ways to improve the standard of living of poor peoples in poorer nations.

1982 is an excellent reference book including tables to enable the reader to compare Canada with the rest of the world in terms of life expectancy, economic growth, and participation in peace-keeping missions.

1982 is published by the Canadian Peace Research Institute, 119 Thomas Street Oakville, Ontario, a non-profit and non-partisan organization entirely supported by public donations and foundation grants.

Kain and Augustyn to accompany Entre-Six

by Julia Grunau

Karen Kain, Frank Augustyn, and the Entre-Six dance company of Quebec are all taking advantage of each other to bring evenings of avant-garde and thoughtful ballet to Ontario universities.

The Entre-Six company is seizing the two National Ballet dancers before their spring season in Toronto begins; Kain and Augustyn are taking the opportunity to work with indigenous choreographer Lawrence Gradus as a change from the primarily classical repertoire of the National. All parties benefit from the departures.

The Entre-Six company relies on the strength of its (eight!) dancers and the innovation of Artistic Director Gradus for its whallop. The dancers' strengths are negligible but promising; the choreography and wit, indisputable. Entre-Six is at its collective best when performing its own "Excerpts" and "Excursions". These ballets are excellent examples of the style and panache that can permeate Canadian creations when the creators are endowed with the material resources (that is, money, food, and a space to think) with which to cultivate their talent.

The two National dancers lend an obvious aura of publicity to the tour. Their participation in the programme, is of course, greeted rapturously by audiences.

Kain and Augustyn miraculously escape overbalancing the production, and enhance it instead, delicately drawing attention to the capabilities and potential of the Entre-Six company.

The company will be performing January 18th and 19th at the Grand Theatre.

Augustyn and Kain join Entre-Six this week at the Grand.

Eastwood and Clyde are comic Jekyll and Hyde

by Mark Henderson

Upon achieving a tremendous popularity and following in the late 1960's, Clint Eastwood has developed an under-rated talent as director of his own projects. Justifiably unhappy with the exploitation of his star image as a super cowboy or ruthless cop, he directed a handful of movies that subtly and expertly flaunted and commented upon his old image. A new Eastwood arose. High Plains Drifter and The Outlaw Josey Wales were fine Westerns representing a re-evaluation of the Sergio Leone-created "man with no name" character. The Gauntlet succeeded in shattering his Don Siegel inspired "cool cop" character, resulting in a cynical but hilarious variation of the Dirty Harry genre of excessive violence and narrowminded individuality.

It is unfortunate therefore, to see Eastwood's newest attraction, directed not by the star, but James Fargo, a competent but hardly unique talent. Every Which Way But Loose isn't a bad film, but oh, how much better it could have been if Eastwood himself had called the shots behind the cameras. (Initially he was reported to be directing and was then mysteriously replaced). Also starring are Sondra Locke and an orangoutang called Clyde. Clint plays Philo, a truck driver who loves booze, girls, and bare-fisted boxing. Rather devoid of philosophic muscle, he is content with bar-hopping and brawling until he meets a cute C-W singer (Locke) who hits the soft spot beneath his macho exterior previously reserved for Clyde.

Every Which Way But Loose is essentially a comedy that overstates its humour and goes for easy laughs. Eastwood's absence as director, a role which made his earlier exercises of self-parody both entertaining and meaningful, is evident in the one-dimensional characterizations and lack of a forceful plot. James Fargo pits Philo against a gang of mid-leagued bikers (the Black Widows), an amoral tart, and a series of boxing opponents. There are fights galore, as Eastwood's physicality dominates these scenes, leaving only Clyde for the moments of sensitivity in the film. Philo comes off as a dummy who really deserves the long-limbed anthropoid he's so attached to.

Every Which Way But Loose never transcends the level of light humour and weakly motivated action, a feat Eastwood accomplished so brilliantly in Josey Wales. The old bikers who harass Philo had the potential to become metaphoric for out-dated rebellion in relation to Eastwood's goodnatured conformity, but this doesn't materialize. Sondra Locke's character is a pale variation of the one she played in The Gauntlet, portrayed as a vicious tease rather than a strong-willed woman who knows her own mind. Clyde is admittedly pretty funny, but he could have been used more effectively to counterpoint Philo's thick-skulled mentality. Hopefully, the shortcomings of Every Which Way But Loose will force Eastwood to realize the importance of controlling his own image, as the results of a contract director have stunted a potentially fine vehicle for him. Shallow humour isn't Eastwood's bag, he (and his audience) deserve much more.

Gael in winless rut lose and draw to Vees

by Chris Cuthbert

There was a silver lining to the Queen's Golden Gaels disappointing weekend doubleheader with the Laurentian Voyageurs at Jock Hart's Arena.

The Gaels, winless in their last eight games, could only muster a single point from the weekend series with a 6-6 tie Saturday afternoon after dropping a 5-3 decision to the Vees on Friday evening.

The weekend results virtually destroyed the Gaels' aspirations of a second place finish in the OUAA eastern division, but Queen's third place stock rose when the stumbling York Yeoman were defeated by Ottawa 3-2 Saturday, at the York Ice Palace. York's loss, coupled with the Gaels' tie, left the Yeomen trailing Queen's by two points in the standings.

Paul Stothart and John MacIntyre scored four points apiece to pace the Gaels in Saturday's 6-6 draw. Laurentian led 2-0 by the six minute mark of the first period, on goals by Cam Campbell and Robin Laking.

Stothart and Ron Davidson scored power play goals 58 seconds apart to knot the score, but Lou Clements, a thorn in the Gaels' side throughout the weekend, shot Laurentian back in front before the period's end.

The Vees went ahead 4-2 on a power play goal by Bob Dubis before the Gaels stormed to the attack.

MacIntyre and Gary Brandt scored goals 15 seconds apart in a flurry that inspired the Gaels and seemed to rattle the Voyageurs. Following Brandt's goal, Laurentian centre Laking and coach Billy Harris were ejected from the game for baiting the referee who had not allowed a late Vees line change prior to the tying goal.

A minute later, MacIntyre converted a good Kevin Treacy pass on the power play for the Gaels go-ahead goal.

Clements, however, drew Laurentian even again, in the closing minute of the second period. Davidson and Grant McCaig traded power play markers in the final segment to produce the 6-6 tie.

Redmen to visit

The Queen's Golden Gaels will host the R.M.C. Redmen in an exhibition contest at Jock Hart's Arena Wednesday evening at 8:00 p.m. The Gaels will use the game as a warmup for their key Friday night encounter with the powerful Toronto Blues.

R.M.C. participated in the "Dutch Cup" tournament in October at Queen's and were drubbed 8-0 by St. Lawrence University and 15-3 by Laval.

This is the first of two meetings between these two clubs this season.

B-ballers split wkend contests

by Chris Cuthbert

The Queen's Golden Gaels basketball team split a pair of weekend matches, defeating Ryerson 91-60 on Friday evening before bowing to the Toronto Blues 81-72 on Saturday night.

The victory over Ryerson was Queen's first in league play this season and after the weekend action the Gaels have a record of 1-2. Including exhibition games this season the Gaels' record stands at 5-6.

"I was extremely pleased with the performance of the team this weekend", stated a pleased coach Tom Frood.

Rick Varsava, Jeff Folkard and Mike Kirby turned in solid performances in the Gaels' romp over Ryerson. Previously, the Gaels had been rated below Ryerson in the national rankings but that should change with Friday's result.

The Gaels played well in spots against the Toronto Blues but inconsistency cost them the match. The score was tied 39-39 at halftime but the Blues blew the game open with a strong third quarter surge. The Gaels rallied late in the game but fell short by nine points. Rick Varsava, for the second straight night, turned in a strong performance.

Coach Frood was also pleased with the weekend attendance. "The crowds were very good and improving with every game."

The Gaels next game is Friday against the high powered York Yeomen on the York campus.

Gaels, Giants of slalom at Peaks

by J.M. Neilson

Queen's men started the alpine ski season "on the right ski" as they convincingly defeated eleven other schools in the first giant slalom competition of the 1979 season last weekend. Racing under perfect snow conditions at Georgian Peaks in the Collingwood area, the race was won by Rob Safrata of Western Ontario. Safrata, fresh from the National Ski Team, was followed in second spot by Dave Beatty, a Queen's newcomer, and other Gaels in close contention were Peter Flowers (another first year man) 6th, Bryan Fitzpatrick 10th, and Tim Wardrop 13th. The team won quite handily, 165 points to Waterloo's 135 and York's 120 points. Other team finishes in order were Sir Wilfrid Laurier, Trent, McMaster A team, Toronto, Brock, Western, McMaster B, Ottawa, and Cuelph.

This was an excellent team effort and again demonstrated the depth of talent that carried them to the 1978 OUAA title.

The women's alpine team didn't fare as well but still finished in a commendable fifth place among ten schools. Western won the giant slalom team title with Trent 2nd, McMaster 3rd, and Waterloo 4th. Queen's girls were trailed by Ottawa, Guelph, Toronto, Sir Wilfrid Laurier, and McMaster. The two best Queen's finishes were by two newcomers - Nancy Firstbrook in 3rd spot and Nancy Esson in 6th place. The second Nancy's sister Andrea, incidentally, won the race under University of Ottawa colors in the fast time of 85.31 seconds, almost two seconds ahead of anyone else. The Queen's team was rounded out by three other first year racers. Gretchen Crawford, Susan Curtis and Wendy Roberts.

This first OUAA race followed by only 24 hours the four-day Inter-collegiate Can-Am races at Waterville Valley, New Hampshire. The well-organized Can-Am meet was attended by five Canadian and five American schools and was hosted in fine style by Plymouth State College. The Gaels had their problems but managed 4th and 7th place team finishes in two slalom races, 7th and 8th places in giant slaloms, and 3rd in alpine combined. Overall, Queen's placed 7th which is below their usual standard.

A bright light in the Gaels' performance was Dave Beatty's 3rd and 4th place finishes in the two slaloms and 7th and 9th places in the G.S's. This consistency earned him 2nd place in the individual alpine combined. First place in the combined went to Jeff Lyon of Northeastern University of Boston - but only by a very narrow margin.

The Can-Am meet was won by the University of Maine with 564 race points, followed by Massachusetts (490), Northeastern (482), Dalhousie (460), Plymouth State (439), McGill (410), Queen's (363), Toronto (266), Connecticut (235), and McMaster (125). The New England schools clearly had the edge this time but the Canadian institutions will be out to correct this imbalance in March at the second Can-Am.

Week in the wilds

by Kevin Whitaker

On January 1st, 1979, 60 brave souls left family and friends behind, venturing out in to the white unknown. Their purpose was to participate in the annual P.H.E. Ski School at beautiful Camp Tawingo. Of the 25 students taking the cross country ski option, few knew that within six days, they would be transformed into top notch Nordic ski instructors, under the able hands of Jake Edwards and Ann Turnbull. Accompanying Anne Turnbull wherever she went, was her sidekick Powie The Rawhide Kid. Powie himself an able instructor, became famous for his stonefaced instruction of the snowplow turn, and his private fireside lessons.

To the tune of numb fingers and cold feet, the typical day was as follows: Every morning we were awakened by the sound of an imaginary bell rung in the main lodge. Pulling our tortured bodies off of our racks (Rack is camp talk for bed), we slipped into our sweat encrusted freeze dried clothes, strapped on our boards, and skied to breakfast. Following breakfast, we all moved to the Wax Room, that mystical temple of magic, flame and klister. In the Wax Room, even the novices assumed an air of profound professionalism. After some brief consultation in the back room, our spiritual leader, the Snake, pulled out his Ouija board, entered a mystical trance and in between incoherent religious mutterings, pronounced the "Wax For The Day."

The remainder of the day consisted of six hours of Ski-falling, divided between straight instruction and touring. One one day, we were treated to a very special surprise, we were allowed to eat our lunch on the trail. We headed out into the wilderness and after skiing about 150 kms, we finally decided on a place to eat. We had to look for the right combination of no wood, complete lack of shelter, 10 foot drifts, arctic temperatures and storm force winds. We all had an enjoyable meal, and after cleaning up and burying our dead, we skied comfortable back to camp.

Other exciting activities included a camp out, night touring, snowshoeing and orienteering. These events were carried out quite successfully except for a lack of lighting on the night tour, and the loss of a few pairs of pants during the camp out.

In conclusion, we would say without reserve, that all the survivors benefitted greatly from this experience during our week of exile and/or entertainment. Certainly, there is something to be said for the classroom without walls.

Learning experience for V-ball women

by Lee Prowse

Experienced teams from Waterloo, Western, Guelph and York dominated the 12th annual Waterloo Women's Volleyball invitational Meet in which the Queen's gals participated last weekend.

The four dominant squads all have members or ex-members from the Junior National team giving them the experience and expertise which Queen's a very young team, lacks.

Despite their apparent lack of confidence and experience Coach Donna Gallagher believes each girl had a personal best performance at some time during the two day meet. As a team the girls played well but they could not sustain the concentration necessary to win past seven or eight points. Consequently Queen's women lost several games which could have been reversed.

Coach Gallagher calls her girls slow starters but said they get progressively better as the matches continue. This slow starting could be due to a lack of confidence which in turn stems from their lack of experience. Therefore acquiring experience is the number one priority for the team, outweighing even winning matches in importance. Hence the coach plans to play all the girls as much as possible in this second half of the season.

Winning has become a secondary priority because Waterloo, Western, and York have already run away with the top spots in the tier one league. Queen's (in fifth position) is automatically placed in a pre-final with the top teams of the tier two league in order to determine the three teams who will meet tier one finalists in the Ontario championships.

The volleyball season continues this weekend with a tri-meet at Western. McMaster will be there also and Gallagher believes the Queen's women have the ability to beat both these teams.

SNOW REMOVAL

Article 5.5 of the Parking Regulations states in part "from December 1 to March 31, inclusive vehicles parked on surface lots between midnight and 0700 will be towed away if in the opinion of the Parking Supervisor they impede snow removal operations."

Since much of our snow removal program will be carried out starting at midnight, those who must use the parking lots for overnight parking are asked to use the spaces on the perimeter of the lots. This will ease the problem, reduce the incidents of towing and result in a much higher standard of snow clearing.

Bus-it benefits need re-evaluation

AMS vice-president John Koopman is currently negotiating with PUC over the future of the Queen's Bus-it program. At a cost of about one hundred thousand dollars, it is indeed an important issue which merits careful consideration.

The Bus-it program, which is unique in Canada, was originally intended to encourage the Queen's student body to move out of the "ghetto" and distribute themselves more evenly across the city, while avoiding inhibitingly high commuting costs. This has not transpired, however, and the ghetto has continued to attract even more students, for whom the benefits of Bus-it are minimal.

Yet the attractions of the Bus-it program are clear—"free" bus service for the user. This obviously represents a complete subsidy of regular users by the majority of the student body who rarely, if ever, use Kingston's bus service. This is an admirable thing to do, but surely we must question if the money can not be better spent elsewhere.

The unlimited service of previous years has been replaced with a two-route service at a somewhat reduced price this year. But who really benefits from the program? The heaviest traffic by far is the route between Main and West campus. A recent study has estimated that sixteen percent of the student body considers the Bus-it program when choosing a location to live, and that fourteen percent actually use public transit regularly.

If the Bus-it program were dropped, some students would undoubtedly face higher commuting costs. Two points are particularly relevant here. Firstly, does the relatively small percentage of students affected justify the cost which is born by all? Secondly, on a more general plane, are the benefits for Bus-it users really that great? Surely not all present Bus-it users would miss the service to the same degree, and to some the effects would be only a minor inconvenience. This cost-benefit dilemma is what remains to be resolved. If the answers to the above questions are negative, then the Bus-it program is clearly an unwarranted and wasteful expenditure. If the answer is positive, then either some sort of Bus-it program should be retained, or one of the West campus shuttle operations which have been proposed (at about half the Bus-it cost) should be adopted.

The city, on the other hand, finds itself in a difficult position. They badly need the one hundred thousand dollars in revenues generated by the Bus-it assessment. It is worth noting that this levy is based on City-conducted surveys of student rides, which are then priced at a variable rate averaging thirty-two cents per ride. Each year's cost is then based on the previous year's ridership, and is fixed at the time of negotiations. But despite the profitability of Bus-it from the City's standpoint, they face political pressures from non-student Kingstonians. They view the unlimited travel at a cost of only ten dollars per student as exceptional value, especially when contrasted to the normal rates which they are forced to pay.

Zoning plan misdirected

Student housing is once again becoming an issue in Kingston; this time, however, the issue is being raised by the Sydenham Ward Ratepayers and Tenants Association. The Association is applying pressure on City Council to effect housing bylaw changes which could have dramatic effects on the nature of student housing in this city. However, it is not clear whether these changes are either workable or desirable.

The proposed bylaw changes would allow only four or fewer unrelated persons to share Zone A houses. (Zone A houses are defined as either single or double family dwellings). In addition, some housing would receive the new designation of cooperative housing, effectively removing it from the Zone A regulations.

Concern for the changing character of Sydenham Ward, due to the increase in student housing density, has prompted the Ratepayers and Tenants Association to pursue this action. The major complaints centre on such problems as inadequate parking facilities, noise, and the poor quality of additions to student-occupied houses. It is hoped that the proposed bylaw amendment will prevent the quality of housing in the ward from suffering further deterioration.

The concerns of the Association are understandable and should be shared by students. The problem lies in the actions being taken to address the situation.

Any bylaw designed to limit the number of unrelated persons living in a house will directly affect the availability of relatively inexpensive housing for students. Housing has always been in limited supply and many students have had to resort to large houses in order to find inexpensive and available accommodation. A limitation on numbers will inevitably result both in higher rents and an increasingly restricted market for students—a situation that will not be faced by the other ratepayers in Sydenham Ward.

More importantly, a bylaw designed to regulate numbers will not directly deal with the problem of the quality of housing. In fact, students may be faced with having to accept lower quality housing due to a shortage created by the restriction in numbers. Limits on the number of students living in one house will provide a major disincentive for landlords to build additions of questionable quality. On the other hand, it will increase the tendency of landlords to provide minimum repair to student houses, while charging

The AMS, on the other hand, is dickering at the margin of a one-hundred thousand dollar price tag—a very large sum for the benefits gained, and especially when compared to the additional cost to the city of the program. Koopman's negotiating position is weakened by the fact that a referendum offering transit services for around six dollars per student (along with the four dollars from the administration) is very likely to be passed, if only due to the powerful forces of inertia, rather than rational cost-benefit analysis of the entire program.

A further complication is that the administration has not indicated its future intentions towards the Bus-it program or any of the proposed alternatives. Some feel that the administration is obliged to maintaining a transportation link between the two campuses because it was an administrative decision which brought us West campus in the first place.

Koopman has been presented with a number of alternatives by the city, the most attractive of which is probably for full service at a cost of just over one hundred thousand dollars. This is a reasonable proposal which actually represents a weakening in the City's position relative to recent years (possibly because they feel the AMS is indeed seriously considering abandoning the plan completely.) But is the service really worth all that money? Is the thirty-two cents for every student ride on city buses really good value for our collective student dollar? This is the question to be decided.

maximum rent. While stopgapping the construction of low standard additions, the Sydenham Ratepayers are nonetheless opening the door to low standard rental housing citywide.

Furthermore, the proposed changes may be illegal. The Borough of North York, in Metro Toronto, passed a similar bylaw restricting the number of unrelated persons occupying a house, and actually prosecuted a resident found in contravention of the bylaw. Although a conviction was obtained in the first instance, the decision was appealed and overturned—on the basis that it was discriminatory, unreasonable, and beyond the scope of Section 35 of The Urban Planning Act. (This section allows municipalities to pass bylaws regulating the use of land but not restricting any persons from using land.) Subsequent appeals have again overturned this decision and the case now lies before the Supreme Court of Ontario for adjudication.

The proposal to designate certain buildings as cooperative houses (thereby allowing student houses to exist as they do presently) has some merit. It recognizes that some areas in Sydenham Ward are almost entirely populated by students, as well as dampening the impact on the housing market that the other changes would have. If this proposal proceeds, then care must be taken to ensure that a sufficiently large area is designated as cooperative housing. Over 6,000 Queen's students live off campus, and adequate provision must be made to ensure that an artificial housing shortage is not created because of unrealistic planning.

If concern for the quality of housing is the basis for these proposed changes, the Association would be far better advised to advocate more rigorous housing standards and building codes, as well as noise bylaws, parking bylaws, and so forth. As well as dealing directly with their concerns, these regulations would apply evenly to all residents of the city, not just students.

Wages spark argument

Who's Where dispute

by Warren Everson

A student who worked for over a month on the Who's Where has gone to the Labour Relations Board to demand further payment from the AMS. Louise Carroll, a St. Lawrence student, was hired to work on the production of the student directory in early August, when it became apparent to editor Chris Chenoweth that he could not raise sufficient advertising and also properly supervise the production of the book.

However, Carroll signed an agreement with the AMS to work not for a regular wage, but for 10% of the money yet to be raised in advertising, which organizers predicted would be 4,000 dollars.

AMS Vice President John Koopman explained the unusual hiring scheme. "This arrangement was designed to provide some impetus for Chris Chenoweth to raise ads. Louise was at the meeting and we made it very clear then that we didn't have a lot of faith in his ability to collect that money."

Unfortunately for Carroll, the Who's Where ran a deficit of approximately 3,000 dollars, and the advertising which she was to gain a percentage on was never fully collected. Instead of the estimated 400 dollars she was to be paid, she received only 120 dollars for one hundred and ninety-seven hours. Since the AMS stuck to the original agreement, Carroll has turned the matter over to the Labour Relations Board.

"I feel the AMS should have honoured the spirit of the agreement," she said, adding that she had hoped she had worked in good faith for over a month.

"I only came to the Journal because I wanted other students to realize that they can't depend on the AMS to be any more lenient than a regular corporation."

"The whole thing was unfortunate," says Koopman. "I've no complaints against this girl. She did good work for a month and the book wouldn't have been finished without her efforts. But we did make it very clear in August that this was the only way we would hire her, and she did go ahead with it."

Carroll said that regardless of the result of her own case, she was concerned that other people might become involved in the sort of "shifty techniques" she encountered.

"The whole thing was a silly situation. They had no trust in us at all and they thought that I would put pressure on Chris to sell more ads," she said.

"There are no hard feelings personally," she insisted. "I just feel I should get more out of the work I did than $120. It's a negligible sum for the AMS, but they're just standing on principle, and so am I."

The crisp morning air, the crunch of snow underneath and the sparkle of frost on the trees reminds us that Kingston can be BLOODY cold in January.

Rice dinner surprising success

by Karen McNeil

The rice dinner held at Lower Ban Righ and Leonard Hall cafeterias to raise money for the four foster children supported by Queen's, provoked an unexpectedly favourable response from Queen's students.

"It was a huge success. It exceeded our wildest hopes," said Hugh Dodd, External Affairs Commissioner. "I think it's an excellent idea and would encourage others to do something similar in future years."

Almost 1,800 people attended the dinner, which consisted only of Spanish or curried rice, and a salad bar. By not providing dessert or meat, but charging the normal price, Saga Foods saved 59 cents on every meal.

This saving of $1046.07 was passed on to the AMS and added to the $162.13 secured through private donations, resulting in a total donation of $1208.20.

The AMS normally sends each child only $228 (set aside from the Student Activity Fee), annually, so the money raised from the dinner will provide welcome additional support.

Chevron loses position on CUP

Another nail was hammered into an Ontario campus newspaper's coffin last week as member papers of Canadian University Press voted at a conference here to expel it from the organization.

The Chevron, the former student newspaper of the University of Waterloo (UW), was found to have harassed and physically abused staff members who did not support the majority political view of the staff, thereby violating CUP principles of staff democracy.

Delegates from the 47 papers in attendance were told that the paper was dominated by members of the Anti-Imperialist Alliance (AIA), the UW campus branch of the Communist Party of Canada (Marxist-Leninist) (CPC-ML).

The CUP statement of principles says that "eligibility for membership on staff is guaranteed to all students on campus."

The expulsion move by CUP is only the latest in a series of events which have left The Chevron's claim of being a student newspaper in serious doubt.

The Chevron ceased being the campus' official student newspaper on January 1, 1979, because of the referendum.

The Chevron has also been challenged by the appearance of another student newspaper on campus. The Imprint, formed last spring by disgruntled former Chevron staffers, has received strong support from students and applied for prospective membership at the CUP conference.

Delegates decided not to grant The Imprint membership until further investigation but gave the national executive the option to do so after March 31.

Chevron editor, Dave Carter, claimed that the conference's more than 150 delegates were willing to expel The Chevron for its political beliefs and denied that the paper was run undemocratically.

"This is a witch hunt, it's red-baiting," he said.

Chevron news editor, Larry Hannant, a member of the AIA, said the paper has been subject to unfair attacks because of the political beliefs of some of its staff.

Attendance better than past years

by Rob Southcott

Since its election last March, AMS, Outer Council has had difficulties getting more than about two-thirds of its voting members to attend its meetings.

According to attendance figures of Outer Council, an average of 28 out of 39 voting members have been present at the meetings. Though this figure may seem low, Outer Council speaker Dave Corbett believes that attendance has improved over previous years. "This year's Council is better than most years," stated Corbett, remarking that he had heard of times last year when Council meetings were cancelled due to attendance not reaching the required quorum of 21 members present.

Under an AMS bylaw, any Council member who misses 3 or more meetings in a row can be considered for removal from the Council. This was not strictly enforced by the AMS, but last November, Corbett did send notice to certain "absentees" of Council meetings, stating that they should explain their absences.

AMS President Dave Brown echoed Corbett's sentiments that attendance at meetings has been fair, but Brown did see some problem in many Council members' lack of preparation for meetings. "The executive tried to give Outer Council more leeway, but they've kind of let us down," stated Brown, citing along with Corbett, that Outer Council tends to be just a body to ratify motions which are proposed by Inner Council.

AMS put under review fragile, handle with care

by Julia Grunau

The AMS Outer Council established twelve areas of review for its 1979 Restructuring Committee Wednesday Jan. 10.

Topics reviewed will include an option for a full-time president and executive, the political role of the AMS, conflicting areas of jurisdiction and activity, and effective communication with students.

According to Vicki Steele, Education Commissioner, the list has met with some scepticism because of its scope and ambition.

"It was suggested by Ross Bartlett and others that perhaps we were biting off more than we could chew. But the idea is for the Committee to hand in periodical reports, not just one covering all the areas. The load is quite heavy but the purpose of the Committee is to examine the organizational structure of the AMS. We want to do that as best we can."

The Restructuring Committee was formally established last fall in response to general questions about the validity of the structure of the AMS.

Canadian unity is strong

By Sean Dewart

Prof John Berry of the Queen's Psychology Department had encouraging words about Canadian Unity and Identity in a speech last Monday night. Berry addressed about 35 people in Watson Hall in the final lecture in a series presented by the Institute of Commonwealth and Comparative Studies.

Berry was highlighting work he has been involved with over several years. His conclusions on Monday night were based mostly on data from a survey carried out in 1974.

"The two ethnic groups which like each other the most in the Canadian mosaic are the English and the French. I think it's fair to say that tolerance is fairly high in Canada."

Berry referred to a point made by Louis Rousseau, whose speech last term was the second in the series, namely that the feeling of security in French-Canada was directly proportional to their tolerance of others. "Unless one's feet are firmly planted on the ground, one is unlikely to accept people around them."

Generally, Berry was guardedly optimistic about unity between Canadians. Using Belgium and Northern Ireland as examples, he said that other countries with situations similar to Canada's were less tolerant among themselves.

Addressing himself to Canadian identity, Berry was equally encouraging. 84% of the sample ascribe to unhyphenated identity, in other words, refer to themselves as Canadians as opposed to French-Canadian or English-Canadian. Berry made exception for first and second generation immigrants.

External Affairs Commissioner Hugh Dodd [second from right] accepts check for $1,046.07 from a Saga Foods representative. The scrumptious rice meal [below] was consumed by 1773 hungry students last Tuesday night in an effort to raise money for Queen's four foster children.

OFS and Queen's

January 28 the Ontario Federation of students will choose a new chairman to guide through what will certainly be a difficult and crucial year. This is the first of a four part series written by AMS/OFS Liaison Officer Lysé Doucet on the history, roles and future of the organization.

On Queen's Campus general awareness of or interest in the Ontario Federation of Students (OFS) tends to be either negligible or negative. For many students, OFS is but another organization's acronym. Alternately, and more unfortunately, it is often deemed to be a disorganized, radical, if not ineffective, student organization.

In light of a recent policy paper, "The Focus of the O.F.S.," produced by the A.M.S. at Queen's, the latter criticism would appear to be valid. Dave Brown, A.M.S. President, raised A.M.S. concerns about the effectiveness of the O.F.S. in representing student issues and in providing communication links among the member campuses. An obvious case in point is the recent "Mass-Informational Picket Line" at Queen's Park which was organized by the O.F.S. but, as Brown points out, was neither mass, nor was it informational. Nonetheless, the O.F.S. continues to discuss the possibilities of extending its responsibilities into additional areas; two proposed endeavours are the development of a Health Care plan and a student Credit Union. How viable are these? What purposes is the O.F.S. purporting to serve?

Nonetheless, despite the negative criticisms, these should not obscure the ways in which member organizations do benefit. O.F.S. conferences provide forums for debate and enable student gover-nements to engage in an exchange of ideas and suggestions. Furthermore, the O.F.S. is in constant communication with the Ministry of Colleges and Universities, civil servants, and the opposition parties. They present student perspectives and concerns to councils and organizations involved both within and outside the post-secondary education sector. Like any group within society, the students of Ontario have specific concerns; the O.F.S. provides one means of voicing these interests. Yet, at Queen's and within other student governments, the O.F.S. is under question.

The moot point is that if the O.F.S. is not adequately serving the needs of our student government and likewise our student body, should we continue to maintain our membership? $1.50 of each individual's Student Interest Fee is allocated to the O.F.S. Combined with other funds which are channelled into conferences and publicity campaigns, etcetera, approximately two thousand dollars a year is directed toward our continuing participation within the province-wide organization. The "leave or remain" query is not easily resolved. A similar concern was raised in 1974 but Queen's opted to retain its membership status.

The question's re-emergence is a likely possibility. Already, two of the competing A.M.S. executive teams are expressing reservations about

OFS Executive at Queen's last year

O.F.S. and its role for the Queen's student body. Yet, despite the apparent problems which inhere in the O.F.S. it can be argued that a wiser attitude to leaving would be to remain and attempt to affect constructive changes. Although Queen's is often categorized as the "conservative" member organization, the A.M.S. has contributed in many positive ways, both in preparing papers for conferences and in proposing alternative strategies.

Hence, what is obvious is that if the above question is to assume a higher profile among the Queen's student population in general, it is imperative for individual students to become more informed on the entire issue; its pros and its cons.

Business council

Link with the community

by Sheila Croft

A concern for employer's needs has led business school's Dean John Gordon to organize a six-man advisory council of Canadian businessmen.

Within three years the council will grow to between 15-16 members. Meetings will be held on a quarterly basis, the first was held in October in Toronto.

Among the members, who will serve a three-year term without remuneration from the university, are: Rod J. Anderson, partner in Clarkson Gordon & Co.; William R.C. Blundell, vice-president and division executive, Canadian General Electric Co.; Guy P. French, chief executive officer and president, American Can of Canada Ltd.; H. Stewart Ladd, vice-president of personnel, Alcan Aluminum Ltd.; David Lakie, vice-president, Molson Companies Ltd.

and Don C. Lowe, president and chief executive officer, Pratt and Whitney Aircraft of Canada Ltd.

"We're looking for a council we can really use to keep the school in touch with the needs of the business community," states Gordon, "it is important that we be completely aware of changing demands."

The advisors will also be a source of research material for faculty members and possibly provide leads for contract research.

"Stronger links between the school and business", according to Gordon, "will ensure that students graduating to the working world will have the right balance of skills."

When the council reaches its ultimate size, Dean Gordon envisions it as a national body representing industry, the public and private sectors, women, the various professions, and the unions.

TAK lends us an ear

by Beth McKenzie

Soon after Scott Anderson transferred to Queen's from Waterloo, he became so depressed that he was ready to leave school. Instead, he decided to create Telephone Aid Kingston, (TAK) to help people like himself, who needed to talk to someone too, but have no one to turn to.

Today, seven years later, TAK is still providing its confidential and sympathetic service to people in need of a comforting voice between the hours of 7pm and 7am. Last year they received over 1500 calls. However, TAK president Doug King, doesn't think that the service is helping as many people as it should.

"Many people have a false impression of the organization," says King. "The standard reaction to the mention of TAK is, 'TAK? Next time I want to jump off a bridge, I'll give them a call.' " "Although we do get several suicide calls every year, we want to encourage calls from people before they get that desperate. People who are lonely, under pressure from exams and assignments, or having a fight with their boyfriend or girlfriend should feel free to call," said King. TAK even provides information about all current services and activities at Queen's and in Kingston.

Approximately 40% of TAK's calls come from the Kingston community. King hopes to expand the services to meet this need year-round, and is trying to attract volunteers from the community. Enrolment is down in all volunteer services on the campus this year, and TAK is feeling the effects of this decrease.

Volunteers are strictly non-professional, representing students from all faculties at Queen's. Several psychologists have volunteered to act as back-ups in case a volunteer receives a call which he doesn't feel capable of handling.

TAK gives all volunteers 12 hours of training before they start working on the phones. Role-playing is used in the training sessions to make volunteers aware of their responses to the various types of calls which come in. The importance of confidentiality is stressed at all times; volunteers are not allowed to say that they work for TAK, or discuss any of their calls.

Sorry, wrong number

by Michael Allen

Bell Canada says there is no truth to the claim of many irate students that the company is usually quick to threaten disconnection when bills are not promptly paid.

"Bell Canada does not discriminate against students," said a spokesman for the company.

Queen's students are generally "low-risk" clients. "Rarely do we resort to disconnecting a student's phone because his or her account is badly in arrears," he added.

When long overdue, the firm does threaten to disconnect. But, depending upon how promptly the student has paid his bill in the past, they wait until after the day that disconnection is threatened, and try to phone to determine the reason for delayed payment. Generally, it is after this that Bell Canada actually considers carrying out their threat.

"Even though we do a lot of collection work at the end of the school year, we have found that there is little risk that the payment will be completely lost." To ensure that accounts will be paid, the company requests the student's home address when installing a phone.

"Every year, several students get stuck paying a large telephone bill regardless of who made the long distance calls, simply because the phone is in their name . . . and unfortunately that person is legally responsible for the charges," said the spokesman.

Off to Ottawa

by Janet Brick

The success of Tricolour buses last term has led to expansion of the service. A bus will now run to Ottawa every second week-end, beginning next weekend. This supplements the Toronto and Montreal runs.

The $2500 profit made last term and the good response to the trial run at Christmas provided incentive to add the extra bus, according to John Koopman. The profit will be used to offset the operating expenses incurred in the new run.

Next fall may see further expansion, possibly to Peterborough on a monthly basis, and perhaps a reduction in fares, should the service enjoy continued success.

POSITIONS AS WARDENS, DONS AND SENIOR RESIDENTS

Positions as Wardens, Dons and Senior Residents are available to persons who are interested in helping to create the best possible educational living environments in the Men's, Women's and Co-Educational Residences.

On behalf of the residences boards, the Dean of Women and the Director of Residences would be happy to receive enquiries from both single and married senior students and members of staff who believe they could make such a contribution to the residences as an integral part of the University community. Persons appointed to these positions will be provided with accommodation in the residences.

Wardens, Dons and Senior Residents will be expected to share their interests and the benefits of their experience, to contribute to the intellectual and cultural life of the residences, and to help new students familiarize themselves with the facilities and resources of the campus. In addition to regular dons, the Women's Residences place two dons in a bilingual-bicultural project and would therefore like to have applications from bilingual persons. There may also be openings for dons with expertise in German language/culture.

Initial enquiries should be directed promptly to the Office of the Dean of Women, Victoria Hall (547-6109).

Closing date for applications is Wednesday, February 28, 1979.

An atmosphere fit even for Shakespeare

by Colin Brown

There's an old grey building which sits on the lakefront just west of the Queen's campus. It has served as a military storage depot and has even housed a small brewery in its day. Nobody remembers how the beer tasted from Brewery Lane; the small enterprise folded long ago and Kingston residents have always had plenty of brands to choose from.

The old place still retains its flavour, though. The Thousand Islands Radio Club members bring their wives in every Saturday morning for some hard-fought bingo games before it's time to pick up the kids at the rink. The Potter's Guild churns out a weekly quota and the place always seems noisy; if it's not the low rumble of the morning work-out in the ballet school upstairs, it's the barking of the canine trainees of the kennel club down in the basement.

In the midst of this sits a small troop of actors known as Theatre 5. Five professional actors, one musician, some technicians lay claim to an office upstairs and a small theatre on the ground floor, with an adjoining prop storage area which doubles as their dressing room.

They opened their production of a Shakespeare anthology entitled "What You Will" on Tuesday night, playing the first act without costumes because they had been stuck on board a bus, in a snowdrift, somewhere outside Stratford earlier that day. There were a few blown lines and missed cues which customarily accompany the opening night jitters, but the company carried them off without a hitch and there was much reason for them to celebrate after the show.

During last night's festivities there was time to reflect on the nature of the people that make up Theatre 5.

As part of a film crew which had been following them through their daily routines for the past few weeks, one finds it difficult to think of such vital and easy-going people as "professionals"; for that word carries some cold, harsh connotations in many of the arts and especially in theatre. Perhaps the reason Valerie and Gord Robertson, John Taylor, Michael Rhoades, David Archibald and newcomer Maggie Nagle are such a closely knit yet tremendously outgoing group is the nature of their professionalism. They can weave their way through a myriad of Shakespearean scenes twice a day, be rehearsing a future production at the same time and still pay the bills knowing that they are making a full time career out of what they enjoy doing more than anything else.

Drop down to the Brewery Lane Theatre one night and catch the show. Not only will you be in for some fine entertainment in a unique atmosphere, you'll be meeting some unique people as well.

A sacrifice for the greater good

The Editor,

It seems to be a popular trend these days to condemn any and all forms of censorship as being contrary to our individual rights. In particular a recent article, contained in the Queen's Journal, stated that censorship has no place in our society, not even when it deals with such a distasteful and exploitive topic as pedophilia.

Well I beg to differ, and I feel reasonably confident that most enlightened people would do likewise.

Censorship of a political nature can be demoralizing and intellectually stifling not to mention inconsistent with the basic principles of democracy. However, most of what is legally defined as "obscene material" is not of a direct political nature.

Canada's obscenity law deals with the placement of restrictions on forms of communication that tend to corrupt morals or "outrage the moral sense of the ordinary citizen". It is certainly not likely to be a threat to either individual or democratic rights.

The right of Canadians to freedom of expression is dependent upon the belief that people are both rational and responsible in their actions. Surely it would not be responsible to encourage or even allow morally corruptive material to exploit the baser parts of "human nature". Society's standards will not be destroyed by any particularly obscene work but there is no doubt that the cumulative effect of obscenity over a period of years leads to subtle changes in moral attitudes.

Interestingly enough Canada is forever being classified as a Christian country. But I wonder if this is so, how is it that our attitude towards our neighbour, let alone our God, are so self-indulgent. Are we really so self-centered that we cannot look beyond our "rights" in order to protect that which is good in our community? Could it not be that there are times when the individual must make certain sacrifices for a "greater good"?

How ironic it is that some people must blame our Christian Church leaders for "forcing their morality on the public" when they speak out against our culture's laissez-faire practices. They, as part of "the body of Christ" are being true to their faith when they try to preserve the public from that which is degrading. C.S. Lewis articulates well the need for ensuring that people act responsibly in maintaining the "good". "When a man is getting better he understands more and more clearly the evil that is still left in him. When a man is getting worse he understands his own badness less and less. A moderately bad man knows he is not very good, a thoroughly bad man thinks he is all right. Good people know about both good and evil. Bad people do not know about either."

It really does matter about the way in which we think and respond to such issues as the censorship of obscenities. We share in the responsibility for the direction society takes just as much when we remain quiet as when we raise our voices. If we truly think that we'll be better persons for having seen, read or heard about obscene behaviour then our silence will represent an affirmation of the vocal liberals who promote egocentric values at the expense of society.

History in the remaking

by Gil Gross

March 15, 1917 - A beleaguered Czar Nicholas II abdicates his throne, following a brief general strike, mutiny in several army units and mounting anarchy in the streets of St. Petersburg. The violence has left over 1,000 casualties.

The Czar's sudden and unexpected demise is followed by eight months of uncertainty, during which the political scene is dominated by a relative moderate named Kerensky. In the wings, meanwhile, there waits a man who has been living in exile in Switzerland, directing the insurrection. He is driven by a dream of leading the takeover of his homeland by a dictatorship of the proletariat, and he claims a broad base of support among the disgruntled masses. His name is Vladimir Ilyich Lenin.

In April, Lenin triumphantly arrives in St. Petersburg. He is greeted by a cheering throng. Seven months later, Lenin and his Bolsheviks are solidly in power; Kerensky has fled. The army becomes divided, and for four years civil war smolders. The rest, as they say, is history.

It is now January 19, 1979. The Shah of Iran, King of Kings, ruler of Iran for the past 37 years, has left his country, probably forever. His departure follows months of paralyzing strikes, huge demonstrations, and large outbreaks of violence directed against his rule. The government has been left in the hands of Shahpour Bakhtiar, who faces the unlikely task of rebuilding the country without the aid of public support.

Waiting in the wings is an elderly religious leader head-quartered in Paris, where he lives in exile. His dream is to create in his homeland an Islamic Republic, based on the ancient laws of the Koran. The fall of the Shah has been largely due to his efforts. Through an extensive and well-oiled underground organization, he has managed to maintain mass hysteria. His name is Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini.

Iran now stands at a crossroads. Bakhtiar may succeed in his drive for moderation, but history suggests otherwise. When Kerensky came to power in 1917, his effort was doomed from the outset, for by then the revolutionary movement had snowballed to the point where only radical change could halt the uncontrolled tide of anarchy. Furthermore, Kerensky failed on several practical points as well - the main one being his refusal to put an end to the disastrous war with Germany.

Similarly, Shahpour Bakhtiar has promised reforms, but he is still regarded as an instrument of the Shah in that he is not prepared to let Iran slide back into the Middle Ages. He hasn't taken into account the bitter backlash amongst the populace against all things American or Western.

If Bakhtiar fails, and Ayatollah Khomeini establishes the fanatically conservative Islamic Republic which he has advocated so strongly, it will be for one reason only: the psychology of a half-crazed mob is one that cannot be dealt with rationally. It must be kept on a steady diet of slogans and hatred, the masses must constantly be reminded of the repression they have suffered and they must be promised control over their future. It is to the individual who provides this flow of rhetoric that the mob will invariably turn, no matter how unreasonable and untruthful the promises may be. It worked for Lenin in 1917. The odds are that it will work for Ayatollah Khomeini as well.

The petty politics of namedropping

The Editor,

You student politicians never cease to amaze me! Don't you have something better to do than bring forward a motion, let alone pass it, to change the name of the Pub. If not, then I fear you too are "unimaginative, seldom used and generally dull." Not only is the idea itself inane but the rationale behind it is unbelievable. Why not implement a policy that whenever the student body shows a disinterest in important issues, you institute a rename the Pub contest. A great way to solve the problem! Why don't you just have another football game. Why stop at the Pub - why not rename the university something catchy. That way we'll have a unique and interesting name and the other universities will fall a step behind. Think of the T-shirt sales!

The people who constantly use the term Underground are the suppliers. The management has worked hard to identifying the Pub as such to the suppliers and with two full-time pubs and at least two part-time pubs, such an identification for the everyday running of the Pub is indispensable. To you who don't do the running of the Pub, it may seem quite easy to change names and continue on from there. But as a person who has worked in the Pub for the last 2 years, I can see it doing nothing but creating havoc. It is only of late that the suppliers have consistently sent their materials to the correct location and with a name change, confusion would again be ever present.

From the outside it may seem that the Pub runs itself. Let me assure you that it does not. There are 3 of us who spend on the average, 25-35 hours a week to ensure that things run as smoothly as possible. We have enough problems to worry about without the possibility of a name change screwing up all our deliveries. If you could give me valid reasons why we need a more catchy, unique and interesting name for the Pub, perhaps I'd listen. In fact, you have given me none. Furthermore, it will be a select committee of the Outer Council that will determine such a name. Heaven knows what they think will be unique and interesting. Before you screw things up, talk to the people whom it will affect - or don't you think it matters.

Zena and the art of lifestyle journalism

by Drew Fagan

To anyone with serious aspirations of becoming a journalist, at sometime, often early in the morning after another seemingly endless charade of jigs-sawing together a newspaper, conversation turns to the perceived objective of this profession. Is it to print the news, as factually oriented as possible, or is it primarily to entertain the reader?

Certainly, a newspaper must inform the reader and be a responsible provider of the news of the day, so that readers can make their own value judgements in analyzing important events. A newspaper must also be printed in such a way as to make it enjoyable to read, and this leads to the printing of "human interest stories" which are of little news value but do tend to increase circulation.

The "soft" news approach, as illustrated by the transformation of the Toronto Star and the Ottawa Journal. A front page headline concerning the quality of Ottawa's martinis, as was printed recently, is not the earth-shattering news that is traditionally printed on the front page. Personally, I don't like this approach to newspaper production. While it does seem to increase circulation, and, after all, a publishing company is essentially an enterprise in the business of making profits, it also tends to cheapen the real news.

Then stands the Globe and Mail; the nation's newspaper. Relatively anonymous yet unquestionably trusted. This is a paper that refuses to alter its format in order to reach those thousands of potential readers who would become subscribers if only they printed a daily revue of last night's happenings at Studio 54. I have just one complaint about this most professional of news journals. Why must they continually assault me with the details of the social lives of Canada's privileged elite? Who is Zena Cherry and why doesn't she work for the Toronto Sun? Her picture, as far as anyone knows, has never appeared for the public to see. Is she an aging maiden who spent her younger years mastering the waltz, so as to be acceptable in proper social circles, and now lives vicariously through these illustrious and successful entrepreneurs on whom she is paid to report? Or is she a young journalist, dedicated to her craft, without time for family or friends, viewing her columns as integral articles mirroring the real heartbeat of the nation?

Ms. Zena tends to write her columns about these illustrious social carnivals in such a manner as to mention every man of importance who attended, what he does to warrant circulating in such company and why he attended. Then, after she has completed this task, she mentions the fact that each came accompanied by his wife. It leads the reader to the belief that Zena is the only woman at the party; as she discusses stock holdings over cigars and brandy, the wives talk about their children and recipes for chicken Kiev in the parlour.

Otherwise, she writes as so: Mr. E. Roderick Stapleton, President of the Argo Conglomerate attended, accompanied by his wife, clad in a shimmering yellow evening gown. He's important, she looks great; the perfect couple, success radiating from their rosy red cheeks.

COMING TO THE PUB IS A TRULY EDUCATIONAL EXPERIENCE

Let them eat rice

The Editor,

I am writing in regard to your Feature on our Foster children which appeared in the January 12 edition of the Queen's Journal. The article invoked my indignation when I realized that Queen's students were being given the usual "sob-story" technique.

The $800.00 to be raised for the children is being made available because of Saga Foods generous offer to pass on all food-cost savings from the rice meal being served on Tuesday, January 16. I question whether the $800.00 is actually being taken out of their profits or instead, as seems more probable, from the fees that students in residence have paid The Alma Mater Society executive insulted our intelligence by using such a devious method to get $800.00 from us. This is just "forced" charity. If they expect us to generously "donate" $800.00 to our foster children in addition to the $952.00 it costs to feed the four each year, then they shouldn't quibble about tuition increases.

Your feature article gave statistics on the plight of the families. For example, the income of Carmen's family is $57.00, of which $46.00 is spent on food. The shock-value of this fades when it is remembered that this money has to feed eight people! Magaly lives in Bolivia, where the Somehow, I think Ms. Zena was brought up in a home where her major responsibility was taking out the dinner plates.

Come on Globe and Mail, I don't care what E.P. Taylor does on a Saturday night in the Bahamas and neither do most readers. Use the space to tell us about the cultural genocide of the Australian pygmy, or better yet, use the space for a nice advertisement.

annual income is $150.00. Her mother earns $30.00 a month or, in other words, $360.00 annually. With an income of twice the national average, they can no longer be regarded as "needy".

I submit that we should not be concerned with the Third World poor until we help our own. In 1976, 40% of Canadian families received only 11.5% of the National Income.

Who made the decision to support these four foster children? Why? Is Maglay's family really "poor"? Why are Queen's students being shoved into "forced charity"? Why aren't we helping poor families in Canada instead? We should not put up with a situation where so many questions remain unanswered. I call upon the AMS to hold itself answerable to these charges and to provide us with an adequate explanation.

Still a-changin

The Editor,

When will the writers, particularly Mr. Stratton of the Journal, begin to give Bob Dylan the credit he justly deserves. I am referring to the Journal of January 12 in which Mr. Stratton comments that maybe "Disco Bob" can go back to making real music. First of all, Dylan's music can't be disco because he has more than four different lines in each song. Secondly, the songs from Street Legal are as "real" as any Dylan has ever written. The 1960's are over, so Dylan need not crusade any longer. "The times they are a-changin'" and Dylan's music is changing brilliantly right along with those times.

Mike Kirby

P.S. Just for the record, Dylan's movie was entitled "Renaldo and Clara", not "Renaldo and Clarissa" as reported by the Journal.

Underground undone

by Terrence Reynolds

The entire campus is in an uproar because of the brilliant plan to arrive at a new name for the Pub. Why keep all of the people who deal with the Underground enlightened? I say, keep the breweries, liquor companies and the rest of the riff-raff in suspense as to what the pub is. Perhaps a motion should be passed changing the name once a year, along with the staff and management. Maybe the locations could be varied yearly as well. Why not really fool people, putting the pub back in the old House of Commons? That way, we could trick all unsuspecting snooker players into buying a beer. Also, there would be plenty of table room and six nifty beer holders at each table. Of course, these are just perceptive ideas for the future and it would be a fine idea to get student fees to pay for the alcoholic fringe benefits to students. It could be called Buzz-It.

Another suggestion involves the boring names of some of the waiters. Outer Council is debating the more bland names, such as "Mike" and "Jim", hoping to replace them with Siddhartha and Cornelius. The ugly blue shirts will be replaced with Scottish kilts and brogues, disco dancing will disappear and the twang of the electric guitar will be changed to the bellows of the bagpipes. Look forward to the sounds of "McTavish and the Bag Blowers" or "Lady MacBeth and the Back Stabbers".

Other necessary adjustments will be Scottish pub hours, no tipping, (Scottish tradition) and definitely no St. Patrick's Day celebrations. In naming pub sections we could have the north wall, the west wall and Hadrian's Wall.

This brings us to the vastly important appellation of the new improved Pub 2. Here is a list of possible names.

Sentiments run high

Too much too little too late

The Editor,

This is a letter to apologize to the staff and friends of Bitter Grounds on behalf of myself and many other Queen's students.

Posters around campus, advertising this or that folk artist appearing at Bitter Grounds on the week-end, and everytime I say to myself, "Gee, I've heard he (or she) is really good, I think I'll go over sometime." But I never did, I kept putting it off and now I can't put it off any longer as Bitter Grounds has closed.

I read about the closing of Bitter Grounds last week, and with a guilty conscience I dragged myself away from my room and up to Clark Hall on Saturday night to see Stan Rogers. When I got there I was quite surprised, as the place was packed

"How could they be running a deficit?" I wondered, until I heard one of the girls say "So where were all these people when we needed them?" Either there are a lot of closet Stan Rogers fans at Queen's (which could be possible, based on the amount of singing) or I wasn't the only person there who felt guilty about the closing.

I'm glad I went however, as the music was good, the company friendly, and the whole place had a great atmosphere, albeit sad, and when Bitter Grounds opens up again in the fall, as I hope it will, I'll take my good memories of last Saturday night back with me to be refreshed as often as possible. I'm sorry I didn't do it sooner.

We are guilty of many errors and many faults but our worst crime is abandoning the children, neglecting the fountain of life. Many things we need can wait. The child cannot. Right now is the time his bones are being formed, his blood is being made — and his senses are being developed. To him we cannot answer "Tomorrow." His name is "Today."

(Gabriela Mistral — Chilean Nobel prize-winning poet).

This quotation begins a United Nations Pamphlet entitled "1979-International Year of the Child". It states clearly and beautifully why children are of special concern, and why, at a time when the world suffers from so many ills, the United Nations should choose the problem of children for special focus.

The Baha'i Faith founded in 1863 by Baha'u'llah fully supports the United Nations in its designating 1979 as International Year of the development crippled because of malnutrition and inadequate shelter. Lack of proper adult guidance and care also hinders their development.

International Year of the Child

It is hoped that concentrated effort exerted during this special year of 1979 will help alleviate the unnecessary suffering of children and be of assistance in their moral and intellectual development.

Our children are of special importance. They are the adults of the future. Therefore, as a Baha'i, I congratulate the United Nations for appointing 1979 as the "International Year of the Child."

The following is a list of conditions which the United Nations declared as the inborn right of any child. To each we add a Baha'i perspective.

1) The right to affection, love and understanding.

Child, we, as Baha'is, believe that by focusing on children in particular, a subject is being dealt with that is of special interest to the vast majority of people.

In an age of selfishness and pessimism children are still something that can tug at the conscience of some of the most cynical among us. This is because children represent an innocence, and a strong dependence on others, that demands from the adult world, a major responsibility for their well-being.

Baha'is believe we are born into this world in a state of purity through innocence and that the purpose of life is to acquire a purity through strength. However, because of what the adult world has done, and is doing, many children are either seriously hindered from attaining a state of purity through strength or never even have a chance to do so.

Many die too young. Many have their spiritual and physical

4) The right to full opportunity for play and recreation.

In this world there are many ways of deriving pleasure. A balanced, healthy person needs a number of hours of recreation daily. We are told:

"The standard inculcated by Baha'u'llah seeks, under no circumstances, to deny anyone the legitimate right and privilege to derive the fullest advantage and benefit from the manifold joys, beauties and pleasures with which the world has been so plentifully enriched by an All-Loving Creator."

5) The right to a name and nationality.

It is fitting that this should be the first right of the child. The child, indeed all humanity, needs affection, love and understanding in order to survive. Says Abdu'l-Baha, son of the founder of the Baha'i Faith:

"Love is the most great law that ruleth this mighty and heavenly cycle, the unique power that bindeth together the diverse elements of this material world, the supreme magnetic force that directs the movements of the spheres in the celestial realms."

At the basic spiritual needs of the child are met with unconditional love, we must turn to the physical needs.

2) The right to adequate nutrition and medical care.

Basic physical needs of food and health are addressed in the Baha'i writings.

"The enormous energy dissipated and wasted on war, whether economic or political, will be consecrated to such ends as...to the extermination of disease, to the extension of scientific research, to the raising of the standard of physical health, to the prolongation of human life, and to the furtherance of any other agency that can stimulate the intellectual, the moral, and spiritual life of the entire human race."

3) The right to free education.

A major principle of the Baha'i Faith is that there must be provision made for free universal education. In the past, education was a privilege of the wealthy, the rulers, the religious elite, not of the poor and numberless masses.

Universal education would provide the greatest contribution to the establishment of equality and the abolition of prejudice. Baha'u'llah says:

"We prescribe unto all men that which will lead...to the advancement of the world of being and the uplift of souls. To this end, the greatest means is education of the child."

A child must know s/he belongs with a family, the most basic unit of society. His/her name connects the child with the family yet gives an individual identity.

Similarly, nationality offers a place of belonging in the world. Baha'u'llah teaches that the diversity of the world community and the beauty of different cultures gives magnificent colour to our globe.

6) The right to special care if handicapped.

In many ways the handicapped must depend on others for help. The healthy child must completely rely on adults — how much more do handicapped children depend on others.

Baha'is are told that the needs of the minority must be accommodated first to facilitate multifaceted unity. Similarly, the needs of special children must be met with great care.

7) The right to be among the first to receive relief in times of disaster.

This world is beset with crisis and disaster. Ultimately the children suffer the most, yet the children are the future. In a family situation each member has certain rights and obligations.

The child has an obligation to respect her/his parents and family, and the adults have an obligation to love and protect the child.

Likewise, on a global scale the child has the right, by virtue of being a child, to protection especially in times of crisis.

8) The right to learn to be a useful member of society and to develop individual abilities.

In order for a child to be of maximum benefit to society, he or she must acquire, at least, a basic education. As was mentioned, Baha'u'llah states that all people must be educated.

He also gives us the obligation of using our God-given talents and capacities to the fullest of our ability. He says:

The best of men are they that earn a livelihood by their calling and spend upon themselves and upon their kindred for the love of God.

Using sterner language Baha'u'llah states:

The basest of men are they that yield no fruit on earth. Such men are verily counted as among the dead, nay better are the dead in the sight of God than those idle and worthless souls.

Along with obtaining a basic education, the best place for a child to acquire the inner strength and discipline needed for developing his or her talents is within the stronghold of a secure and united family.

To Baha'is, the family is the most basic and important institution of society. It provides the ideal situation for raising children and therefore strong families mean strong societies.

9) The right to be brought up in a spirit of peace and universal brotherhood: A spirit of peace allows children to develop to their fullest capacity. For such peace to exist on a world scale we must come to regard all people as our brothers and sisters. Baha'u'llah says:

It is not for him to pride himself who loveth his own country, but rather for him who loveth the whole world. The earth is but one country, and mankind its citizens.

A basic principle of the Baha'i Faith is the oneness of man. All people are the same in the sight of God. All are members of the same human family.

If this is so, we must have universal peace, for why should we fight against our brothers? If war has had any usefulness in the past, it does not have any now. It has become too destructive and thus, for the sake of human preservation, must be obliterated.

Baha'u'llah, Himself, wrote to such monarchs as Queen Victoria, Kaiser Wilhelm I, Napoleon III, and to Alexander II the Czar of Russia. He admonished them to take the road of peace. Instead, the world was launched towards the first world war and the decades of conflict which have followed it.

Baha'is believe the original intent of all religion has been to unify man, and that religious conflict has resulted from manmade impurities. Therefore, Baha'is believe Baha'u'llah was sent to re-establish religious purity and bring humanity together under the banner of spirituality.

10) The right to enjoy these rights, regardless of race, colour, sex, religion, national or social origin.

Baha'is agree with this right because, as previously mentioned, they believe in the oneness of mankind. In fact, our racial and cultural differences are a boon to us. They give variety and make us dynamic.

Humanity can be compared to a flower garden. If the flowers in the garden are all the same kind and colour, things get monotonous, whereas variety gives the garden beauty. Therefore, Baha'is promote the idea of "unity in diversity."

With regards to equality of sex Baha'u'llah advocated such equality 130 years ago in the middle eastern country of Iran. The analogy of two wings of a bird is used here. One wing represents the female side of humanity, the other the male.

Not until both wings are equal in strength can the bird of humanity fly. Thus, both male and female have much to gain from the advancement of women.

With regards to religion, all the great religions have come from one source; that is, they have all come from one God. Since they all are a part of the religion of God, why should members belonging to anyone of them suffer persecution?

With regards to national or social origin, such factors as these do not measure a man's superiority. Spirituality is the only criteria for deciding a man's worth as a human being.

The UN Declaration of the Rights of the child apply to all humanity. Guaranteeing the rights of the child guarantees a brighter world future.

It requires a great deal of reorientation of priorities. For our children and for all of us mankind needs to change its vision from economic and political expediency to loving provision for one another. Love, not economics, is man's primary concern.

Many things we need to wait. The child cannot. Right now is the time his bones are being formed, his blood is being made — and his senses are being developed. To him we cannot answer "Tomorrow". His name is "Today".

The United Nations has declared the third Sunday in January as World Religions Day. The Baha'is of Kingston are commemorating World Religions Day with a seminar to which the public is invited, featuring Dr. Hossain Danesh, speaking on "The Violence-Free Society: A Fight for Every Child". This event will be held in The Delahaye Room on the third floor of the Kingston Public Library, from 2:00 to 4:00pm on Sunday January 21. All are welcome to attend.

Humber River Boys: bluegrass at Grand

by Colin Hunt

Whenever the Grand Theatre stages a production one can usually expect good entertainment. Last Tuesday night was no exception in its presentation of the Humber River Valley Boys sponsored by the Cheeky Groundhog Corporation. From guest set to finale it was an evening of solid bluegrass.

The Humber River Valley Boys are composed of Larry Smith on guitar, John Glover on mandolin, Eric Jackson on three-quarter bass, Brian Pickell on banjo and Don Thurston playing fiddle. Instrumentally the band is well-balanced, though Smith's guitar was occasionally inaudible from higher pitched chords from the banjo and mandolin. The selection of tunes was delightfully eclectic, ranging from the "Sugarfoot Rag" by Red Foley to Lightfoot's old composition "Did She Mention My Name". Tempo also varied considerably from piece to piece from the raucous, floor-stompin' "Dusty Miller Hornpipe" to the almost sedate pace of "Shackles and Chains". The Boys wound up the first set with "Little Maggie".

The second set featured more in the way of western swing tunes such as "Detour" and "Dear old Dixie". If John Glover's off-colour jokes weren't enough to liven the atmosphere, the comedy act of the night was supplied by Glover, Smith and Jackson playing "Honeysuckle Rose" all at once on a single guitar. The best piece of the evening was the finale, a fine rendition of "The Orange Blossom Special" featuring alternating solos by the various band members.

There were a few problems with the performance. Some of the audience was leaving before the finale, and, in retrospect, it seems that the show peaked about fifteen minutes before the end. Brian Pickell remarked afterwards that this can easily happen in a concert where the performers are always tempted by the large audience and excellent acoustics to play everything in their repertoire. Some feedback came through the sound system during the show, but this was inevitable without a soundman

The guest set was performed by Lizard Tom Case and his newly formed band, the Pleasures of the Flesh. They were very well received by the audience particularly for Georgette Craigney's energetic vocals. Despite sound system difficulties they managed good renditions of the Lizard's Country compositions and were called back for an encore

Tuesday's performance was one in a series of Bluegrass bands this year at the Grand, the next being The Dixie Flyers on February 14. It may not be the Grand Ole Opry, but the Grand does supply some of the best Bluegrass you can hear anywhere this side of the Mason-Dixon line

The most famous Dream endures

Out of the eclectic melting pot of Elizabethan drama emerges a magical comedy that defies time and attitudes. It delightfully celebrates the curiosity of Renaissance England into the universal essence of human affairs.

The play is A Midsummer Night's Dream. And it opens a week-long run at Convocation Hall tonight.

Time itself has declared Dream to be Shakespeare's most favoured comedy. Four centuries have only enhanced its charm. On questions of love - imagination and illusion - reality, Dream's sweeping universal approach is precisely what makes any particular production of the play smack of refreshing originality. Bud Burkom, director for the Queen's Drama Department's production of Dream, explains the distinguishing features of his interpretation:

For us the Dream's celebrated magic lies not in elaborate renditions of fantastical fairylands, but rather within the human psyche.

"... we've tried to strip away the cotton candy aura in which turn-of-the-century producers (emulated twice at Stratford in the past decade) wrapped the play."

Shakespeare unifies four distinct plots into a single story that flows with effortless speed and fluidity. Locale plays a highly symbolic role in the action. The court stands for order, discipline and reason, while the forest incites disorder, licence and madness (love). The impish fairies supply the potion that drives the young courtiers into the otherworldly frenzy of love, a condition where reason holds no dominion over passion. And in the middle of all the opposing forces is Bottom, and his motley crew of "rude mechanicals," who ironically rejoin the disparate themes of the play by presenting their warped version of Pyramus and Thisby. Their bungling interlude unifies Dream's ideas, while providing some sparkling comedy.

The unruly festive spirit of Dream finds its source in the Rite of May celebrations common in Renaissance England. The youngsters of the town went out into the countryside, where they would spend an entire night in feverish revelry, and crowning one amongst them as "The Lord of Misrule." Come morning, they triumphantly carried the "lord" back to town, where he was symbolically deposed, and order restored. The character of Bottom hearkens back to this "lord" figure, and the plot of Dream reflects the same basic progression: Lovers flee from court, "go mad" in the forest, and are finally restored to "sanity" in the end.

Ultimately (and as always in Shakespeare's A Midsummer Night's Dream) offers no firm conclusions about the nature of love. Only questions remain, questions that we rarely ask ourselves... and all this woven around a journey into a world of magic, where fact and fantasy fuse in the mind and ignite the soul.

A Midsummer Night's Dream runs Jan. 19 (tonight), 20, 24, 25, 26 and 27 at Convocation Hall in the Theology Building (or Old Arts Building). All shows at 8:30pm. Tickets: $3.00 non-students; $2.00 students and seniors on weekends; $1.00 on weeknights. Special matinee at 2:00pm on Sun Jan. 21. Children under 15 charged 50 cents if with an adult. For tickets/reservations/info, call the Queen's Drama Dept. at 547-6291.

Bickert bounces back with bebop 'n ballads

by Paul Adams

On Sunday, January 21st, at 8.30pm in Dunning Hall, Arts Festival '79 presents a jazz concert featuring guitarist Ed Bickert, pianist Wray Downes and bassist Dave Young. Last year's sold out Bickert concert clearly demonstrated the mastery of Toronto guitarist Bickert, who appeared equally adept at subtly styled ballads or straight ahead bebop tunes.

His Amherst Island

Currently on display at the Agnes Etherington Art Centre until February 25 is a collection of 85 watercolours and drawings by Daniel Fowler (1810-1894) of Amherst Island.

Fowler's innovative style is especially evident in his landscapes of Amherst Island. Noteworthy is his painting "Hollyhocks" (1876) which won a bronze medal at the Philadelphia International Exhibition, the first international award given a Canadian artist. A special tour of the exhibition will be conducted by Frances K. Smith, Sunday January 21, at 3:00 p.m.

Bickert has acquired quite a reputation as a guitarist, mostly through his association with jazz greats such as Paul Desmond, Red Norvo, Moe Koffman and many others, on their Toronto club dates. In fact, it was Bickert's presence, on the recommendation of another guitar master, Jim Hall, that swayed Paul Desmond (ex-Brubeck) out of retirement, to play his first club date on his own ever. The Bickert-Desmond association was immortalized on several albums. The soft spoken, taciturn nature of the man himself is continually reflected in his music as he selects from a variety of standards, blues and ellingtonia.

Last year's concert showcased Bickert with his regular working trio, but this year the lineup is slightly different. Wray Downes is a Canadian jazz pianist, whose story dates back to the fifties when he backed such legends as Lester Young, Coleman Hawkins and Sidney Bechet. Dave Young is a bass player whose last visit to Queen's was backing Oscar Peterson. Downes and Young regularly play as a duo on the Toronto jazz circuit and they occasionally perform with Ed Bickert.

The synergy of these three excellent jazz musicians promises to be an exciting and rewarding experience. Tickets are two dollars and many people were turned away at the door.

NFT screens Canadian mosaic

by Mark Henderson

Aguirre, The Wrath of God is an incredible movie by German film maker Werner Herzog. Since its release in 1977, it has blown the roof from many a theatre and will likely do the same at the National Film Theatre this evening.

Set in the Peruvian Amazon of 400 years ago, it details the strange journey of a group of Spanish conquistadors to find El Dorado. One man, Aguirre, becomes obsessed with the power of a conqueror, and the film metaphorically probes his actions and demented mind in a tale full of beauty, horror, and surreal atmosphere. The photograph is truly magnificent, but Herzog's direction displays his mastery of cinematic control. The questions of power, colonial force, and man confronting nature are posed in a superbly original fashion, and Claus Kinski's portrayal of Aguirre is a performance that rivals the best in the cinema.

This Saturday and Sunday night, the NFT will present a select offering of Canadian films under the banner, "A Sense of Place". Split into two double bills, the works of four of Canada's most accomplished directors and some great acting talent will be screened. For anyone still afflicted and suffering from the "Canadian films are boring" disease, these four films will quickly provide a cure and shatter some of your old delusions. One (and arguably two) of them represent the work of genius: Gilles Carle's Ange et la Femme and Michael Brault's Entre la Mer et l'Eau Deuce.

Carle's has been making films for almost two decades, and has developed a highly articulate dialectic which expresses his concern for the individual in society. Carle views the family structure as repressive and urban culture as perpetuating alienation. He places a young person (usually a woman) in the context of French-Canadian urban life and follows her attempts to understand and break free from the mass conformity she sees as choking modern society.

In L'Ange et la Femme, the beautiful Carole Laure plays such a woman. The movie took Paris by storm last year and made Laure a recognized actress of major stature. Once Carle's wife, she has starred in most of his recent films and is the perfect embodiment of his personal vision, an intense and ultimately pessimistic attitude towards male-female relations, and the social forces which mould and reinforce them. Carle's cinema is exciting and visually stimulating to a degree rare in any cinema.

The companion feature is Michael Brault's Entre la Mer et l'Eau Deuce. While not as widely seen as his landmark film Les Ordres, it expresses a similar attitude to the Canadian myth (for ideology, if you like) prevalent in our cinema. When the National Film Board refused to produce it, considering the material too sordid, Brault left the Board's confines and found alternative backing. It was his first fiction film and reflected Brault's earlier involvement with "cinema direct" - a method of film making representing an immediate documentary approach to one's material. Entre la Mer et l'Eau Deuce typifies Brault's unique and controversial Quebecois sensibility, exploring the complex opposition of French and English in Canadian society through an intimate drama. A highly moving film of personal expression and commitment.

On Sunday night, Paul Almond's Act of the Heart, starring Genevieve Bujold and Donald Sutherland, tops the double bill. Almond probes into a strange love affair, exploring themes of memory, time, and the human's various psychic states. Very Canadian in nature, it is optimistic as well; a feeling unusual in Canadian cinema.

Act of the Heart forms the second part of a trilogy Almond made between 1968 and 1972. This early work of the two acting leads is magnificent, making quite evident why Bujold and Sutherland have subsequently achieved world stature and critical renown. Almond's emphasis of a basic urban-rural dichotomy and his fascinating use of visual symbols makes for spellbinding cinema.

The second feature of the night is David Acomb's Slipstream, a movie about a cult-music star and his attempts to break free of his image in society. Its visual richness allows for a flavour of the modern rock-music world to emerge, and the soundtrack is tremendous as well.

European cinemagoers, decidedly less trendy in their tastes, have recognized and attended most of the directors and films to be screened this weekend. Brault and Carle especially, are much more popular in Europe than North America, winning many awards at Cannes and elsewhere. The NFT seems to realize their worth and is providing a great chance to recognize this ourselves. All of these films really have something to offer as entertainment, and as important statements to Canadians both as individuals and citizens

Carole Laure in "L'Ange et la Femme" Saturday at NFT

Skaters aim to regain domination

Lee Prowse

You have only one chance this year to applaud and support the effort of the Queen's figure skating team. This Saturday, from 9.30am to 6.00pm at Jock Hartly Arena, the seventh Annual Queen's Invitational Figure Skating Competition will be held featuring teams from Queen's, York, McMaster, U of T, Western and McGill.

Events include: singles, similar pairs, similar dance, mixed dance and interpretive. Within each event are the novice, junior, intermediate and senior categories.

The interpretive event is especially exciting because when the competitors step onto the ice they have no prepared routine in mind. All entrants are put in a closed room where they first hear the music they must interpret through skating. They then move to the ice and listen to the music twice, trying to get the feel of the piece, as they skate. They are sent back to the room and, one by one, the skaters come out. Having heard the music only three times, each individual improvises a unique routine.

Similar pairs is a team of two women skating at the same time. Their movements can either be synchronized or mirrored effects of each other.

The Senior event also promises to be thrilling. Skaters at this level are capable of executing a variety of difficult moves including double axles.

This meet, and the championship at McMaster (Feb. 10), are held under the auspices of the Ontario Women's Intercollegiate Athletic Association but there are some men competing. They are involved in novice men's singles, novice mixed dance and junior mixed dance.

Marks earned at this meet are unofficial but the Queen's skaters going to the Ontario championships will be determined by the performances this Saturday and February 2nd at McMaster. Only one skater per category is allowed at the final competition.

Last year Western won this invitational but Queen's has dominated four out of the six years.

The singles events are first, followed by dance and pairs. Interpretive will be the final event.

Athletes of the Week

As the last half of the sports season gets underway, we find 30 teams representing Queen's in intercollegiate competition. After such a successful fall season, we can only guess at the honours Queen's Athletes will capture over the next 2 1/2 months.

With the many outstanding team performances recorded last weekend, there were also a number of impressive individual efforts, which makes the election of an athlete 'of the week' a difficult one. However, a decision must be made and this week's Athletes of the Week are Jack Raleigh and Marty Feiertag of the Men's Swim Team. Jack placed first in both the 500 and 1000 yard freestyle races and Marty took first place in the 50 and 100 yard freestyle events. Both helped their team defeat Potsdam, the 1978 New York State Champions, 57-56 in a dual meet last weekend.

Mention should also be given to Dave Beatty of the Alpine Ski team and Rick Varsava of the Basketball Gaels. Dave placed second in the first giant slalom competition at Georgian Peaks, right behind a former National Team member. The Basketball Gaels are improving with experience and part of the reason is the strong consistent performance they are receiving from Rick Varsava.

Hockey Gaels hope Varsity sings the blues

by Chris Cuthbert

The Queen's Golden Gaels will be thrown into "the lion's den" tonight when they journey into Varsity Arena to tangle with the front running Toronto Blues.

The usually unenviable task of facing the Blues has been magnified by special circumstances surrounding the game.

The Blues, a perennial power in Canadian intercollegiate hockey, have made the Friday evening match the site of a gala University of Toronto reunion in honour of the coaches who have directed the Varsity hockey club over the years; from Conn Smythe in the 1920's to their present day mentor Tom Watt.

You can bet the Blues will be out to cap the special evening with a strong display and a victory over the Gaels.

As well the Blues are still smarting after their first setback of the 78-79 campaign, a 7-4 loss to cross town rival York.

This year's edition of the Blues possesses a tremendous set of back liners including team captain Rocci Pagnello, ex-Kingston Canadian Brad Tambllyn, Lance Gattoni, Charlie Hughes, Joe Grant and rookie Geoff Baun.

Toronto's core forwards are equally impressive headed by the division's leading scorers Dan D'Alvise and Cary Farelli.

The only area of vulnerability the Blues might have is in goal where Dave Jenner's play has been sporadic.

In spite of Toronto's obvious strength the Gaels chances of an upset should not be overlooked.

Queen's has made a habit of producing their best performances against the Blues including a 6-6 tie at Varsity Arena in early December.

The Gaels lineup will be bolstered for the Toronto clash with Willie Wing, Mike Conway and perhaps Joe South returning from the injury list.

The game can be heard on CFRC 1490 am Friday evening starting at 7:00 p.m.

Rookies lead swim team

by Ken Davies

The Men's Swim Team started off the new year on the right foot by squeaking out a one point victory over Potsdam last weekend. Queen's looked particularly impressive considering the month-long Christmas lay-off and the strong opposition provided by Potsdam, who are favoured to repeat as New York State champions for the third successive year.

The Gaels were led by the stand out individual performances of rookies Marty Feiertag and Jack Raleigh (see 'Athlete of the Week') who both won two races. Raleigh leaned up in the gruelling 1000 and 100 yard freestyle events while Feiertag won both the freestyle sprint races. Captain Tim Dennis triumphed in the 200 IM and Bubbles Lawrynuik on the 200 yd. breast stroke and came second in the IM. Veteran George Bovell and John Lane each picked up a second place finish, in the 100 yd freestyle and 200 backstroke respectively. The foursome of Dennis, Lawrynuik, Lane and Bovell combined for an easy victory in the opening Medley relay and Rick Cockfield contributed to the team victory by taking third in the 50 yard freestyle.

Queen's divers also showed well with Glen Orton and Mark Critchley swapping 2nd and 3rd positions in the 1M. and 3M diving events. However the highest marks awarded to any diver on the day went to Queen's diving coach, Nelson Freidman with his own special rendition of a half-gainer from the pool deck into the pool.

The men's team sees action against McGill and Plattsburg here at Queen's tomorrow at 1:00PM. Queen's coach, Larry Brawley expects some keen competition as many top ranked swimmers will be taking part in the meet. This is the last chance to see the Queen's team competing this year here in Kingston and the team is hoping to receive a lot of support.

WIC FLICKS

by Cathy Lawrence

Congratulations to Charlene Boyd, who won last term's WIC Skatathon. Charlene completed 207 laps, followed by Wendy Cook with 183 laps and Dianne Pennington with 180 laps. Rehab was the winning faculty. The WIC Swimathon was won by PHE with 1298 laps. Individual winners were Kathy Geiger, Janet Longmore and Cathy Harrington respectively. Thank you to all those who participated.

This week in WIC ice hockey action - Meds defaulted to the powerful King Johnson lineup. Law is out to defend her championship and triumphed over the Graduates Tuesday night. Rehab and the combined PHE '80 and '81 team were tied at 2-2, while Engineering and H.B. Incorporated scored one apiece. The star performance was displayed by Doogie at her birthday best

BEWS NEWS

by Mark Pentland

Second term should be an interesting one in the Men's Intramural pennant races. The John Paul Trophy competition is extremely close, with six units in contention for the top spot. In the Bews Trophy race, PHE has a firm hold of first place at this time, but that lead may dwindle and indeed be diminished if strong efforts are put forth by Commerce 79, Civil, and Mechanical.

One sport has already been completed. Defending champs PHE defeated Commerce 79 in a closely fought battle in European Team Handball. The game was forced into a five minute overtime period and, in the end, PHE won by a lone marker.

Hockey and Broomball continue their schedules from first term. However, numerous other sports began last week. Ball Hockey, Water Polo, Bowling, Curling and Basketball round out the team sports. Squash, Handball, Racquetball, Free Throw and Table Tennis begin their draws this week. Participants in these individual sports are reminded to check the draw and the game deadlines in order to avoid costly defaults.

If you are interested in playing any of the team sports and you need information about those sports, you are advised to get in touch with the Athletic Stick of your unit. Information forms and activity lists may be obtained from the Recreation/Intramural Office in the P.E.C.

Track men start fast

by Les McGregor

The Men's track and field team opened their indoor season at Cornell University with many fine performances against some very competitive American Universities. The performances of both rookies and veterans promises well for the coming season

Heading Queen's performers at the meet were veterans Bob Graham and Charlie Hitchon, winning their respective races in the 880 and 1000 yard events. Jeff Bellinger, running with a painful injury, set a new Queen's three mile record. Vic Gooding, using his speed to good advantage, outkicked his opponents to seize second place in the 600 yard race. Jeff Storwick, coming off an injury which prevented his competing in the outdoor OUA, showed that he will shortly reach his peak condition.

Rookies Dave Blazer and Charlie Best indicated their future potential by running well in the 60 yard dash and the 60 yard high hurdles.

The pole vaulters D. Kuhn and Ted Jackson performed well despite the lack of proper training facilities at Queen's.

In the distance events, good early season form was shown by Sandy MacAuley and Ian Gale. Other promising performers were Dan Rochreau, Ian Rae, Dale Friserson, Jim Morrison and Peter Seche.

A good team effort in the distance medley (Rochleau, Verhoevan,

Gals' track in fine form

The Women's Track and Field Team demonstrated their strong potential this past Saturday in their second meet of the indoor season at the Cornell Invitational Track Meet in New York State.

Ann Webster, a new addition to the distance squad this year, was a double winner in the 1500 metres with a record performance time of 5:39.9 and the 800m. in 2:21.09.

Sandra Cooper was a triple winner breaking 3 Cornell records, two of which were also Queen's records. Cooper won the high jump with a leap of 1.65m., the long jump with a jump of 5.11 m., and the 60 yd. hurdles in a time of 8.7 sec.

Barb Bishop, also a new addition to the team, demonstrated her running ability with a win in the 440 yds.

Louise Garipy came home with records in the hurdles, while Liz McGowan was 3rd. in the 60 yd dash and second in the long jump. Karen Rahn won the shot put.

There was great depth in the scoring of the events by the Queen's Women's Track Team. The future warrants a strong season.

CC's World of Sport

by Joe Coneybeare and Lenny Comtois

The site - the Orange Bowl in Miami; the teams: the Dallas Cowboys and Pittsburgh Steelers; the event: Super Bowl XIII. This Sunday, two of the finest and most well-balanced teams in history will meet and only one will emerge as undisputed world champion.

The last time these two teams met in post-season play, Super Bowl X in Miami, will always be remembered. Unlike other Super Bowl efforts, which have had more fanfare off the field than on, that year's edition featured enough excitement to overshadow the pre-game show. Dallas was the only "wildcard" team ever to advance so far, and Pittsburgh required a strong effort to nip them 21-17. This year's confrontation could foreseeably be even better.

Dallas is led by its perennial all-pro QB, Roger "the Dodger" Staubach, who at age 36, still excels. To work with, he has the swift and lanky receivers, Drew Pearson and Tony Hill, and an explosive running back in Tony Dorsett.

Dallas' strength is on defence though, where all-pros' Cliff Harris and Charlie Waters, rank as the best tandem of safeties in the NFL. Randy White, judged the finest tackle in football by Sporting News, teams with ends, Harvey Martin and "Tootall" Jones, to form the second-ranked defensive line in the NFL.

If there is a discernible edge in this game, many feel it is provided by the brilliant year Pittsburgh's revitalized QB, Terry Bradshaw, is having, and the pair of top-flight receivers he has, Lynn Swann and John Stallworth - undoubtedly the best tandem in football. Another key is their offensive line, anchored by Mike Webster, which gives Bradshaw plenty of time to pass and opens many holes for workhorse fullback, Franco Harris to plow through.

The defence, characterized by the Steel Curtain, which has shown signs of aging, is now held together by the awesome linebacker "pair of jacks" - Ham and Lambert. They will utilize "the Flex", dropping a lineman and/or linebacker back to safety, to counter Dallas' shotgun offence.

A prediction? Pittsburgh will win 20-14!

You're prepared for a job.
Now prepare for a profession.

These are challenging times for young people. And the challenge will continue even after you find a job.

You'll be competing with qualified people who are just as eager to move ahead and just as ready to work hard. The professional edge can set you apart to help you achieve your career goals.

The Management Accounting profession is an idea whose time has come. The economic situation may be a problem for many, but it's an opportunity for the RIA Management Accountant.

The business climate has never been so competitive. Government must restrain costs while meeting social needs.

So there is growing demand and scope for RIA Management Accountants. The professionals. As the name suggests, they are not accountants in the traditional sense of the word.

Their RIA training provides a thorough grasp of accounting principles and information systems. In addition, they are trained to interpret quantitative data from the management perspective. Their focus is on the future as they work with senior management to plan policy and achieve objectives.

So it's not surprising that so many men and women with the RIA professional edge become senior managers.

The profession is open to everyone with a taste for hard work and the will to succeed. Business graduates, B.A.'s, B.Sc.'s, as well as other non-business graduates could qualify for RIA course exemptions and can often earn RIA accreditation in two or three years of evening study.

World ignores Asian mayday

An international tragedy, arguably unparalleled in this decade, is presently unfolding. And the world community is turning the tragedy into an international disgrace. As many as 600,000 refugees presently crowd the squalid makeshift camps that dot the map of Southeast Asia, and ten to twenty thousand more fill the rusted hulls of a harbourless flotilla. The "boat people", as they have been called, are the tip on an iceberg of human suffering, in dire need of medical attention and a place to call home. Yet the governments of the world, with few exceptions, have closed their eyes and their doors.

Countries within the immediate vicinity of Burma, Vietnam, Laos and Cambodia, from which the bulk of refugees have fled, have done more than their part in absorbing the overflow. Bangladesh, its own population on the threshold of starvation, has taken in over 170,000 displaced Burmese. To Thailand, 140,000 refugees from Laos have fled. Malaysia harbours 45,000 Vietnamese and Hong Kong 75,000 Chinese. The diaspora has strapped the economies and good will of these proximate countries to the limit.

More distant, more wealthy nations cannot claim the same openness of heart, though. With the possible exception of Australia, the Western world - and its affluent Asian counterpart, Japan - has failed to rise to the crisis, opening their doors to a paltry few and keeping a tight lid on the level of monetary aid.

The story of the boat people is not a noble tragedy. It is a brutal reality of daily squalor and starvation, of child and adult alike, dying. It is a story of thousands, who have fled from tyranny into darkness and despair. Escaping from the shackles of a history oppressive government, they have been delivered into a world that wants no part of them.

This country shares in that shame. Canada will let in an average of 415 refugees a month this year, barely denting the 20,000 Vietnamese who saw the sun rise over a rusted freighter's gunwale today.

Some would argue that the Canadian economy will suffer if the plight of the refugees is given undue priority. That is true in the short term, for refugees come from lands with foreign cultures and languages. But given time, these immigrants will, as those from similar backgrounds have in the past, contribute positively to Canada's economy and society.

Further, economics is only one consideration when 20,000 lives are at stake. The plight of the boat people demands immediate, dramatic action. Canada must enlist in a cooperative effort with other affluent countries; the first nations of the world must open their arms to the dispossessed.

There is a fundamental law of the sea which holds that when a ship is in distress, other ships in the area must speed to its aid. Ships brimming with humanity are in pathetic distress, now, at this very moment. The time has come to drop the blindfold from our eyes.

The bottomline

One of the most enduring Queen's traditions is with us again. Along with Oil Thighs and Candlelighting comes the annual "Great Honorary Debate" as regular as spring and growing steadily more significant every year.

Possibly the most rational approach to a complex problem was offered in 1974 when chairman Ian Nordheimer and a committee of four produced a study of honoraria and made recommendations for all student held positions. In this report, which was accepted and approved by Outer Council at that time, the committee investigated the myriad arguments surrounding the responsibility, commitment and reward involved in student run organizations such as the AMS, Tricolour, the Queen's Pub, The Journal and the AMS Court.

Stressing that volunteerism must remain the backbone of student affairs, the committee nevertheless acknowledged that some positions must be salaried to guarantee control and efficiency. These positions were AMS office staff, Pub staff, Outer Council secretary and Who's Where editor, among others.

Another group was defined as being vital to student affairs, and deserving of honorarium. Into this area falls the AMS executive and commissioners, the senior Journal and Tricolour editors and the QEA director.

"Honorarium" is defined as "compensation for time expended and benefits foregone." Since exact calculation of the efforts and sacrifices is impossible, the committee and Outer Council agreed that compensation should be based on the cost to the scholastic careers of the individuals involved. Based on the assumption that, for example, the Vice Presidents of the AMS will be forced to take fewer courses during their term, the '74 report called for an honorarium based upon the tuition fees for that year.

The President and Vice presidents would receive full tuition and a summer salary, as would the Editor in Chief of the Journal. Commissioners and sub editors would receive a portion of tuition. Yet despite the fact that the report was accepted by both Inner and Outer Councils, it was roundly defeated on the referendum.

Queen's continues as an anomaly in Ontario, having one of the only volunteer executives in the province. Journal editors have not received an honorarium increase in forty years, despite the attempts of over a dozen administrations. Major extracurricular commitments place a great deal of pressure on academic commitments. Using the Journal as an example, seven editors have either had to spread their academic workload over an extra semester, or resign from the paper outright. Similar strains or drains on talent are surely replicated in all major student organizations at Queen's. The AMS Vice-Presidents are an example.

John Koopman estimates he spends in excess of 40 hours a week doing his job. Rory Cattanaach equals that and attends meetings virtually every week night.

Obviously this kind of pressure cannot be sustained without penalty, to either the student or the organization involved. It was to prevent such a dilemma that honorarium was implemented. It would be to Queen's advantage to make it an effective device.

Tenure amendment squeaks by

by Beth McKenzie

A tense vote in the final minutes of last Thursday's Senate meeting gave Queen's students the right to sit on tenure committees.

The meeting, which had to be extended beyond the usual two hour limit, turned into a heated debate when Rory Cattanaach, AMS Vice-President (University Affairs), proposed amendments to the report by the Senate Committee on Appointments, Promotion, Tenure and Leave (SCAPT) to require mandatory student membership on all tenure committees.

Said Cattanaach "In order to guarantee that a committee's advice on the matter of tenure is sound and thorough, it is essential that all views be included. The committees would be inadequate without the participation of students."

The first vote on the amendment resulted in a 20-20 tie, continuing the Committee's year-long deadlock on this issue. Principal Ronald L. Watts demanded a recount, in which one Senator, who had previously abstained, cast his vote to turn the decision in favour of the students. Fifteen Senators either abstained or were not present for the vote.

Opinion on the issue varied greatly. Dr. Bernie Adell, Dean of Law, gave his support to the motion. Tenure is a decision far too important to be left to individual departments. Students deserve to have a say. My experience with students on committees has shown me that they have a valuable contribution to make." He cited examples of student participation on the Committees to select the Principal and Deans to prove his point. Professor Kahski of the Economics Department argued that the presence of students would inhibit frank and open discussion. "These decisions can be wrenching experiences. It can be difficult, even with other faculty members, to speak frankly about a colleague's work."

Dr. Pickard, of the Faculty of Law, agreed that students have no place on these committees. "Professors applying for tenure have the right to be judged by a committee of peers. There is nothing to be gained from student participation except to have extra bodies on the committee."

Hugh Christie, Student Rector, defended student's abilities. "Responsibility and concern are not

Alcohol banned at Richardson

Stall - Alcohol will be banned at all football games and other sporting events next year.

In a letter to AMS President Dave Brown, Vice-Principal H.M. Love asked for support that the law is observed at public events at Queen's.

According to Love, the University has some 17 liquor permits which define the areas in which liquor may be consumed legally. Richardson Stadium and other sports arenas are not among those areas and drinking alcohol there is illegal.

"Recently there has been public concern that, particularly at some football games, there has been conspicuous consumption of alcohol, sometimes leading to drunkenness, damage to property and injury to people. I am afraid that the reputation of all students may be damaged by the actions of a few," noted Love.

In the past two years there have been several acts of violence at the football games and injuries to some people occurred. Two years ago a constable suffered a broken leg in one such incident. This past season the police were called to restrain a student several hours for a public disturbance charge.

"I cannot condone any breaking of the law at the Stadium or elsewhere," added Love. "If we do not ourselves remedy the situation, the consequences may range from denial of insurance protection to police intervention."

Queen's basketball has been re-vitalized under new coach Tom Frood. Here Phil Moore goes up for two.

Bus-It one more time

by John Baktis

Queen's may have full Bus-It service on all city routes for under $100,000, provided Kingston City Council agrees. However the AMS may discontinue the shuttle service unless a separate contract is negotiated.

After four weeks of negotiations, AMS Vice-President (Operations) John Koopman and Ken Fee, Chairman of the Public Utilities Commission (PUC) have agreed on a sum of $99,995 for all bus routes in Kingston. This year, Queen's is paying $98,500 for reduced service.

However, this contract is not final. "It hasn't been accepted yet," said Fee. "It must be taken to Council on Wednesday night and they must approve it."

The offer must also be approved by the AMS executive.

"It's a good offer," said Koopman. "I feel confident that the AMS would support it."

Although Koopman was pleased with the agreement, he does not rule out the possibility that City Council would not accept the contract.

"As good as we can possibly make the offer, if it is not accepted then it's back to the bargaining tables," said Koopman.

Fee was also pleased with the contract, "it is mutually advantageous to have Bus-It in Kingston. It's the only city in Canada that has this system," he noted.

Koopman cited poor usage as a reason for discontinuing the shuttle service to West Campus.

"The service is very poorly used," said Koopman. "We shouldn't pay $35 a night just to bus a few people back from the library when it closes."

If City Council and the AMS accept the offer, then it will be up to the students to make the final decision when questioned on the February referendum.

May be hazardous

The running track in Jock Hartly Arena was closed on Friday afternoon due to high levels of carbon monoxide gas near the arena roof.

Eddie Deans, Supervisor of the arena, told the Journal that the high levels of carbon monoxide were emitted from the machine that is used to clean the ice surface in the arena. Mr. Deans said that normally the doors and fans in the arena are opened up when the ice cleaner is used, but they had been closed on Friday to test carbon monoxide levels that were emitted from the machine.

"We were just trying to test what the level would be if we didn't do the things we normally do," said Deans, stating that they were trying a new device for cutting down on exhaust fumes.

Around noon, carbon monoxide levels reached 75 parts per million and signs were posted warning runners to use the track at their own risk. Shortly afterwards, the track was closed to runners and reopened at about 2 p.m. that afternoon.

Mr. Deans stated that he heard of one runner who got sick from breathing the fumes, but otherwise there were no problems to runners.

Business team places near top

by Kirsten Morris

Last weekend Queen's School of Business hosted a competition for commerce students throughout Canada. After preliminary rounds the number of contestants was narrowed down to five - Calgary, McGill, Western, Dalhousie and Queen's.

The competition was divided into three sections - a debate (in which Queen's placed second behind Western), a company case study and computer business game.

The representatives from Queen's for the computer business game were Geoffrey Maier, Michael McFadden and Stephen Flesch. Each team was isolated in a computer-simulation lab, where they had to take a company through eight years of business. Players received information about the market and other teams' decisions via a television screen.

Because Queen's was the only university to have experience in playing the game, it was expected that the team would do very well. However, possibly because of an under-estimate of the other teams' investments in research and development, Queen's fell behind and finished third, while Dalhousie placed first.

Queen's did especially well on the case. Shan Atkins, Gordon Crowson and Terry Wright were rated first by the judges on their presentation and solution of a given firm's problems. Each team was given information about a European furniture company, and that they were sequestered for six hours while they prepared their analysis of how the firm's position could be improved and to design a presentation. The presentation had to be slightly different from that usually given in class because the judges were businessmen, not academics.

Leith MacLaren (Commerce '79) found that there wasn't very much difference in the solutions contestants presented to the firm's problems, other than varying emphasis on the financial aspects of the company (which Queen's team concentrated on) versus the marketing aspects of production.

Teams discuss AMS race

by Rob Southcott

After the close of nominations on Friday, the race for next year's AMS Executive is now underway. The 3 teams are led by Richard Binhammer, Dave Corbett and Tom O'Shaunessy.

This will be the first time in 2 years that an AMS executive will be elected, rather than acclaimed, a fact that pleases all of the candidates.

"It gives the campus a chance for all kinds of issues to culminate in a two or three week period," stated Binhammer, stressing the chance for students to actually find out something about the AMS.

Taxi farce goes on

by Shelly Matson

Amherst Taxi's owner Doug Robinson has had to concede defeat in his latest battle with the Kingston Police Commission regarding a recent amendment to a city bylaw that prevents him from advertising on his seven cabs. However, Robinson doesn't see this as the end of the issue and hopes to challenge the entire taxi bylaw in the next month.

Robinson appealed the suspension of his 1978 city cab licence in a hearing in front of the Commission last Thursday, accompanied by enthusiastic media coverage.

When asked whether bumper stickers, CKLC promotional stickers, and auto dealer tags constituted advertising, which is explicitly prohibited in the bylaw, Judge Campbell replied, "You're asking us to cross a bridge before we come to it." Chief Rice immediately supported Judge Campbell and said, "Cab drivers would have to remove Ontario licence plates because of the words 'Keep It Beautiful'."

The Commission adopted a resolution dismissing the appeal without prejudice to Robinson making an application for a 1979 licence.

Robinson expressed his disappointment with the hearing, "It's not fair the way they've done it—they should have charged me. It would have been fairer to be charged but now I'm forced to challenge the bylaw which could cost me about $15,000."

Geoff McConnell, who has a financial interest in Robinson's company added, "The Police Commission wants to force us into bankruptcy—they only want the two big companies."

Robinson did not "remove" the easel-type signs instead, his cabs travelled in a "convoy" to the police station with the advertising taped over with black garbage bags.

Of his newest tactics, Robinson commented, "It's kind of a joke on the city. I've gotten a good response from my customers."

The cabby is initiating his challenge against the city bylaw this week with an appeal to Divisional Court. His counsel hesitated to reveal what the future strategy might be but said "It involves the right of the Police Commission, as an unelected body, to pass such a bylaw."

McConnell has been circulating a petition supporting the advertising on Robinson's cabs and the consequent lower fares for clients for presentation to Mayor Keyes this week.

qualities limited to faculty. Students can bring a unique perspective to tenure discussions - the perspective from the lecture or seminar. In such an important decision, the university can't afford not to get all possible perspectives.

Dr. Duncan Sinclair, Dean of Arts and Science, stated that although he has found students to be valuable contributors on committees, he was concerned that there would not always be students available or willing to serve on committees.

"We have procedures scheduled to start in fall. Students are difficult to get in touch with at this time of year, and are generally very slow at answering their mail," he said. He feared that finding students could slow down the process and raise administrative costs.

When asked what the implications of Thursday's decision would be, Sinclair stated, "It is too early to tell. I still believe that we would be restricting our flexibility by having imposed mandatory membership of students. The practice exists unofficially now, and it's working. Regulations are necessary only if it's not working."

AMS Constables will no longer hold student cards at the door for students temporarily leaving the Pub.

The World in Brief...

by Sandi Arthurs

Israel— Progressive Conservative Party leader Joe Clark paid a visit to Israel last week. Premier Menachem Begin and opposition leader Shimon Peres received Mr. Clark and gave him a quick overview of the Middle East peace negotiations.

Washington— The U.S. Treasury Department auctioned off 1.5 million ounces of gold last week in a sale that raised more than 325 million for the U.S. government. The auction was part of President Carter's plan to boost the U.S. dollar by using up surplus dollars to make currency more scarce and therefore more valuable.

U.S.— Gasohol is now being sold throughout the U.S. It is a blend of unleaded gasoline and alcohol in a ratio of 9:1 respectively. Ottawa is cautioning Canadian motorists about buying gasohol as it can cause autos to stall in cold weather and damage car parts. Claude Landry, senior advisor on petroleum use for the Federal Energy Department said that existing cars are not designed to handle the new fuel.

Ontario— English has once again become a compulsory subject for high school students in grades 9 to 12. The new policies are contained in a recently revised ministry document, known as HSI, which basically proscribes the curriculum in Ontario schools. The Education Ministry has decided with the aid of public pressure to return to a more standard curriculum.

Iran— The Shah of Iran has left his country after reigning for 37 years. The Shah and his wife were warmly welcomed by President Anwar Sadat in Egypt.

Cleveland— Leading U.S. anthropologist Dr. Donald Johanson has discovered a new link in human evolution. He recently unearthed a fossilized skeleton believed to be 3 million years old in Ethiopia. The skeleton is apparently that of a manlike creature that walked upright with a body resembling ape-man. The skeleton is believed to be the common link between the ape-man and modern man.

Cambodia— The Vietnamese forces were driven out of the port city of Kompong Som while at the same time Vietnamese-led troops attacked the Khmer Rouge stronghold on Koh Kono Island off the Cambodian coast. Premier Pol Pot's loyalists are determined to make the southwestern corner of Cambodia a strong area, resistant to Vietnamese takeover.

Manitoba— A Winnipeg doctor finds the "Drano Test" amazingly accurate in determining the sex of unborn babies. Dr. Nelko said the Drano test has predicted the sex of four out of five babies he delivered last year. The test simply entails mixing two teaspoons of liquid Drano with two teaspoons of the woman's morning urine. If the solution turns brown or golden in colour, it will be a girl. If the solution turns green, it will be a boy - why not!

You otta be in pictures

by Doug Ronson

So you want to be a star? The Queen's Cheerleaders are being considered for a movie by MGM Productions.

The firm may hire the female portion of the cheerleading squad as extras for a movie called "The Cheerleaders", according to Rick Powers, Queen's Athletic Events Manager.

When Powers received a call from Mr. Halyk of MGM after the College Bowl he doubted that it was a serious offer. "When I heard the name of the movie my first thought was 'porn', but Halyk assured me that it was on the level," Powers said.

MGM "discovered" our cheerleaders when one of their scouts saw them perform at the College Bowl. The following week Powers received the MGM call and was asked to send head photos, action shots and resumes of the team.

"Halyk phoned me again on Friday and said that he had seen them at the Can-Am Bowl and was impressed," Powers told the Journal. MGM told him that they would be sending up a script and requested more pictures.

"It sounded like the squad had the job if they wanted it, but I don't know whether they have sent the script to a number of other teams," he commented.

Powers stated that once the cheerleaders have examined the script they have to inform MGM as to whether they would be interested in the film.

"MGM has told me that they plan to begin filming on May first," Powers said.

Queen's "forced" charity: Pretzel-logic exposed

The Editor:

David Wray's opinion (Let them eat rice, January 19) shows a lack of thought, both in the conclusions he reaches and by ignoring the basic principals involved in the foster children dinner.

Wray questioned first where the funds were coming from. He is quite right in saying that the money donated originates with the students. To explain it as simply as possible, Saga had a certain amount of our money set aside in the budget for dinner on January 16, but, instead of spending it on meat and dessert for Queen's residence students, gave it to the Foster Children Fund.

Wray concludes that the donation was, in effect "forced" charity. Clearly this is not the case; students were able to enjoy the normal dinner fare at Upper Ban Righ.

His reference to the fight against tuition increases is both misleading and irrelevant. Students in residence were merely given the opportunity to redirect funds that they had already spent; they were not asked for more money.

Wray's subsequent use of statistics is nebulous. Is he trying to say that it is somehow acceptable to spend 81 percent of a family's budget on food simply because the family is large? Is this large family expected to pay for housing, health, education and clothes with the remaining 19 percent of already meagre income?

Wray implies that the Bolivian family is, in fact, not needy. His statistics are hard to follow and harder to swallow. Magaly's family, he explains is not poor because their income is above the national average. It is a strange type of opulence to live in a one room shack with a mud floor.

Wray's final point is also his most ill-considered. To set priorities on the basis of nationality is self-defeating. Nationalism is severely misplaced when one is talking about providing the necessities of a decent life for all men, and smacks of charitable jingoism.

He establishes a useless competition between charitable work in Canada and overseas which will work to the disadvantage of both. Surely the initiative of the AMS in supporting the Foster Children will not impede Wray in any way from doing charitable work for Canadians.

The joys of higher education

by Julia Grunau
Post-Christmas letter home:
Dear Mom and Dad:

My cold is fine, thanks. The occasional cough wracks my battered frame but aside from that I should recover after only a month in sunny southern climes. Failing that, however, a week in bed would probably do as much good...if I can struggle to keep warm under only two moth-eaten blankets. Economizing, you see. Rachel has wrapped goosegrease and flannel around my throat (cheaper than Neo Citran). How are you?

You ask what we do here for fun. (You didn't but I'm telling you anyway.) Well, we all go out into the hall and smell the place where the toilet overflowed, and then we guess how long it will take before the rug dries out. I guess that happened a few days ago, now. Sometimes we listen to radio plays and try to guess what evil lurks in the hearts of men. Boy, it sure is amusing to read recipe books, too, and imagine that I'm eating real eggplant with hollandaise sauce. Last night's mystery meat was rumoured to have been curried goat.

My roommate is fine, but golly, she may be transferring to another university next year. I'm not doing that, Mom! I'm sticking it out! Not too many people are passing this year, I've heard. I've heard that this year is the hardest of the last ten, marks-wise. I know that you will be proud then, when I tell you about my fifteen in Algebra 005. Not too many people stick it out long enough to get a fifteen.

So, as you can see, I'm really doing fine! As I draw my thin inadequate coat about my shoulders for warmth, and try to think of what it would be like to afford a plant for company, I think of you. Love.

Gambling on oil revenue

The Editor:

As a person who has lived in North America for the whole of my life, and having seen conditions in many countries with vastly differing standards of living, I could not help but be upset by the comments made by Mr. Tyseer A. Nasr in his article on OPEC which appeared in the Journal of January 16.

There can be no escaping the fact that we, as North Americans, are extremely wasteful. I would be the first one to attest to that. But what Mr. Nasr suggested in that article was that the leaders of the OPEC nations were raising the prices of their exported oil simply for the welfare of their people. The fact of the matter is that the huge majority of petrodollars is not spent on social programs in the Arab countries where the money could do great amounts of good, but rather, goes straight into the pockets of a few super wealthy. At present, the list of the world's 50 richest men contains 42 representatives from the OPEC nations.

And how are they spending these huge amounts of money? In the majority of cases, not on the people who so desperately need it, but in gambling casinos in Monte Carlo and in purchasing estates and palaces throughout the world (The Shah of Iran is known to have at least eight estates). And lest we forget, no one knows how many millions of dollars the OPEC nations have spent, or will spend on defence. As it is, many Arab countries have more advanced equipment than the majority of Soviet or U.S. forces, and their arsenal continues to grow at the unbelievable rate of 10 million dollars a day.

I would be happy to pay more money for my gas if I thought it was going to help the poor of the world. But when we see exactly where this money is going, can you blame our reluctance to pay higher oil prices?

There is a myth in many undeveloped countries of the world that the streets of all North American cities are paved in gold. We do have a high standard of living, but the important point is that it is better distributed than in most other places of the world.

The quest for our elusive identity

The Editor,

Canada is in the middle of an identity crisis. She lacks a cultural identity. Culture cannot be forced upon people; it should be natural expression of who we are. Currently, Canadian artists are suffering from cuts in government funding. There seems to be a paradox in funding practices; just as we are searching for a cultural identity, we are cutting off the funding to those who create the art and culture.

The problem seems to be on a very basic level. There is no cultural policy in this country. Bernard Ostry, in his book "The Cultural Connection", says that we need a policy that encourages the growth of the arts while not restricting creativity

I am sorry, I cannot agree with your viewpoint sir. You speak of bread. But the money used to buy just one F16 fighter by Iraq could have been used to build two completely equipped hospitals for that nation's people.

Paul Tinari

Many feel that by cutting back on the CBC and other channels of distribution, we are bidding farewell to our own culture and allowing a dominance on the part of the American media to prevail.

Any policy should embody the sense of competition upon which our democracy is built. Competition will place the necessary value judgement on art. The competitive concept will also force arts administrators to treat their organizations as businesses, seeking public support through donations and ticket sales rather than relying helplessly on governmental support.

As students, we must make an effort to expose ourselves to the culture that exists.

Next Friday night, why not go to a play, lecture, film or concert instead of the pub? Queen's students have such great cultural opportunities open to them. If culture is the expression of who we are, then why don't we express ourselves. This week is Arts week. Take a minute to think about who you are.

Soap Box

Bill Bennett's dream:

Corporate regionalism

by Rob Reynolds

It is an impressive sight for the people of B.C. to see their premier call some of the biggest names in the Canadian corporate sector to account for their merger intentions. Bill Bennett looks to all Canada to be what the Hon. Tony Abbott aspires to "a nasty bill of goods".

Bennett's latest adventure into the art of symbolic politics stems from recent takeover bids of British Columbia's own multinational corporation MacMillan Bloedel. The episodic nature of the takeover attempts is perhaps more akin to a soap opera than what one might expect in the world of corporate capitalism. The drama unfolded in late December when Domtar announced that it was attempting to obtain controlling interest in MB.

The next day MB president, C.C. Knudsen, announced that his company was engaged in a takeover bid for Domtar. Then, Canadian Pacific Investments (CPI) announced that it too was making a bid for control of MB. CPI owned 13.4 percent of MB already. This last bid occasioned Premier Bennett's entry into the fray.

He called together the presidents of all the firms involved to announce that "B.C. is not for sale". Mr. Bennett evidently spelled out to Mr. Sinclair, (CPI President) that his government would block a takeover bid of MB. Supposedly, MB and the people of B.C. share a spiritual (if not economic) oneness. After the discussions with all concerned, Domtar and MB announced that they had agreed temporarily to withdraw their counter-bids.

However, the premier's statements and thinly veiled threats are little more than a paper tiger. If the "pride of Kelowna" attempted to block the takeover bid by CPI (a federally chartered company) of MB it would be an interesting test of sec. 91(2). The Trade and Commerce clause of the BNS Act which gives the federal government jurisdiction over such matters. Given the Supreme Court's recent CIGOL case, where the Saskatchewan government was ordered to repay millions of dollars in royalties because it was found to have breached this very clause, there is little doubt of how a case involving CPI and the B.C. government would be decided.

There is a case to make that if Domtar, and MB were owned by CPI it would represent a merger lessening competition to the detriment of the public. It would therefore be illegal under the Combines Investigation Act.

A combination of Domtar and MB under the ambit of CPI would have assets of 6.6 billion dollars. If one includes CPI in the assets of CP Limited (which owns over 80 percent of CPI) total assets would be 9.5 billion dollars.

However, the Social Credit leader, eschewing 'free enterprise' rhetoric, opted for a highly provincial stance, arguing that the interests of CPI were not one with the interests of the people of B.C. What people you might ask? Surely it does not matter to the workers whether they bargain with the corporate giant MB or the even larger corporate giant, CPI. I would however, have an impact on the B.C. elite (for some, read sub-state bourgeoisie). Given the linkages between this class and the provincial government, it is no small wonder that Mr. Bennett perceives the interests of MC and BC to be indistinguishable.

The whole affair demonstrates that in Canada regional interests are often little more than those of the dominant corporations found in the province. Is this not the case with the oil companies and the Alberta government? In the B.C. case, MB is perceived to be the representative of all British Columbians. As is usually the case in these debates no one has considered the interest of the workers.

Slices

by Eric Evans

It wouldn't surprise me a great deal if Dan Hill graduates from Queen's this spring when I do. His upcoming visit, which I'm sure has most of Queen's tense with anticipation, will be his fourth visit in as many years. Sometimes it seems that Dan Hill has spent almost as much time here as I have, if not in person, at least in the form of posters and journal ads.

Don't get me wrong. I can appreciate the thrills and chills of the person I even went out and bought albums by both Gord Lightfoot and Valdy once. In fact, I don't even strongly object to the disproportionately high number of folk concerts we've had around this fine institution during the last few years. But I do object to Dan Hill.

The strange thing about Hill is that you either love his music or you loathe it with passionate relish. For example, the people who appreciate the overdose of sincerity that accompanies Hill's presence will not be amused by this column, but then, I am sure they are used to it. I would imagine that you would have to take a lot of abuse as a Dan Hill fan. On the other hand, those who have signed petitions demanding that Hill buy a guitar pick and take a few lessons, will be glad to hear anything nasty about him, whether it's strictly true or not.

If you are perceptive, you may have realized already that I fit into the latter category. However, it must be remembered that I am one of those silly people who would like to hear more progressive rock on CFRC, so my views may not count for much.

Dan Hill does have some talent. One of his songs can slide by fairly nicely. It's when I hear more than one in a row that I have trouble choking down his music. I can handle a dripping, sincere statement straight from the heart once in a while, but with Hill, all his songs are like that. After listening to one side of a Dan Hill album, I get the feeling that I have just heard a very long song about somebody's personal emotional problems. Hill's uninspired instrumentals "don't" help matters either, but then I suppose he is too busy being honest and open to progress beyond the ABC Book of Chords.

I sometimes wonder where Hill's wailing sentimentality comes from. Perhaps it is derived from his tough childhood roots in Don Mills, or the trying summers he spent at his parent's cottage in Muskoka. Or, then again, maybe it is playing at Queen's every year that has gotten to him.

Yet, Dan Hill has been fairly successful despite the music critics and he probably owes it all to Canadian content regulations on AM radio. I had one bad experience last summer related to this state of affairs. I was driving along in a car that had only an AM radio, listening to one of Toronto's two horrible AM stations, when one of Dan Hill's songs came on. No problem, I thought, as I switched to the other of Toronto's two horrible AM stations, hoping to catch a little Kiss or Bay City Roller music. But, you guessed it, folks, more Dan Hill. It even sounded like the same song, not that I am a very good judge of that. It was a very unfortunate experience, but it made me appreciate Japan - the home of the car cassette deck - much more.

There is one bright note, however, concerning Dan Hill's upcoming concert. A lot of students are going to be glad to stay home and work that night.

Crowning the Post Office

by Dave Duff

Trouble at the Post Office again. No, they're not going on strike this time. The workers are very happy. Why shouldn't they be?

Where else can an employee get paid for playing cards, sleeping, drinking and smoking marijuana? What other job provides such wonderful fringe benefits as free gifts at any time and soccer games during work hours? Where else can one relieve one's daily tension by deliberately destroying packages marked "fragile"?

According to two ex-postal workers, that has been the situation at the huge Gateway postal complex in Mississauga for quite some time. Gateway handles about 2.5 million pieces of mail daily, about forty percent of Canada's bulk mail.

The Canadian Union of Postal Workers has obviously performed wonders for its twenty-six thousand members, but what of the rest of us?

The number of strikes and slowdowns that this country has had to endure since collective bargaining was introduced in 1967 is ridiculous. The number of damaged letters and parcels each year is disgraceful. During the fiscal year 1977-78 there were about forty-six thousand complaints concerning damaged or undelivered mail in the Toronto area alone. As a result, hundreds of private courier services have appeared, willing to provide the efficient and acceptable service that the present Post Office does not provide. None of this is new though - not even to Postmaster General Gilles Lamontagne who claims, "I'm not blind, I know what's going on in the Post Office."

What is fairly new, however, is the government's response to the problem. In August 1978, the Prime Minister announced that he intended to create a Crown corporation to take the place of the Post Office. On December 11 he introduced Bill C-27 which will establish a Canadian Postal Corporation. At first it seemed to be quite a good idea, but a closer look at the piece of legislation indicates that it could create a situation even more unacceptable than presently exists. The Crown corporation will merely remove from the hands of government, direct responsibility for postal incompetence.

Not only will the Canada Post Corporation have the same employees, the same management and the same unions as does the present Post Office, it will be granted powers that will enable it to establish itself as an almost unrestricted monopoly. It will have the power to set all postage rates without government regulation except in the case of first class mail. More significantly, the new corporation will be given "the sole and exclusive privilege of collecting, transmitting and delivering letters within Canada". Furthermore, anyone who collects, transmits or delivers a letter "in violation of the prerogatives of the Corporation" will be "guilty of an offence". Since the "prerogatives" of the Corporation include defining what a "letter" is, and since this definition is likely to be very broad, private courier services will be severely limited, if not totally eliminated. Thus emerges a government-sanctioned and government-established monopoly. Bill C-27 does not solve the problems of the Post Office. Instead, it creates new ones. A Crown corporation? Fine. Unrestricted monopoly? No.

What do you say to a hungry world?

by Darlene Saunders and Susan Halferdahl

Four billion people live on this planet. Two billion people are starving or suffering from malnutrition.

WHY?

Because this planet does not have enough resources?

Because there is just not enough food to go around?

Because there are too many people?

No! For most of the Western World these answers may seem sufficient, but from an objective perspective they are not valid. The interaction of a variety of different factors constitute the cause for the present hunger situation.

A closer examination of these factors will illustrate their effect.

Weather - The success of food crops, in spite of skillful cultivation, relies ultimately on favorable weather conditions. In 1971 and 1972 droughts and floods ruined food

Yet, the facts of half the world's population suffering from starvation and malnourishment are also true. Although these statements initially appear conflicting, they become obvious upon closer examination of food type and distribution patterns.

Affluent eating patterns in the rich, developed nations can be illustrated by patterns of grain consumption. North Americans consume five times as much grain as do most Asians.

Because North Americans use it to feed meat-producing livestock, their grain consumption is indirect and less obvious. Within this indirect method, however, is an appalling conversion factor.

According to the U.S. Department of Agriculture, seven pounds of grain are needed in addition to all the hay, grass, and other food involved to produce one pound of edible beef.

Because of the high levels of meat consumption, therefore, the rich minority is using an unbalanced proportion of the world's available productive went begging. We're starting on the job now, but crops do not grow overnight, even in our climate."

"Furthermore, we have lots of community education to do. Our grandfathers used to employ very primitive, and unproductive methods of agriculture and it takes time to change centuries of tradition."

"Even when we do, we must have seeds. Often, what seed we can afford to buy becomes food for pests. And in bad years, we find ourselves forced to eat the seed to survive."

"We need tools as well. But often you give us the wrong sort. A bulldozer is a fine piece of Western technology, but no good to me."

"I cannot drive it, and none of my friends can fix it. I need aid from you which shows a bit more sensitivity."

"We need money to buy seeds. It's easier for you to save enough to buy some seeds for a vegetable patch, but all my money goes on food for daily living. I have the choice of surviving today or buying seeds for tomorrow. It really isn't any choice at all, is it?"

Some might ask why not eat the sacred cows, but to them Bonner answers:

"Our religious beliefs might annoy you, but would killing India's 177 million cows really help solve the country's food problem? Certainly it might increase protein consumption for a brief time, but what about long-term effect?"

"Though they are not used for beef as your cattle are, our animals are far from useless. They eat forage and waste vegetation and they supply milk which is itself a valuable source of protein."

The cows are India's tractors, our heavy machinery. They are vital to the country's agricultural economy. When you realize that fuel has recently quadrupled in price you see why they are our main source of plough-power.

India's cattle produce an estimated 800 million tons of dung each year, nearly half of which is used as fuel

People in North America think the answer is very easy - simply provide contraceptives. Bonner points out that the solution is not so simple.

"You talk about producing so many offspring as though we are irresponsible children. Have you ever stopped to think we love children, we want children, we need children."

"It is probably hard for you to realize that a mother giving birth to ten children may see less than four of them living beyond their first birthday."

"For many people in the developing world, pensions and other government benefits are things we have never heard of. The only security in our old age will come from our children."

"You imply that because of the irresponsible way in which we produce our offspring that the whole world is going to be thrown into a situation that it won't be able to cope with."

"Your own scientists have proven that every child in a Western family pollutes 50 times more than an Indian child and will demand 5 times the resources of an African child. A Western child will waste enough food in his lifetime to feed whole African villages for months."

"If there was less exploitation and more sharing of the resources of this globe, which belong to us all, then the whole population question would be a non-event. Improving one's standard of living plays a very big role in population control."

Livestock in the rich countries eat as much as do all the people of India and China for cooking. Most of what's left is used for fertilizer since chemical fertilizer is either too expensive for widespread use, or not available at all.

Population - In 1830, the world sustained one billion persons. A second billion added one hundred years later, was followed by a third billion in just thirty years.

Only fifteen years passed before the fourth billion mark was reached. This rate of growth obviously cannot be handled under the present rate of food production and consumption.

However the problem cannot be placed only on the shoulders of the developing countries. It is true that the major explosion of population occurred in poor countries, when one calculates population solely on the basis of the number of people.

However if one calculates population in terms of feeding burden as proposed by Dr. George Bergstrom the developed world, because of its high consumption of protein, through meat products has increased the feeding burden far more than the poor world. Bergstrom calculated that "The satisfied world, one-third of the human family has in these two years (1972-4) in effect added 463 million population equivalents to the globe's strained feeding burden as against the poor world, two-thirds of the human family, contributing 264 million."

Land - There is sufficient land to feed all of the world's people. However two basic problems exist.

First of all is land that could be fertile and productive but money is not available and technology is not sensitively geared to the land nor to the people's needs who are living off the land.

Instead money from foreign aid is spent in either sophisticated machinery which is too expensive to run and cannot be repaired, or in big landowning farms which are not as productive per acre as small family dependent farms.

Both these expenditures contribute to the displacement of workers from rural to urban areas where there are even fewer jobs. Consequently they become poorer and poorer and have much less money with which to buy food.

The second problem lies in who controls what is grown on the available land. Large farms were mentioned above as producing less per acre.

The most important reason is because these larger farmers make huge profits in growing non-food items or food for export.

Virgil Nelson, in his article, "Recipes for a Hungry World", gives an example: "In Columbia agricultural land growing carnations brings 80 times more profit per acre than the same land growing corn to feed local persons."

International Trade - The key factor in the entire hunger situation slave labor was established.

It grew to today's full-fledged dimensions through policy formation controlled by affluent rich countries. To a large degree they set the prices of exports.

Hans Singer, an economist at the United Nations, stated "It is a matter of historical fact that ever since the seventies (the 1870's) the trend of prices has been heavily against sellers of food and raw materials and in favor of the sellers of manufactured articles."

As well, governments and big business of rich countries indirectly support military dictatorships in developing countries. The results of such actions are illustrated by Ronald Sider using information from an article in New York Times.

"A military dictatorship strongly supported by the United States fostered economic growth at the rate of 10 per cent per year from 1968-1974. But who profited? Even Brazil's own minister of finance admitted in 1972 that only 5 per cent of the people had benefitted from the fantastic growth of the Brazilian economy."

Bonner illustrates the awareness and anger of the developing countries about these trade relations.

"Sometimes I wish I had never heard of the West, and that you had never heard of us. I wonder where we would be today? We would still be self-supporting and living peacefully. We would still have a lot of our resources."

"Perhaps our own tribal systems would still be operating along 'native' lines, as you would say. But we get pretty tired of your telling us how to run our show. We want you to stop exploiting us. Stop pretending you know what our real problem is."

"But we welcome you as a brother if you come to really see us and if you are really interested in what our problems are. Culture is not the real barrier - the barrier exists when you refuse to listen."

Are you the listener?

Or are you the barrier?

God calls his people to listen and to act. A Christian's awareness of this responsibility involves not only feeding the poor, giving drink to the thirsty, shelter to the stranger and clothes to the naked (Matthew 25:35-37), but ministering as Christ did also to a person's spiritual and emotional value, sufficient nutrition, government policies, development in poorer countries, work of foreign aid organizations, the needs and plans of people in poor countries.

Only then can we act out of a desire to help instead of out of guilt. It is only through a basic change in attitude that the present structure and contributing factors can be altered effectively.

responsibly and not as if we deserve more than we need. With the money saved monthly from not overeating, from shutting off unnecessary lights, and from lowering the furnace a few degrees (especially at night), one can enhance that money's value by giving it to foreign aid.

Check out where your money is invested - in banks or companies. Do they contribute to the exploitation of

Of the 4 billion people on the earth 2 billion are starving or suffering from malnutrition

Make friends with immigrants, refugees, and foreign students from developing countries, learn from them.

Give financial support to foreign aid agencies whose work has a direct impact on the spiritual and physical needs of poor people in developing countries. This entails first asking questions of them - What is its political affiliation? What percentage of donations go to administration costs? How are its funds used?

As a variety of support plans are available, one may choose to feed a child, a family, or village through sponsorship.

As well one can choose to assist in a village or land improvement programs (i.e. small businesses that are productive and provide good salaries to its workers, irrigation systems so that more food can be grown).

Manage resources - food, energy - developing countries? If you don't support their interests, close your account, or sell your shares, and invest in others that are more in line with your way of thinking.

As Canadian citizens we have voting rights and representation on governmental decision-making bodies. Voting is not your only responsibility, becoming informed of our government's policies, and in turn informing them of our objections or support is important as well, especially in areas affecting the food situation.

The problem may seem overwhelming and impossible to solve. But improvement is possible if we change our attitudes and actions.

Let's take one step first, then allow the others to follow as global awareness of hunger becomes a way of life to us.

Thanks to Queen's Christian Fellowship.

Midwinter Night Dream

by Barry Thorne

Shakespeare's not your thing? The current Drama Department production of A Midsummer Night's Dream may change your mind! Director Bud Burkom's student production catches the spirit of Shakespeare's beloved fantasy and carries its Saturday night audience willingly into a fairland of romance and midsummer madness.

From a somewhat shaky landing, the production gathered strength, built firmly from scene two on, and seldom faltered to its joyous conclusion. The secret recipe of this intelligent and vivacious assault on Shakespeare is a cluster of strong key roles; a Tolkein-like medley of reality and illusion; good costumes, lighting, and music; effective atmosphere; a brilliantly simple fairland set, and language delivery issuing from understanding not rote.

A Midsummer Night's Dream is a play within a play within a play. Its Chinese Box Structure of reality and illusion, art and nature, love and madness, and youth and experience places considerable demands upon a young cast. So Julian Cunningham, Jane Freeman, Kathryn Bronskill, Matt Kerr, and Dan McLaughlin deserve a round of applause for meeting the play's special challenge so well.

Though Cunningham's Duke Theseus role in the framing story seemed leaden in the opening scene, once he assumed the role of Oberon, King of the Fairies, all was well. The play took flight with the Act Two arrival of Dan McLaughlin, as Puck, that "merry wanderer of the night," lester to Oberon. In some ways, the Burkom production revolves around the special stage relationship between these two strong actors, whose vibrations raised it occasionally to professional level.

Spontaneous gags and applause greeted some delightful bits of stage business usually involving this strong pair. When Puck magically produces the purple flower, whose juice makes love madness, he seems to toss it to Oberon. But it vanishes and then appears smoothly into Oberon's hand ten feet away. Beautifully done and only one of several deft touches much appreciated by an obviously knowledgeable audience.

As Puck, McLaughlin bounds effortlessly, swings gracefully onto stage, performs his slight-of-hand deftly, and delivers his dialogue in an appealingly natural manner. Cunningham carries a heavy double role with no perceptible loss of energy or effect. If anything, his performance improves.

As Hippolyta/Titania, Jane Freeman is called upon to look statuesquely appealing, which she does well, and acts as a muted counterpoint at both the frame and not always easy to follow from the back of the theatre. As Demetrius, the initiator of musical women in the wood outside Athens, Hume Baugh has some unexpected strengths. As the heavy Elizabethian father, John Datoe plays a strong role, which might have benefitted from the make-up of age. He seems also a likely candidate for Bottom.

The third box of the play's puzzle is the mechanicals, rough Athenian tradesmen preparing an hilarious play for the entertainment of the courtiers during the marriage festivities. Played by John Datoe, Hugh Dundas, Matt Moody, Matt Kerr, Bill Kitcher, and Steve Flett, the naive blunderers provide the burlesque level of the play's comedy. As Bottom, Matt Kerr is an appealing hunk, passing through the orchestral demands of a difficult role with Bottom-like aplomb. His sojourn in the bower of the fairy Queen, all the while sporting Reg Bronskill's involved the faeries, especially in Sandra Aitken's choreography, Puck, or Oberon.

The decision to place Titania sleeping onstage and right through and in the middle of the slapstick of the Mechanicals is a mistake, I think, from which the production has a little difficulty in recovering. While the costumes of Puck, Titania, Theseus, Hippolyta, and the faeries are extremely good, the Oberon costume is counterproductive, and the modern slacks of the minor male leads, an irritating puzzlement. Though the theory of tradesmen in bare chests and overalls is understandable, the intended effect is not achieved in a manner satisfactory to the controlling strategy of the production.

As with many amateur and student productions the difference between levels of experience among the cast is apparent, though this production goes a long way toward cushioning the gap. The intrusion of low level music from outside the theatre was occasionally distracting.

Director Bud Burkom has once more met Shakespeare on his own terms and then carried them into the mid-twentieth century. If you have not seen a Shakespearean production before, see this one. It may give you an appetite for more. If you love Shakespeare, you need not fear that this little production will spoil the play for you. In fact, with its echoes of Brook and others, it may well give you something to carry away, at least the recollection that "we ARE such things as dreams are made on!" A Midsummer Night's Dream continues nightly from the 24th to the 27th, in Convocation Hall, with curtain, promptly we hope, at 8:30 p.m.

"The lunatic, the lover, and the poet Are of imagination all compact."

fairly levels of the action.

Once the four young lovers appear, another level of reality begins. As Hermia, Kathryn Bronskill is a fiery termagant, whose expertise with Shakespearean dialogue has not diminished since her sparkling little role as Maria in a downtown production of Twelfth Night. As her lover, Lysander, Burke Lawrence is physically appealing but not quite so comfortable with period language. As her rival, Helena, Susan Brockman is a convincing shy and doe-like opposite, but her dialogue delivery is marvelous wire mesh donkey head mask, is one of the delights of an entertaining production.

A review would not be complete without acknowledgement of the role of the faeries, whose choreography, singing, costuming, and dialogue have much to do with sustaining the production's atmosphere. Jane Darragh, Leslie Titcomb, Elizabeth McDonald, and Cindy Hill are a sparkling delight. Their roles suggest the key to the production's success in staging Shakespeare. They take their roles seriously. No camp, no in-jokes, just the right sort of confection to appeal to a decade interested in fantasy, fairy land, and romance.

On the negative side of the ledger, a few improvements might be made to tighten and point the production. Curtain was late on Saturday, a small thing but usually important to an audience. Blocking occasionally was delivering lines to off or back stage, an unnecessary extra burden, to the movement was sometimes mechanically awkward. The most effective stage movement usually

Ballet successfully fuses body and will

by Julia Grunau

Karen Kain, Frank Augustyn, and the Montreal-based Entre Six Dance Company performed before two sellout audiences last Thursday and Friday nights, proving that Canadian ballet is exciting ballet.

In a tour that had been planned two years before its birth, Lawrence Gradus' maverick troupe and the National Ballet of Canada superstars brought home-grown innovation and style to Kingston balletomanes and skeptics alike. Gradus' reputation for originality and creativity, recognized across Canada and in dance capitals such as New York City, proved itself over and over again. His ballets were, for the most part, entertaining and amusing. The dancers were enthusiastic and precise.

Kain and Augustyn were inevitably spotlighted in a Pas de Deux (Flower Festival at Genzano) that was so charming in its simplicity, so tender in its little love story, and so flawlessly performed that the audience burst into applause several times during its performance. They pulled their weight superbly in the two Gradus ballets they graced as well. Kain was never more a sensual fusion of thistle and down; Augustyn was all dynamism and dime stops. And the Entre Six dancers rose to their challenge by surrounding them with vignettes of ballets, tours-de-forces of ballets, and strong, subtle support.

fairly modern in conception and execution. It was these ballets that were the most satisfying to watch and were the best performed.

The least successful was unfortunately the first, based on an interpretation of an eighteenth-

After "Taxi", Chapin's metre is still running

Harry Chapin, versatile performer and philanthropist, will be at Queen's in concert on Wednesday January 24 at Jock Hartly Arena. Appearing in the Harry Chapin band will be Steve Chapin, piano and vocals; John Wallace bass and vocals; Doug Walker, lead guitar and vocals; Kim Scholes, cello, and Howard Fields, drums. Probably best known for his song "Taxi" from his debut Elektra Album Heads and Tales his career has mushroomed during the seventies.

He began singing and writing with his family in Greenwich Village during the 60's. Since then he worked in the film industry and theatre as well as pursuing an active career in charity.

The story format that Chapin began within "Taxi" is reflected in his later works. In 1974 he released "Cats in the Cradle" from the Ventures and Balderdash album and in 1977 released a double album, Dance Band on the Titanic, which included eleven further story songs.

In between his successful recording career Chapin went to Broadway in 1975 with The Night That Made America Famous a multimedia show which won him two Toni Award nominations.

His latest album recording is Living Room Suite. In addition to his travelling band, Chapin has brought together a roster of studio and jazz artists representing the highest standards of creative performance.

Can. lit. gains forum in Readings

This Wednesday and Friday at Watson Hall there will be numerous readings by both students and guests, sponsored by Arts Week.

Stephanie J. Nynych will be featured on Wednesday as one of the guests. Having travelled for five years in Europe and the Middle East, she has taught creative writing at the Three Schools of Art since 1968.

Stephanie has done poetry readings at CBC, CHUM FM, high schools, universities, libraries and colleges since 1966. Her articles have appeared in various magazines and newspapers and her book reviews have been in Books in Canada and The Toronto Star. Her publications include Reflections on Love, ...and like I see it (a novel), Scientific Study and By Death Never Leave Me.

On Friday, at 2:00 p.m. the guest reader will be Joe Rosenblatt, a resident of Toronto. Mr. Rosenblatt teaches creative writing at the Three Schools of Art and is the editor of "Dialog". His works have appeared in such publications as Canadian Forum, Fiddlehead, and The Nation, to name a few. ## Winds and strings allied

by Fiona Grieve

Two groups well known to Kingston audiences join together Thursday, January 25th to provide what promises to be a top notch concert. Both the York Winds and the Orford String Quartet are made up of experienced young musicians with a wide repertoire.

Started in 1972, the York Winds are artists in residence at York University and have toured widely in Canada and overseas. They have been recognized for a "rare blend of technical polish and infectious enthusiasm", particularly in the realm of new and lesser-known works.

Pairing their clean, swiftly-moving woodwind sound with a string quartet, the Performing Arts Centre has come up with an appealing match. Music lovers take note! The second concert in the Grant Hall Masters series should not be missed.

"Look into my eyes"

by Karen McNeil

You don't believe in hypnotism? Had you been in attendance at Grant Hall on Friday, the Great Pecarve might very well have changed your mind. After a rather slow start, Pecarve managed to delight and amaze a somewhat less than capacity crowd for over three hours.

The first part of the show, which consisted of various feats of memory, (such as word or card order retention), demonstrated Pecarve's very agile mind, but was stretched out to a point where the audience became restless. When the hypnotism began, however, the audience's total attention was captured and was held right until the end of the show.

Through suggestions given to the subjects after they had been put into what appeared to be a deep sleep, Pecarve managed to take them on a make-believe trips and provoke astonishing responses from them. The star of the show, aside from Pecarve, was a student from RMC who was brought up to the stage after it was discovered that Pecarve had inadvertently hypnotized him as he sat in the audience. He sobbed while "watching" a sad movie, did an excellent job of conducting a make-believe orchestra, and heckled Pecarve from the back of the hall until "arrested" by a half-naked "RCMP officer" on an imaginary horse.

At the end of the show, Pecarve showed slides of an operation on a woman who had been hypnotized by him, and thus needed no anesthetic. Although the slides were not very interesting, most of the audience was content to rest and view them because the rest of the show had been so excellent.

Karen Kain interview

by Julia Grunau

Why did you decide to dance with the Entre Six company?

I had seen them before and I thought they were very promising. They're performing a job that other companies can't do, because they're the right size to fit into lots of centres that the National Ballet can't go to. I think their artistic director (Lawrence Gradus) is a talented choreographer, and I think the company is very professional.

What was it like working with Frederick Ashton when you did "La Fille Mal Gardée"?

Oh, it was fun. He's quite an amazing man. He's not exactly young anymore, he was seventy-three. I think when he was working with us and he was there all day every day coaching and telling us funny stories, and then in evenings he was gung-ho to have parties, and visit, and he really likes young people, he likes to be around young people, and I enjoy him a lot. He's wonderful.

What exactly do you think you're giving the Entre Six company?

I don't know if we're giving them anything. I mean, I think they, like any group of dancers, like to have new faces around now and then for inspiration; you'll find the same in any company no matter what size. It's fun to have new people around. I don't think we're really giving them anything other than that.

I saw you last week at Western and again last night. Do you feel there was any difference in the performances?

Oh, there's differences every night. This (the Grand Theatre) is more like a theatre. (Western's Alumni Hall) didn't have theatre lighting or anything. That makes a big difference for us. I like to feel a sense of theatre, to feel that it's possible to make a little magic, and it isn't really when you don't have all the other elements working for you. We had better facilities here, except it was much colder. Which really is unfair to dancers, to make them dance in this cold. It makes me very angry. It's hard enough to get yourself going and get over the stiffness and everything, and then when it's freezing cold.

What do you enjoy most in dancing with this company?

I've been to this theatre with the National Ballet and we did a repertoire that was squeezed onto the stage. I don't mind dancing in small theatres when you're bringing something that fits. It's much more pleasurable. So I enjoy that. It's nice to work in a very small group for a change, rather than an enormous... although I love the National Ballet and I don't want to criticize it in any way... it's just different. I think Frank and I are always game to try anything new.

What do you think of the Entre Six company as a whole?

I think they're very professional, they're very serious about their work, they work really hard, and I like them. I like what they do, and I like their attitude, and I think they're doing a great job.

Play tells of hockey, history and the Habs

by Julian Cunningham

For the second time this year, Kingston will be given a history lesson, a la Rick Salutin, as Theatre Passe Muraille glides into the Grand Theatre with their production of Les Canadiens.

Our first Tesson was offered by the Queen's Drama Dept. in November, as they weaved their way through the story of the Upper Canada Rebellion in 1837: The Farmers' Revolt. Salutin was in attendance for this production, and in a seminar conducted at the Drama Dept., he revealed the thematic impetus behind 1837: his hope to see a rebellion in the Canadian theatre similar to that of the Canadian farmers he depicted. It is an obsession with Salutin, this idea of a thoroughbred domestic drama. It was not clearly defined in 1837.

His next play, Les Canadiens, offers a much stronger medium through which he can express his viewpoint, while telling a damn fine story. The medium is hockey, and the story is about one of the greatest teams ever to play the game.

Like 1837, Les Canadiens was developed improvisationally, this time by the Centaur Theatre with the help of Rick Salutin and Ken Dryden. The purpose of the play is to explore the mythical quality with which the Canadiens have pervaded every aspect of Quebec's cultural mainstream: "Our idea was to examine that feeling with a view that it is changing...that, increasingly, the Canadiens are becoming just a hockey team instead of a sort of cultural focal point," Dryden said in an interview.

All the typical Salutin elements are here: a handful of actors handling dozens of roles, the swift succession of scenes; the thoroughly unrealistic set (in this case a miniature hockey rink that doubles as The Plains of Abraham); and of course the same sociological and historical reflection that Salutin explored with such delightful thoroughness in 1837.

Past reviewers agree upon certain strengths of the play, particularly the "hockey games"—played by actors donned in roller skates and running shoes—and the recreation of legendary figures who skated through the early decades of the Montreal dynasty: Howie Morenz, Aurélien Joliat and Georges Vézina. They also cite the "Rocket" Richard saga (his battles with Clarence Campbell, his expulsion, and the subsequent Forum riot) as a brilliant piece of staging.

Les Canadiens won an exuberant reception with its initial performances at the Centaur Theatre in Montreal, where the audiences (fans?) "cheered" the Habs on through their illustrious history as depicted in the play. Its stay in the "Rocket" Richard saga (his battles with Clarence Campbell, his expulsion, and the subsequent Forum riot) as a brilliant piece of staging.

Montreal architect, developer and preservationist for various associations across North America and the director of Heritage Canada, takes a personal interest in the Baroque Style. As a result, during the period of the exhibition students will have the opportunity to examine several architectural problems from first-hand evidence such as the extent of the European Baroque influence upon English architecture.

The public is urged to attend this exhibition which is being held at the Art Centre from January 28th until February 22nd. It is the first time that these works will be available for public display and it is a unique opportunity for all those interested. A gala opening will be held on Sunday January 28th at 2:30 p.m. with an illustrated lecture by Pierre duPrey entitled "Borromini and Hawksmoor: The Case for English Baroque Architecture" at 3:30 p.m.

Blues put Gaels on ice

Chris Cuthbert

The Queen's Golden Gaels hockey team were victims of the powerful Varsity Blues bench Friday evening in Toronto.

Queen's stayed close for two periods but Toronto scored four third period goals en route to a 6-1 OUA eastern division triumph.

The victory capped a special "Coaches Appreciation Night" in Toronto honouring the coaching fraternity which has guided the Blues' dynasty over the past 60 years. On hand for the pre-game festivities were past coaches Ace Bailey, Bill Haler and Joe Kane, as well as Tom Watt, the present day mentor of the Blues.

In the game Queen's stayed close to Toronto for forty minutes before being overwhelmed by the awesome Toronto attack in the final frame.

Doug Caines, last year's Canadian college player of the year, scored the only goal of the first period as he slid a perfect twenty foot backhand past Queen's goal tender Dan Galbraith.

The Blues went two up in the middle frame on a screened point shot from Stelio Zupancich. The period was also characterized by Toronto's strong penalty killing as Queen's rarely threatened on three power play opportunities.

The strength of the Varsity bench began to tell in the final period as Toronto's persistent pressure resulted in four scores.

Rick Tarasuk and Dan D'Alvise scored Blues' goals in the first seven minutes of the third period to all but put the match out of reach. D'Alvise's tally resulted from a faceoff in Queen's defensive zone as he cleanly won the draw and rifled the puck between Galbraith's pads.

Blues Dan D'Alvise beats Dan Galbraith for Varsity's 4th goal.

Paul Stothart put the Gaels on the scoresheet midway through the period beating Varsity goaltender Dave Jenner with a 25 foot blast but that was the only goal Queen's could muster.

The Blues rubbed it in with two goals in the final minutes of the contest Geoff Shaw and Brad Theisson beat an overworked Galbraith within a 63 second span to complete the scoring.

Toronto outshot Queen's 38-24, a good indication of the Blues' territorial domination.

The Gaels now must ready themselves for a weekend doubleheader with the York Yeoman which should decide the third and final playoff spot in the eastern division.

GAELS SHORTS - Coach Fred O'Donnell was pleased with the work of his third line of Steve Watt, Gary Brandt and John Nightingale.

Gaels rebound after loss to York

Toronto—Queen's Golden Gaels basketball team split weekend encounters in Toronto. The Gaels were defeated by a strong York team on Friday night while Saturday afternoon Queen's came out on top in an exhibition game against Erindale College. This brings the team's overall record to 7-7.

At York the Gaels were outscored 103-56 by the number one ranked team in the nation. The Yeomen, who boast allstars Dave Coulthard, Bo Pelech, and 6'9" Lonnie Ramati, were coming off an impressive tournament win in the "Naismith Classic" over the holidays. The Gaels went into the game hoping to gain some valuable experience that will help them mature into a legitimate contender.

Coach Tom Frood stated, "playing against a team like York you begin to realize how hard you have to work to reach the top. This game can only help our team as it shows the players what calibre of basketball has to be reached to get to the top."

The game itself was a battle between a young aggressive Queen's squad with plenty of desire against a York team with superior ability. Queen's scraped and clawed with York throughout the first half, keeping the game close. Queen's could not sustain the balanced York attack for long, though as Dave Coulthard and Bo Pelech started hitting jump shots from outside of twenty feet.

"It's pretty tough to defend against a team that shoots so well from the outside when they have a 6'9" giant (Ramati) inside. We have to give them something and the percentages are with keeping them outside", stated Frood.

The Gaels, whose tallest man is 6'4", had little chance stopping Ramati, an American from Yonkers, New York. The score became immaterial as the game went on as Frood gave all his players a chance to play against this superb York team. Mike Kirby and Mark Gagnon scored 14 points apiece to lead the Gaels. Gagnon, a former St. Francis Xavier player, is improving with every game following a three year layoff from Varsity competition.

At Erindale the Gaels never trailed in posting 82-70 victory. Coach Frood expressed a very important idea pertaining to confidence: "Playing a team like Erindale the guys are confident they can win, if we can instill this confidence in ourselves in our own league there is no reason why we shouldn't make the playoffs."

The Gaels' balanced attack was led by Jeff Folkard with 14 points and Jamie Pittfield with 10. KEY NOTES - The Gaels home game Tuesday night at Bartlett Gymnasium is a 6:00 pm start. Coach Frood and his players realize this is the most important game of the season.

"We must win in order to have any chance of making the playoffs", stated Frood.

Hockey Gals unbeaten

Staff
The Queen's Hockey Gals are in first place in the OWIAA. At the mid-season mark the Gals held a 9-0 record. This weekend at McMaster that record was extended to 11-0.

Not only were the McMaster games a fresh start after the Christmas break, they were also an initiation for new coach Dave Best. Dave recently replaced Terry Miller who coached the Gals for a year and a half. Over the holidays Terry accepted a position with Can-Am Hockey Group as a scout for European Talent.

Friday night was Queen's first game against McMaster this season. The final score was 5-0 in Queen's favour, but the victory was well-earned. Janean Sergeant connected for the only goal of the first period.

The remaining goals were all scored in the second period by Cathy Eberts (2), Betty Reid and Kim Ferguson.

Two minutes into Saturday's game Mac jumped into the lead, and it was not until the end of the period that Janean Sergeant tied the match. The play was rough, both teams looking for the go-ahead goal.

The Gals were faced with their toughest situation of the season, finding themselves out hustled by the Mac squad. However, Queen's improved their play considerably in the third period. It was not until the last 90 seconds of the game that Anne Symes notched Queen's winning goal for a final score of 2-1.

This weekend the Gals host two matches against Guelph. Game times are at 8pm on Friday night and 1:30pm on Saturday.

Mac was latest sacrifice to Gals' 11 game winning streak.

Gaels win York Inv.

Jeff Bellinger

Queen's Track and Field athletes usually perform quite well at the York University Invitational held at the CNE in Toronto and this year's meet was no exception. Queen's competitors captured a total of six gold medals, two in women's competition and four in the men's competition. Several athletes came up with personal best performances and others competed well up to their early season expectations.

Ann Webster won the only gold on the track for the Queen's girls with a personal best (Queen's Record) 2:10.0 800 metres.

Karen Rahn took the only gold medal for Queen's in the field events by out distancing everyone in the shot put. LeeAnn Roland, Ann MacMillan, Kathy Clark, Bev Code and several other girls all ran well for Queen's in their respective races.

In the men's competition, Queen's again exerted its distance prowess by taking the gold in both the 1500 and 3000 metres. Claus Rinne's 3:57 clocking gave him the best 1500 meter time of the day and Jeff Bellinger 8:33.9 was good enough for first place in the 3000 m. The 4x600 meter relay team of Kam Potter, Bob Graham, Jim Wilson and Charlie Hitchon pulled off a big win over U of T and Buffalo State.

Yet another gold medal was won by Louko in the men's pole vault.

Dale Frieson ran a 3:58.5 in a special 1500 meter time trial to determine the entrants in the Toronto Star-Maple Leaf International Games Meet's Canadian 1500 meter special. His time may very well be good enough to gain entry but no official word has arrived on the matter as of press time.

Sandy McTuley's 8:38 a personal best gave him a bronze in the 3000 meter just ahead of Clair Gale and Mike Deguidu.

The men's team has won the last two outdoor championships, but have yet to put a stake to the indoor title. The women's team, with the addition of some fine rookies and several multi talented veterans, will definitely be in close contention for the title this year. With the successes at York, Queen's is again on the trail of those illusive OUAA-OWIAA Indoor Track and Field Championship.

Figure skaters settle for third

Shaun Hopkins

On Saturday Jock Harty Arena was the site of the Queen's Seventh Annual Figure Skating Invitational.

Western University was the overall winner with 195 points, Toronto placed second with 155 points and Queen's finished a disappointing third with 146 points.

The Queen's team did, however, have their share of individual winners. A first place victory was scored by Cathy Hunt and Judy McGillivray in the Sr. similar pairs event. Second place finishes went to Louis Gignac - Novice Men, Pam Booth and Brenda Cassman - Novice Similar Dance, Marilyn Snell - Intermediate Singles and along with Pattie MacDonald in the Sr. Similar Pairs. Patti MacDonald also placed second in the Jr. Interpretive. Jane Bracken and John Segal placed second in the novice mixed dance. Queen's skaters also finished with six thirds at the event.

The next competition for the Queen's team will be February 2nd at McMaster and the OWIC finals will be held February 9th, also at McMaster.

The team will be striving to improve on their weekend performance in order to regain Ontario university figure skating supremacy.

Gaels skaters had their moments but team placed 3rd overall.

Beatty leads the way

Gaels king of the hill

Queen's alpine skiers completed the second Ontario Universities race at Georgian Peaks over the weekend with the girls finishing in a 4th place tie with McMaster and the men winning their second race in a row.

The race - the Waterloo Invitational Slalom - was run under good conditions. Andrea Esson of the University of Ottawa outpaced the field on the women's two-run course several seconds ahead of the second place finisher from Guelph. Her sister Nancy, racing for Queen's, was 3rd and Nancy Firstbrook came in 7th. Other Queen's girls were farther down the list but their aggregate 105 team points were only 12 behind the winning Western Ontario team. Trent was second and Waterloo third with 106 points (only one ahead of Queen's). The University of Toronto, formerly a powerhouse in OWIAA competition, finished in last place in a ten-team field.

Queen's men won their team title with an impressive 169 points to second-place Toronto's 150 points. Waterloo was 3rd, Trent 4th, and Western Ontario 5th. Twelve teams in all competed.

Dave Beatty's 1st place finish in a fast total time of 98.40 seconds for two runs was the highlight of the meet from the Gaels' point of view but other Queen's racers weren't far behind. Kevin Titus' 6th place and Tim Wardrop's 9th spot combined with Rob Gripper's strong showing gave the Gaels another convincing team victory.

Queen's now holds the lead in the OUAA standings with a perfect 20 points to Waterloo's 17, Trent and Toronto tied at 13, Wilfrid Laurier with 10, and seven other schools trailing. A win in the Ontario Universities series is worth 10 points in the OUAA standings; 2nd place, 9 points, and so on. Each team is allowed to discard its two worst results over the six-race series and thus the maximum possible points total is 40. Almost anything can happen under this system and the final results usually are not determined until the last two races of the season.

The third race of the series will be the Trent Invitational giant slalom on January 26th, again at Georgian Peaks.

Swimmers splash to win

by Ken Davies

The men's swim team continued its winning ways by dominating the double-dual meet held in the Queen's pool on Saturday against McGill and Plattsburg.

The Gaels opened the meet with a substantial victory in the 400 M medley relay on the combined effort of Tim Dennis, Bubbles Lawrynuk, John Lane and George Bovell. This event set the tone for the meet as all members of the Queen's team contributed to the overall victory. The one individual effort worthy of special praise was that of newcomer Andy Hasagawa with his victory in the 200 M breast stroke.

Other Queen's victories went to Jack Raleigh (800 and 400 freestyle), Bovell (200 freestyle), Dennis (200 M IM), and Martin Feiertag (100 freestyle). Swimmers contributing to the Gaels' fine showing were Chris Leuchter, Rick Cockfield and in particular, Drew Fagan, whose 200 M butterfly was an inspiration to the whole team.

Queen's also dominated the diving events with Glenn Orton and John Taliano placing 1-2 in the 1 M event and Mark Critchley and Orton repeating the feat in the difficult 3M event. Queen's sees its next action against Western this weekend in London.

Gaels host Canton

The Queen's Golden Gaels will be playing host to an American squad this Tuesday at Jock Harty Arena.

The Gaels will entertain Canton in a rare late afternoon match. Faceoff time is 5:30 p.m.

So far this season the Gaels are winless against American opponents with losses against St. Lawrence University, Clarkson and Cortland.

The match should provide a good tuneup for the Gaels crucial weekend series with the York Yeomen.

Vball men are hot

by Dave Tod
During the weekend, the Queen's Men's Volleyball team, ranked number four in the nation by the CIAU, travelled to Toronto to grapple with the Ryerson Rams. True to their championship form the team swept the two best-of-five matches in six games straight.

On Friday evening the Gals entered the Ryerson gym ready to win. Thirty-five minutes later the Vball men had steamrolled over Ryerson 15-2, 15-1, 15-4. It was difficult to single out any outstanding player as the entire squad played exceptionally well. Dave Morton, Brian Macleod, and Mike Cooper provided the team with an impenetrable defense, while Henke Meijer, Glen Markham and Peter Skalski capably handled the spiking duties.

The match on Saturday was a continuation of the Gals' dominating playing style. This time the match took only one half hour to play and the Vball team won 15-4, 15-2, 15-2. Coach Smola was enthusiastic about the teams performance to date (8 wins - 0 losses) and was very pleased when the CIAU announced its national rankings on Thursday. It should be noted here that the number 1 and 2 ranked clubs, U.B.C. and Manitoba, field about one half of the players on Canada's national team.

Next week, the Gals travel to Penn St. to participate in a 12 team tournament against top ranked NCAA volleyball teams. If things continue to go as smoothly for the Queen's V-ball team as they have been, a trip to the nationals seems assured and the possibility of CIAU championship is not out of the question.

Gals squash

Queen's Gals squashed 11 teams to take first place in the annual MacMaster Invitational.

The three day tournament, in which teams from southern and western Ontario and Pennsylvania competed, saw Jane Forbes-Roberts, Claire Smith, Sandy Koerner, Natalie Sneyd and Sandra Smith win every round, giving the Queen's team a final victory over Waterloo. Each player put out an excellent performance, however special mention goes to Sandra Smith who did not lose a single match throughout the three days.

The bottom line

When students get a chance to vote on the Spring referendum they will face a complex question regarding honoraria. Last issue, the history of the honoraria debate was summarized and mention was made of some arguments supporting honoraria increases. In this issue, we discuss the possible effects of such an increase.

The demands of major extracurricular commitments often induce involved students to cut down on their academic workload, thus extending their program into extra semesters.

That means higher educational costs to the individuals concerned. Honoraria reduce these financial pressures, and reward involved students for their efforts. Is this necessary? The problems this campus has had of late in recruiting qualified students into time-consuming voluntary jobs indicates that yes, it is.

Although three teams have chosen to run for the AMS Executive this year, three out of the previous four Executives were acclaimed. The Journal has consistently faced problems in finding students willing to take on senior editorships. The Queen's Entertainment Agency has suffered occasionally from this same recruiting malaise. It is to these difficulties that honoraria are addressed.

The proposed honoraria increases would still leave the AMS Executive and Journal and Tricolour Editors below the compensations of most Ontario universities. And the increases would not mean an increase in student fees. They would consist of about 17c of the Journal's $4.50 levy and about seven and a half cents from the AMS Fee.

As tiny as these amounts seem they represent a vital factor in the future of our various services. The size and complexity of the AMS, Journal, Tricolour and QEA demand the best their organizers can give them. They will gradually deteriorate unless they are sufficiently compensating to guarantee competition, for their positions and the students involved are then freed to give their time for everyone's benefit.

From rags to riches

Where once walked faded jeans and a sloppy pullover now strides a snappy three-piece suit adorning a freshly scrubbed face that radiates with apprehensive anticipation of "The Job Interview".

The class of '79 is now collectively approaching that most traumatic point of a university career — graduation — after which they are to be cast into what has been referred to as, "The real world".

Way back in September prospective graduates were assaulted with the ominous forebodings that they should be soon contemplating their fast approaching careers. They realized all too well that procrastination is a fatal frivolity in the seedy sub-culture of "job-search".

Commerce students soon had visions of becoming one of "Proctor and Gamble's Secret Ingredients", applying the skills they had honed playing that great business game in the sky of Dunning Hall.

Engineers soon began to realize that most of them would soon be poking holes in Alberta in contribution to Premier Lougheed's Heritage Fund. From Exxon to Slumberger they have gone selling their wares to a host of recruiting officers.

Artscis, however, have begun to wilt noticeably. It is hard to retain one's quiet smugness about undertaking an "education" rather than a "training" when the day of graduation finally arrives. Unemployment is nothing to be philosophical about, and unfortunately, Locke, Hobbes, and Rousseau do not go very highly remunerated at the moment.

The graduating class, artsci, commie, and plumber alike, is facing some tough decisions these days.

So have compassion for the

The burden of creativity

Sweven, has undoubtedly filled a void on the Queen's campus as a forum for creative writing. Formerly published as an annual supplement to the Journal, it reappeared in magazine form financed predominantly by other student organizations. Although this year's Sweven suffered difficulties, not unlike the problems surrounding any new venture, it did have a lot of "ground to cover."

The total absence of creative writing courses at Queen's combined with the predilection of campus publications against this form of expression necessitated the existence of Sweven.

However, to further encumber the editors with the responsibility of soliciting funds from various campus groups whose priorities may change from year to year is to frustrate the publication of this necessary magazine. This is not to suggest that Sweven should eliminate advertising but rather that it should be guaranteed funds to supplement this revenue.

By assuring the editors the security of funds would permit them to concentrate on producing a first rate literary magazine for the Queen's community.

Towards this end, a question should be put on the February referendum asking students to defray half the costs of publication through a 35c increase in the student interest fee.

Through a direct student subsidy, Sweven's readers and contributors would be assured a needed publication of good quality.

necked fellows and smartly attired lasses of the class of '79 as they march off together towards the Job Placement Centre this term. While that firmly knotted material around the neck is a valued vestment for some, to others it seems more like a noose. Graduation is but a step away. After that, it is the great beyond, or of course, there is always grad school.

Computer system a problem

Overworked and nearly unique

by Eric Evans

The university has been forced to modify its computer system again in order to adequately handle the work demands made of it this term. The computer, a Burroughs B6700, has been criticized repeatedly since it was first purchased for 1.2 million dollars in 1972.

Criticism initially centered on the system's unreliability but this problem has been considerably improved over the last few years. A more enduring criticism concerns the system's incompatibility with computing systems at other universities.

A member of the Senate Computing Committee (SCC), who asked to remain unidentified, pointed out that only five other schools in North America use systems with comparable software (programs). Most other schools use IBM systems, and as a result, the majority of programs for subjects such as economics and politics are unuseable at Queen's without costly program re-writing. It was suggested by a professor in the Economics Department that this could be a factor in preventing high calibre staff from coming to Queen's.

According to Dave McNaughton, Director of the Computing Centre, the system will not be replaced until 1982. Computing systems are usually considered to have a ten year life, and the Burroughs system has been budgeted accordingly. The system will not be entirely paid off until 1982, when the long range computing budget will allow for the purchase of a new system. In the meantime, said one professor, "we're stuck with it."

The modifications made this week include a 20% increase in memory space (the system has been running at only 60 to 70% capacity) and the adoption of a second path to disk

The much criticized computer system will not be replaced until at least 1982

Health budget reviewed

Kim Fennell

The AMS is currently in a battle to get student representation in budget reviews for the Student Health Services Queen's students each pay $10.00 annually for the service, but are lacking an effective voice in deciding how the money is spent, according to some critics.

The Senate Committee on Student Health Services (SCSHS) has been looking over the budget recently and has suggested that the service could be run more cheaply and efficiently.

This has sparked criticisms from Dr. H.W. Greendge, Director of the Student Health Service and Finn Bogstad, Director of Student Services, who say the committee should not even be reviewing the Health budget. They have asked the Senate Operations Review Committee to look into the issue and define the mandate of the SCSHS.

Dr. Greendge feels the students should have a say as to what kind of health service they're receiving and if they're getting their money's worth, but, he added, "We don't think the students should be involved in the management of funds."

The budget review has, in the past, come under the auspices of the Student Services Directors Council. It is headed by Bogstad and consists of the directors of the five student services on campus. The three AMS Executive members have also been included on the council.

But Dave Brown, AMS President, says this is not good enough. "We require the intensive budget review process which is going on in the Senate Committee. As to whether the service can be run more efficiently, I'm not sure, but I think the questions should be asked and answered. The AMS Executives has to answer for every dollar of the student interest fee spent and students have to know

Attention: Candidates

Candidates for all AMS, faculty and society elections should submit their campaign statements NO LATER THAN 5PM, Tuesday, January 30.

Statements must be typed (set typewriter margins for 75 spaces) and will not be accepted if they exceed 20 lines. Please staple separate sheets together and ensure that your name and the position you are running for are typed at the top.

Photographs will be taken ON WEDNESDAY, January 31 between 9AM and 4PM. Come early to ensure that your picture is taken.

Statements will not be accepted after the deadline.

Physics Prof Dies

Elizabeth McClung

After a brief illness, Professor Dennis Roberts, of the Queen's Department of Physics, died on January 23. Roberts has been a professor at Queen's since 1947. He was well-known and well-liked by both staff and students because of the dedication and energy which he devoted to teaching. "Professor Roberts' organizational abilities, cheerfulness and energy will be sorely missed," stated Dr. Sayer, Head of the Department of Physics.

Professor Roberts was very interested in medical physics, and he brought this interest to Queen's. Many of his classes were enlivened by his knowledge of and enthusiasm for this branch of Physics. He worked with the Kingston Cancer Clinic as a radiation physicist, and did extensive work with the Department of Health on the subject of lead poisoning.

Roberts received his B.Sc. from the University of Bristol, and his Ph.D. from Birmingham in 1941. In 1944, he came to Canada and worked at the Mass Spectrometer Lab, at MacMaster University for two years. In 1946, he returned to London, where he worked for the National Institute for Medical Research for one year.

Professor Roberts will be missed by both staff and students alike. We would like to extend our sincere sympathy to Mrs. Roberts.

the where and why of every cent.

The student contribution to the service is about $100,000 each year. Queen's administration matches this amount and OHIP puts in another $200,000, bringing the total cost to $400,000.

John Koopman, AMS Vice-President of Operations, believes the service can be run on a cheaper method - one that would save the university about $250,000 a year. This would involve private practitioners operating a health service who would bill OHIP for 100% of the cost.

The obvious drawback is that OHIP would not pay for psychiatrists and ophthalmologists who visit the Student Health Service now. As Koopman stated, "It's a question of whether these services are worth the money students are paying."

Commerce Soc. Homeless

Janet Brick

Whatever became of the Commerce Faculty House? It appears to have been lost in the shuffle of University administration and red tape. The house received approval, first from the AMS, then the Vice-Principals, and most recently from Principal Watts. All approvals are based on the condition that space is available.

Ian Rutherford, Chairman of the Commerce House Committee, defines the purpose of the house. "The house will serve two purposes - to improve the functioning of the Commerce society and offer some new and different services as well. It will serve students in three areas - academic, social and administrative." Size and location of the house are critical, as the services to be operated from the house include executive and newspaper offices, a summer employment agency, a games and T.V. room and a lounge area. In keeping with an A.M.S. regulation, the Faculty House will have an open door policy.

Once the house received approval of the Vice-Principals, the Commerce House Committee began working with the University Housing Authority to estimate costs and design. Interior designers have submitted plans, and once an appropriate site has been found, it will take two to three months to implement these plans.

The problem lies in finding an appropriate location. The Commerce Housing Committee has applied for 164 University Ave., the old Newman House, which has been vacant for two years. A definite answer will not be available until the end of the month, but as it stands now the house will be available to the Commerce Society if the University does not need it for housing their own services. Dr. Love, Vice-Principal in charge of Services, states the Administration's position, saying "We're doing our best to economize on space right now and match facilities with needs."

Commerce Housing Committee is determined to have the house operating by next September, according to Ian Rutherford "whether we rent from the University or not."

Douglas Library

The hot spot at Queen's

Andrea Gordon

Attendance at the Douglas Library has drastically increased this year according to library administrators, who acknowledge its popularity among both Queen's students and Kingston residents.

Although results of the November survey have not yet been released, statistics from 1977 and 1978 fall terms reveal a significant rise in the number of people circulating throughout the building. Actual book circulation increased in October of this year by 24 percent while during Christmas exam week as many as four thousand people frequented the library daily as compared to the usual two to three thousand of December 1977.

"Perhaps there has been a change in the attitude of Queen's students," said AMS Commissioner Vickie Steele. Steele, who also works on the Senate Library Committee, feels that rising academic standards may have impelled a larger percentage of students towards more consistent study habits. She also pointed out that the restrictions on people other than Queen's students during Christmas exam week 1977 could have profoundly effected last year's figures.

David Wang, an administrator for Douglas Library, attributes this change in attendance primarily to the completion of the Reserve Room which significantly increased the library's seating capacity. Along with the "Purple Passion Pit" the Reserve Room is probably the most popular location in the library.

A change in teaching patterns may have occurred, and a recent shift towards the social sciences brings us more students who are in need of library materials, "Wang added.

"What students need are more places to study, because many of them find they can't work in their houses or in residence," says M. Mahalingam, Assistant Chief Librarian for Public Service.

The recent opening of Botterell Hall provides Queen's students with another attractive study area which has resulted in sky-rocketing attendance in the Health Sciences Library, drawing students away from both the Biology and Psychology Libraries. Similarly, the Art History and Education Libraries have experienced much larger attendance rates this year.

While the library tours remain popular and those employed at the circulation and information desks are busy, recent cut-backs are hard to deal with. However, Mr. Mahalingam stresses that although reductions in staff have been necessary, the hours of operation of the Douglas will be the last thing to be affected.

Jacket prices soar

by Karen McNeil

Leather jackets may soon be a thing of the past at Queen's. A world-wide shortage of leather has driven the price up so high as to make the cost of jackets prohibitive, and is causing a slowdown by the jacket manufacturers.

Although many people were shocked at the price tags on this year's models, Dave Finlay of Finlay's Sportshop has estimated that, if ordered by the faculties now, jackets for next year will cost approximately $145-$150, and if ordered in the fall, may reach as high as $170-$180.

However, people in Kingston are getting a good deal, according to Finlay. "Compared to other universities, Queen's students are paying much less. Also, the fact that the jackets are sold on an individual order basis, rather than us stocking them, keeps the prices down."

Unfortunately, most Arts students who ordered leather jackets this year have not yet received them. Promised them by the end of December, disgruntled students have been deluging Finlay's with calls daily. The problem lies, however, not with Finlay's, but with their Toronto suppliers, Avon Sportswear.

The first shipment of jackets arrived in mid-October but had to be sent back because the colour was much too pink. The jackets were re-dyed, and a swatch of material was sent to Ross Bartlett, ASUS President who approved the new colour. Compared with Arts jackets from last year, however, the '82 jackets still have a distinct pinkish tinge.

"It's like trying to match paint on a wall. The colours will never be exactly the same," said Finlay. "The kids who do have them are fairly pleased just to have the jackets on their backs."

Finlay also noted that had Ross Bartlett not ordered the jackets when he did last year, their arrival date would have been delayed even more. He suggested that, to avoid similar problems next year, the '83 jackets be ordered now.

OFS and Queen's

January 28 the Ontario Federation of Students will choose a new chairman to guide them through what will certainly be a difficult and crucial year. This is the second of a four part series written by AMS/OFS Liaison Officer Lyse Doucet on the history, roles and future of the organization.

The Ontario Federation of Students (OFS) represents approximately 160,000 college and university students. It encompasses fifteen of the sixteen Ontario universities - only the University of Ottawa excludes itself - and four of the twenty-two community colleges. In addition, the Ontario Graduate Association (OGA) and the Ontario College Commission (OCC) also hold memberships in the province-wide federation.

The OFS is composed of a nine-member Board of Directors with the Chairperson, presently Miriam Edelson, being employed on a full-time basis. The chairperson is assisted by eight students - a treasurer, a representative of the National Union of Students (NUS), of the Ontario Graduate Association, and five members at large. The Ontario College Commission, having joined OFS as of a conference held last weekend in Belleville, will also be granted an executive position.

It should also be noted that although Queen's is a member of OFS we do not belong to the National Union of Students (NUS). Queen's students voted against a membership in NUS on three subsequent referendums.

At present, only four universities abstain from membership although Ottawa and Guelph are preparing the question for referendum.

In addition to the Board of Directors, an eight-member full-time staff is maintained at the central OFS office in Toronto. The staff is comprised of the following: a secretary; three field-workers who are assigned to specific campuses and provide communication links; two researchers who prepare briefs, policy papers and proposals; an information officer who is responsible for press releases and is in constant contact with the legislature, government critics, the various ministries and so forth; and finally, an office co-ordinator-executive-assistant completes the office staff.

Unfortunately, given the wide variety of student concerns and the number of member organizations, the office staff is over-worked. It has become increasingly difficult to serve all requests and administer all projects immediately. There would appear to be only two possible solutions. Members must moderate their demands on the OFS or additional staff must be hired. The latter choice is not entirely feasible. OFS operates on a fixed budget and although financial difficulties are minimal at this time, the budget cannot accommodate such large additional expenses.

OFS maintains fourteen committees, the members of which are elected at conference plenaries. Their functions range from Academic Officers to Long-Term Planning and to International Students. Yet, although these groups facilitate an expansion of OFS activities, they also

OFS gears for conference

Executive to be chosen

Rob Southcott

This weekend, the Ontario Federation of Students will hold its winter conference in Waterloo.

The conference, to be held at Wilfrid Laurier University, will see the election of a new OFS executive. Also expected are several new proposals to expand information services, to set up better facilities for lobbying and to consider the establishment of a province-wide university prescription drug plan.

Queen's will send a delegation of seven people headed by AMS President Dave Brown. Brown stated that he hopes to have the OFS take a serious look at the proposals that the AMS has formulated. "It's going to be important for the federation to take a look at where it's been with regards to cutbacks and to evaluate work that's been done on the campuses," stated Brown.

The somewhat critical stance Queen's is taking is recognized by OFS Field Worker Maureen Reilly. "Queen's is saying more than other require funding. A committee has recently been struck to investigate the committee structure of OFS in general, and the ways in which finances can be best allocated. Many committees are seen to be unnecessary and not entirely effective.

Hence, like any large organization, the OFS encounters problems of a financial, organizational, and bureaucratic nature. With the co-operation and constructive input of member schools, these shortcomings can perhaps be overcome.

universities that they're not having input into the OFS," said Reilly, remarking that Queen's may not be as affected by tuition hikes as would be other smaller universities.

Reilly stated that she sees the upcoming conference as extremely important to the future of the OFS. Reilly stated that the $1.50 each student pays through student fees to the OFS, doesn't buy what it used to, and that the OFS has been going through a period of financial restraint.

One of the main problems Reilly says the OFS is trying to overcome, is the lack of knowledge that students have about the functions of OFS. "People don't realize our day-to-day contact with government officials," said Reilly, saying that different factions of the OFS are constantly working with various areas of the government of both legislative and bureaucratic levels.

Wine, women and sin

The Editor,

I would like to express a few thoughts which were stimulated by Drew Fagan's defence of the Body Politic's pedophilia article. I am afraid it struck me as the common type of sophistry repeated in defence of perverse trends in a society.

Today we are moving away from former values generally held in North America. Society, Alexander Solzhenitsyn, the Christian author, has pointed out that we in the West have turned away from the faith and values which were fundamental to our society. There was once a general consensus of right and wrong based on the Bible. We once had the moral discipline which is essential to a democracy.

Now we have abandoned those beliefs and the God of the Bible. Most educated people are not even familiar with the Bible.

In place of moral discipline we have such sophistry as follows. "The paranoia that is evident against those who have, in their view, written an article advocating pedophilia is unfounded as this nation has adequate laws to protect the public from those unstable people who perform such illegal actions. No prosecution of those members of the press who analyze or advocate such acts is warranted." Are you really so ignorant that you believe laws control a nation? Were any laws sufficient to stamp out booze in the prohibition? Do marijuana laws prevent people from smoking up today? Rather, it is a people's values which govern their behavior. Either people find loopholes and warp them to get around laws, or they break them and take the risk of getting caught.

What does govern the behaviour of a society? It is philosophies and religion which shape values, attitudes, and beliefs as one by one people choose what to follow. Today such philosophies or "sciences" as psychology and evolution shape our beliefs as we are brainwashed by the media, school, university, books and so on.

In North America we live to consume goods and services. We have generally been seduced by a godless pleasure drive, materialism. Just consider what goes on during Frosh Week, the swearing, drinking, and partying. I believe Socrates and

A better mousetrap is the apple of a sister's eye

Julia Grunau

My brother just told me in a long and expensive collect telephone call that he has decided to become an inventor. This is all to the good. Inventing Grunau's is a rare breed and it would be nice to have professions other than Russian sheep stealers and WASP ministers in the family. However, he intends to waste his talented efforts in endeavouring to come up with silly and impractical things like devices to aid calculations in quantum physics, and we all know that quantum physics does not really exist. I mean, you can't believe in Tinkerbell and quantum physics at the same time, and heaven knows we have to get our priorities straight, right? Good.

I think he should spend his time on more relevant-to-the-human-experience things. Like maybe unbreakable shoelaces or Ultra Ban that you only have to apply once in your lifetime, because it sure is a drag having to walk around with your armpits up in the air waiting for it to dry every morning. It would be nice, too, if when the phone rings in the middle of the night it could sound like Seals and Crofts instead of Gabriel's trumpet heralding the day of Judgment (this is a frightening concept to those few of us who are Unitarian Druids). It would be pleasant if a grandmother were invented who could appreciate your novel approach to saying grace at dinner ("Rub-a-dub-dub! Thanks for the grub! Yea, God! A-MEN!") and who would send lace underwear as a matter of course for birthday and Christmas presents.

Of course, the actual inventing process may take a while, and my dear brother should graduate from high school before attempting anything of great magnitude. But if I can convince him of the importance of inventions like that to our lives today, I shall not have lived in vain.

Plato described us aptly. "They expel the lot (all morals) and leave the soul of their victim swept clean, ready for the great initiation which follows: procession of insolence, license, extravagance, and shamelessness. They praise them all extravagantly and call insolence good breeding, license liberty, extravagance generosity, and shamelessness courage. That's how a young man brought up in the necessary desires comes to throw off all inhibitions and indulge desires."

A just dessert

Gil Gross

Since our return to classes three weeks ago, in a distant corner of the world, one country has engulfed and completely ingested another. In a brilliantly executed lightning invasion that lasted just a few short weeks, Vietnamese forces routed the troops of the Khmer Rouge regime in Cambodia.

At the United Nations and elsewhere, there were loud outcries against the "blatant aggression" exhibited by Vietnam. The American government, which not so long ago was naming the Cambodian regime as one of the world's worst human rights violators, found itself in a difficult position. On the one hand stands Vietnam, expanding its already considerable influence in Southeast Asia with carte blanche Soviet support, while on the other lies a brutal regime in tatters, whose sole outside source of support has been China.

Here lay the crux of the U.S. dilemma; with the recent euphoria over the opening of relations with China, how could the outright occupation of one of its clients by a foreign power be allowed? In addition, the Carter Administration sees the invasion as an extension of the long arm of the Soviet Union, and, as such, clearly cannot support it. Thus, the State Department condemned the action.

In yet another example of Carter's hopelessly inept foreign policy, the U.S. has merely reaped what it sowed as recently as late last year. Before China was even whispered about in the corridors of the State Department, Vietnam opened its arms and explicitly invited the United States to begin an era of friendly relations. Visiting U.S. delegates were cordially welcomed by a country still recovering from decades of strife, and hungry for American aid. Somehow, nothing ever came of the effort.

China, meanwhile, had pledged its support to a regime whose brief reign will go down as one of the Twentieth century's most brutal. Since the takeover by the Khmer Rouge in 1975 - upon which Cambodia was euphemistically renamed "Democratic Kampuchea" - tales of indescribable horror have seeped steadily to the West. Some estimates suggest that up to a quarter of Kampuchea's eight million people have died or simply vanished during the three and a half years of Premier Pol Pot's shadowy rule. To this end, it is worthwhile to emphasize that a significant portion of the Vietnamese invasion force consists of Cambodian rebels. Their leader, Heng Samrin, has established a new government in Phnom Penh.

Vietnam, whose own human rights record is far from exemplary, was obviously not prompted to attack by humanitarian considerations. Rather, the invasion served as a culmination to nearly three years of border skirmishes. Since early 1976, the Khmer Rouge had been conducting vicious raids on Vietnamese and Thai border villages. These residents were often savagely slaughtered. The Vietnamese government had tried, alternately, punitive military strikes as well as peace overtures, but the raiding continued unabated. So it was finally decided, late last year, that Pol Pot and friends would have to be deposed.

The United States missed the opportunity to back a winner, Vietnam, despite its relatively small size, has developed politically and militarily to the point where it is now clearly the dominant power in Southeast Asia, and probably one of the strongest - and most un-derestimated - countries in the entire world. And today, while they are weeping over Democratic Kampuchea's corpse in Peking, and biting their lips in Washington, the comrades in the Russian Foreign Ministry are toasting each other with vodka and passing out Cuban cigars. Their horse came in, and paid off big.

The AMS fleeces the lambs

The Editor,

The attitude of the AMS is very deplorable with regards to Louise Carroll. There are persistent rumours that the AMS is making $10,000 per year. This should be clarified. What is happening to the $10,000 contingency fund?

The AMS should get off its high horse and fund an honorarium for Ms. Carroll. In 1977, Who's Where came out much later than this year's edition. The ugly life insurance ad has been removed from the back and the front is free from advertising. This year's book contains many new articles and artwork. Who's Where is one of the best utilized publications of the AMS.

The AMS has no sense of public relations. Instead of appearing as a big brother they have taken the role of Big Brother. The most crucial point however is the long range effect on student participation in time-intensive campus services. Are students going to say "I think I could be effective this summer, but I can't afford to get screwed by the AMS"? Show me someone willing to invest a month's effort for $2.00 per hour, and I'll show you a student. Show me someone who doesn't quit, even when it becomes apparent that expected revenues fail to materialize, and I'll show you why I haven't lost faith in humanity. Show me someone who received 61 cents an hour, and I'll show you someone who deserves a better break.

Holocaust: TV becomes a mirror for Germany's past

by Drew Fagan

For a nation which has been, for the past three decades, somewhat oblivious to its past, West Germany is now in the midst of a sudden passion for information on its history, particularly that of the period preceding its military defeat in 1945. Like a family trying to ignore a black sheep uncle, the Germans have tended to suppress any need to study and ultimately understand what forces caused the rise of the forces of fascism. Under the pretense that nothing can be gained from agonizing over the past, they have refrained from doing just that, but in the process have also failed to learn something of their history and themselves.

This collective silence has been broken over the past three years with an extraordinary outpouring of material on the Nazi period and its leaders. Cynics would say that this is nothing more than grotesque nostalgia, skillfully being played by those minority of Germans who gallantly retain their racist beliefs and aspire to a return to the "glories" of nationalist Germany. In fact it is just the opposite. In an effort to wash away the collective guilt that has permeated German society, they have immersed themselves in the most distasteful period of their history. Once the nation has fully come to grips with this time frame and accepted it as a scar for which all are somewhat responsible, only then can the issue be confined to the history books, and only then can the nation turn from its past.

Perhaps the climax to this wrenching study will come this week, with the broadcast of Holocaust, the story of the Nazi persecution of the Jews. Viewed by over 100 million North Americans, the program left a powerful impression on the collective conscious of the United States and Canada, who were, after all, due to their restrictive policies concerning immigration, not entirely free from responsibility for the tragedy. However, the effect on West Germany will be far more powerful and direct. While North Americans were not directly involved the German people were, and are portrayed as such.

Much of the criticism that has been directed against the program is warranted. To take the content of perhaps the most degrading event for mankind of this century and convert it into a four-part soap opera, whose relative success or failure will be judged on the basis of advertising revenue is a moral injustice. I found it somewhat ironic to have the plot interspersed every twenty minutes with commercials for soap products.

Nevertheless, what the program did perform for North Americans, and will do for West Germans, is portray the event in purely human terms. While the countless documentaries and statistics have produced nothing more than a numbing awe, Holocaust evoked a fuller understanding of the event, as the program was produced on a level

Against cruelty to custodians

The Editor,

It never ceases to amaze me, students are an incredibly busy lot. So busy that they are unable to give a mere minute to clear up their mess in Mac-Corry eating area. Empty soup cans and foil packages cover table tops. The floor is strewn with those infamous coffee cups. Even the microwave oven area - a step away from a garbage disposal - is a memento to the last popcorn party or communal pig-out.

One is led to a number of dismal conclusions. Perhaps we have been socialized into accepting such disgusting mannerisms. Maybe we enjoy spending our Mac-Corry moments amidst a veritable garbage heap.

Alternately, perhaps we deserve the criticisms of self-centredness which are often directed towards students. Does no one stop to consider the plight of our over-worked janitors? We have become tired of talking about cutbacks but janitors must continue to live with to which viewers could more easily relate. Although the manipulation of emotions could arguably be criticized if taking into account the small but inexcusable number of violent incidents that took place against North Americans of German ancestry, in total, the effect was a fuller understanding of the forces that led to the Final Solution and a portrayal of the suffering that such policies evoked.

Holocaust will have profound effect in forcing the West Germans to come to terms with their past. While it may be decades before the "holocaust syndrome" ceases to pervade Israeli life and Government policy, the West Germans are now in the throes of such an obsession, and the end result will be one of benefit, the ability to cast off feelings of shame for their past, and place all emphasis on the success of their future.

the realities of too many buildings, too few cleaning staff. As we pass our days and nights discussing the Shah over coffee, the Canadian crisis with a cheese and lettuce submarine sandwich, we seem to give little thought to those individuals whose lives are spent cleaning up after us. You may scoff at these criticisms; you may judge that I am exaggerating. We should, however, get off our intellectual high horses and tend to the more mundane aspects of life.

Be nice to a janitor. Clean up your space at Mac-Corry.

Cutting in on the The Last Waltz

The Editor,

On Friday January 19, there was an altercation in the lineup for the second screening of The Last Waltz. While selling tickets, I was approached by an angry gentleman who informed me that two people had butted into the lineup in front of him. When these two people reached the front of the line, this gentleman stated that he had witnesses to the fact that they had butted in. I asked these two if they had done so and they replied that they had not. They were subsequently admitted to the show.

In retrospect, I feel that I did not handle the situation as well as I should have. I would like to apologize to this gentleman and any other upset patrons. Should such a situation arise again, I will demand to see identification from the "the accused", collect signatures from "the witnesses" and refuse admission to "the accused" until the rest of the lineup is seated. Although such a procedure may prove to be an annoying delay to the audience, I hope that it is a satisfactory solution to such a problem.

The end of an era: Stifling our spirits

Terrence Reynolds

Last year, I attended the homecoming football game at Western and it did not rate in my list of great sporting events. Some of the actions of their student police, dressed undercover as mere students, including leaping over the stands and tackling any of the horrible delinquents who made the mistake of bringing a mickey into the game. Of course, in the sparsely populated stands of bored and uninspired spectators (this was the year Western took the College Bowl) it was not hard to find a few probates and criminal elements actually consuming alcohol inside the stadium. Imagine, people trying something like that in Ontario, where the drinking age should be 35 and last call in bars would be 9:30. "Thank goodness I go to Queen's!" I said to myself at the time.

Well, times have changed as we are being happily herded into the right wing swing of the late 70's. The student body, as a whole, is being made to pay for the actions of a few and the familiar wineskin fan will be found sipping milk and clapping politely at touchdowns. This is an exaggeration and actually faulty reasoning. What will probably happen, at first, will be gross intoxication in the early morning, as people try to consume what formerly would last an entire game. Crowd control will be no problem, as the entire stands will look like Jonestown by half time. After a few games of this nonsense, attendance will begin to fizzle out.

By the end of frosh week, the wineskin at the game is a symbol of the university and one that personally is more relevant than an ill fitting, dumpy little tam. The Queen's Bandmembers, of international fame and credit to the university have their wineskins ready to squeeze at the same time as they have their instruments ready to blow. Why has the administration not chastized them for breaking the law? I hope I don't sound like I'm winning, but without booze, where will be the crackling spirits that makes students rose?

The main argument against booze in the stands seems to be the Banning alcohol at Richardson Stadium:

The stream of the ever present wineskin will soon run dry violence which has sometimes occurred at the games due to drunkenness. An effort towards a solution would be stricter control by our constables. I realize this is difficult, as they do have their hands full, but why not bar entrance to the very drunk at the gates? If people know this will occur, they will control their consumption accordingly. As well, we would need an AMS court that can stand behind any charges made by constables, because any lack of backing would make actions by the constables simply a farce.

We have the spirit at this university to send 7000 students to the College Bowl. This spirit has unified us and we can thank the games for a good part of this feeling. Before we shrug it off, let us seriously consider what we are doing and search for possible alternatives. Who knows, maybe to stop problems, liquor will be banned from the Pub (whatever its name is). If the ban occurs next year, I advocate a petty protest. Everyone should fill their wineskins with coke instead of the real thing. Hopefully, it might accomplish more than not eating in the sidewalk cafe for a day.

The inadequacy of analysis

The Editor,

After reading Simon Rozanski's "Out of Skillet into Tories" in January 16th's Journal, I felt it necessary to offer my heartfelt congratulations on his brilliant analysis of Liberal and Tory economic policy. Obviously, Mr. Rozanski has done his homework. For who else but a learned student of economics would be able to trace the current Canadian deficit to budgets which were created by "the white-haired hack of anti-Trudeau Liberals", John Turner.

Mr. Rozanski's incredibly intuitive insight into how Tory government would have propped up our badly sagging dollar is another example of the facile manner which we can deal with a seemingly complex economic problem. After all, as Mr. Rozanski has stated, "the Tories are concerned with double-talking, not honesty."

I particularly enjoyed the manner in which Mr. Rozanski dealt with the lack of differentiation between Liberal and Conservative economic philosophy. The "ins" and "outs" concept is indeed unique and original.

What this institution needs more of is more subjective, unconstructive and biased critical analysis as put forth by Mr. Rozanski. Keep up the good work Simon.

Vietnam News Agency (VNA)

Cambodia

don't believe everything you hear

By Kathy Orr
The story of Cambodia is a long and complicated one, one which has been complicated more for us by anti-Cambodia campaigns in the American press reports.

What American reports have tried to do since 1975 is to emphasize "bloodbath" reports about Pol Pot's regime, thereby ignoring the responsible role the United States played in making Cambodia the way it is today.

What is now called a proxy war between Soviet Union and China by some used to be called a proxy war between the United States and the Soviet in both cases strong and historic ideological differences between the United States and the Soviet in both cases strong.

What is now called a proxy war between Soviet Union and China by some used to be called a proxy war between the United States and the Soviet in both cases strong and historic ideological differences between Vietnam and Cambodia have played a major role. Also the nature of the leaders in power has altered the severity of the struggles.

In the past two weeks Pol Pot's government was overthrown by a combination of Vietnamese forces and Cambodian rebels. These forces by all recent reports appear to be directed and lead by the Vietnamese.

Pol Pot and his government came into power in 1975 when they marched to power into Phnom Penh having already taken most of the provinces in the country. (During the war Pol Pot's group the National United Front of Kampuchea, (NUFK) gathered a great deal of support and followers from the peasants.)

The government which was overthrown in 1975 was headed by Lon Nol whose government was helped into power and supported through his entire career term from 1970 to 1975, by the United States. The takeover of Nol's government was covered by western press but the reliability of the coverage is questionable since it was an American interest that was overthrown.

What I am concerned with is reports of cruel, forced evacuation of cities in 1975, stories of a million people being executed by their leader, and the lack of comment about the million people killed and injured as a result of American bombing, the drastic demolition of the countryside and the way of life of those who live in the rural areas of Cambodia, that is 80% of the country.

In 1976 George Hindlebrad and Gareth Potter wrote a very well documented report on the Cambodian War and the NUFK takeover explaining rationally the whys and hows of the revolt.

Rather than attempting to bring food into the city and trying to purify water systems the NUFK lead people out of the city in groups, to the country where there was food, space, cleaner water, and where they could begin working the fields themselves in an attempt to become self-sufficient.

The evacuation was done slowly, with rest stations along the way, and for those who could not walk,

it was a setup; the photograph had been taken in Thailand far away from the fighting, the farms and the truth.

The apparently cruel evacuation of the cities was done for very good reasons in 1975. Previous to the war Phnom Penh contained approximately 600,000 people. At the end of the war there were over 3 million people in the city. Obviously they had not casually moved to the big city because Daddy got a new job and it would be good for the kids.

This influx of people caused several difficult problems in the line of food, water, medical help, and living space. The United States was shipping food into the capital but both the amounts and the distribution methods were insufficient. Administrative officials were hoarding rice and selling it at phenomenally high prices.

The rice was sold to merchant middlemen who made the same deal to the people. With these distribution and supply problems a serious food shortage developed.

Medical authorities around the world who had observed the situation stressed the signs of massive malnutrition and starvation among adults and children.

Their fears were that Cambodia was losing one generation to fighting the war, and another through starvation.

When the (NUFK) took Phnom Penh the American aid stopped, and public services came to a halt. Water contaminated with Cholera, garbage pileups, and drastic food shortages were just some of the problems faced in the cities. Danger of widespread epidemics was very real.

military trucks were provided when available.

The NUFK took over the country province by province from 1970 to 1975. As they moved, they began their agricultural programs developing communal type groups to work on fields growing different strains of rice for short and long term needs.

Canals, ditches, reservoirs etc., were dug intensively for irrigation purposes. By 1975 Cambodia yielded its largest rice crop in years.

This achievement is even more remarkable when one realizes the amount of destruction caused by bombing. After the 1973 Paris Agreement, there were up to 240 B-52 raids on Cambodia the most intense U.S. bombing during the entire war, destroying fields, and killing many of the draft animals used for plowing fields.

The agricultural rebuilding program and attention to the most immediate need, food, shows a high degree of awareness and ability of government in some areas.

When I read information contrary to western newspaper and magazine reports, such as the Newsweek I began to seriously question every report of bloodshed within the country since then. However, now even reporters who have supported the NUFK takeover, its agricultural reconstruction, and its attempts to mix and unite the city and country people, admit the Pol Pot's attempts to build a new Kampuchea have failed. They have failed because of his destruction of his own people.

Kampuchean Prime Minister Pol Pot

Asla Week

Pol Pot's government was in a difficult situation because of a variety of circumstances. First, Pol Pot came to power through a long and devastating battle, overcoming a government that was pro-American, pro-capitalist, and which had little or no regard for peasant reconstruction programmes. (There was little chance for any attempt at such reforms because Americans started bombing the countryside in 1969 when the NUFK revolt started).

Lon Nol seems to have been the only pro-capitalist leader in Cambodia hence, the American support. Thirdly, Prince Sihanouk, in power before Lon Nol, was very nationalistic, and proved it by nationalizing trade and banking systems.

Therefore the NUFK party had to be different from Lon Nol and Sihanouk as well in order to get support. (There is little available on the flaws of Sihanouk's rule, except that in the mid sixties he began a heavy repression of "communists" to an unreasonable extent, which probably weakened his support and allowed an edge for the Lon Nol coup).

In the 1830's and again in the 1930's Vietnam had a campaign to form a "Federation" of the Indochina block. In September of 1978 Diol claimed that the campaign was no longer alive, but border disputes continued. Pol Pot was a very paranoid leader. His speeches constantly referred to the Vietnamese threat. His campaign therefore, was to wipe out that threat.

Gareth Porter reported on the Pol Pot government again late in 1978. He reports that Pol Pot's paranoia led him to attempt to wipe out all those in his forces who had ever been involved in the Vietnam war or who were Vietnam trained.

Since the communist parties of Laos, Vietnam, and Cambodia began together in the 40's in an anti-French move and since some 3,000 to 4,000 Cambodians were in North Vietnam at the end of the war the numbers were considerable.

Western press reports said Pol Pot was "purifying his forces." This may be true, being specific about who he had in mind, and why does help answer some questions. Paranoia in a government leader is a very dangerous thing to be it a large or small power. In Pol Pot's case, it seems to have led him to threaten the lives of the people he might otherwise have been able to win over to his side.

Press, writers, journalists. They will report what they hear and see, and the chain of events, we hope, will fit together in a logical sequence or fashion. Some journalists are not even this honest, that is, they report what they believe, or construct, without first hand observation. There was one case in which a photograph, widely used in western magazines, was taken of a peasant up and being punished for working when forced to. In the end the photograph, Thailand, and the reporter coming at that the situation had been set up for photograph had been taken in Thailand far away from the fighting, the farms, and the truth. Reports of the Cambodian stock come from refugees with horrible terrifying stories. They are scared. They are fleeing from what is in their mind, the absolute enemy, absolutely evil. What they are coming to is a much vaguer thing.

Other sources of information are the leaders themselves, those who have power and are leading their people to a cause or aim which they believe necessary.

The opposition, the revolutionaries of the day, believe that they are overthrowing a totally corrupt group. How can it be said that there is any objective, unbiased journalism? How can anyone listen to the story of a participant on either side and not be moved or feel for those people? Each side has seen its victims and has made mistakes, with drastic consequences. Justice, in any case, is so gray a thing it cannot be determined absolutely.

Harry Chapin brings Jock Harty to life

Rob Reynolds

After arriving over two hours late, the master storyteller came on to captivate his audience.

Although Harry Chapin got off to a shaky start, confusing the words on perhaps his best known song "Taxi", he made a quick recovery. Using his excellent band to their full potential, the 36 year old balladeer led the audience through stories about night watchmen, odd-jobbers, gas station attendants, housewives, schoolchildren and the famous taxi driver in an effort to fulfill his promise that "I'm going to sing my ass off".

Chapin at once drew his audience into the performance through continued anecdotes, occasional profanity and encouraging crowd participation in songs. The epitome came when Chapin performed "Banana's" which entailed having the audience sing different parts.

Perhaps the most humorous tune of the evening was sung by Chapin's drummer, Howard Fields. The demure Fields launched awkwardly into a song entitled, "The Hornies Rock Drummer."

The song represented what was readily apparent to the 3000 people in Jock Harty Arena; that Chapin and his band stand far out of the mainstream of touring bands. The genuine relaxed nature of the performer combined with his ability to kibitz with the audience between ballads and humorous songs place him outside the ambit of most rock performers. It is no wonder he feels at ease performing with artists such as the legendary Pete Seeger.

When Chapin performed his older and better known tunes such as "WOLF", "Cat's in the Cradle", "Circle" and "A Better Place to Be", there was little doubt that his heavy schedule of engagements had taken its toll on his voice. Compared to earlier performances and recordings Chapin's voice is much lower and raspier. He makes no secret of his inability to its high notes.

When Chapin sang his newest song -- about an old lady in a park -- he gave not title -- the meaning was somewhat obscure. Perhaps this does not bode well for his new album "Legends of the Lost and Found" to be released in the spring.

In spite of these minor difficulties Chapin put on one of the most exciting performances to come to Queen's. Considering that he landed in Toronto, airport after six Wednesday evening and drove non-stop to Kingston, the performance was nothing short of exceptional.

Evidently Chapin enjoyed the evening as much as the audience for he offered to come back next year to perform with proceeds going to a cause which he heads, the World Hunger Year.

Bickert, Downes and Young hot

Paul Adams

Delayed by weather conditions, Ed Bickert, Wray Downes and Dave Young took the stage for last Sunday's Dunning Hall concert amidst a restless audience.

The posters advertising the concert gave each man equal billing and, indeed, since the Young-Downes do not represent part of Bickert's regular working trio, Bickert remained appropriately in the background.

After some comic antics with a broken piano stool, Wray Downes immediately set the tone of the evening with an up tempo piano solo that hinted at the expertise we were to witness for the remainder of the night. Downes, once a student of the great Oscar Peterson, has incorporated many of the frills of his mentor into his playing, but Downes' style also reflects a legacy of Jazz piano legends. We caught glimpses of Fats Waller's stride piano classics and caricatures of the immortal Duke Ellington. His humorous classical overtones on "Green Dolphin Street" represented further the diversity of styles he has mastered since his start in Jazz in the early fifties.

Dave Young, the most personable on stage, demonstrated a fluid, melodic approach to his instrument. His association with the Hamilton Symphony Orchestra was evident in his arco bass solos. Young is not satisfied with the traditional timekeepers role of the bass player and his melodic leads often danced above the chording of sidemen Downes and Bickert. His empathy with pianist Downes was immediately apparent and the two almost form a single unit as they respond and react to every momentary change in tempo and timing.

The group presented a wide spectrum of jazz styles, and hopefully the concert will shed some light on the underestimated Young-Downes duo. This trio hopes to release a record on Sackville Records in the near future.

Ed Bickert and Dave Young layin' it down.

Les Canadiens won't win anything this year

Julian Cunningham

Funny, isn't it, how a bad production of a good play can mar your attitude toward its writer? Thank God I read Rick Salutin's Les Canadiens before having to sit back for two hours on Tuesday night, and quietly watch as Theatre Passe Muraille turned it into a shoddy vehicle for cheap humour and self-glorification before a capacity audience at the Grand. It is all the more unfortunate in light of the strong opening the cast displayed, skating their way through the Habs' early history with such finesse and speed.

The only actors worth watching out of a cast of seven were Ken Parnell and Jean Ricard. Ricard offered the play's strongest moments as Maurice "Rocket" Richard, in a scene with Parnell as Clarence Campbell, depicting the now-legendary incident in which Richard was banished from the league for beating up a referee.

The blocking of the play was not adjusted in any way to accommodate the Grand Theatre. Consequently, over a hundred of us in the left-hand aisle fruitlessly strained to watch the many dramatic entrances from the top of the miniature rink. For us, the entrances consisted of bodyless voice emitting from behind a large plexiglass panel. Rather difficult to sympathize with a voice — no matter how powerful — when its immediate association is with a hunk of plexiglass.

As for the acting? I am sure a six year old would have enjoyed the way they skipped and jumped and yelled a lot. Particularly irritating was Fiona McMurran, whose overblown declamatory style would be better suited to the stage of a nineteenth century melodrama — or better still a football stadium.

Summer, Amherst Island - 1875 - watercolour on paper

Scene changes were adroitly mishandled, with actors milling about, and lighting changes that were often too subtle to be registered. I am given to understand that this is a professional touring company. It looked like it was the first time they had ever seen a proscenium arch.

The clever little jokes about Kingston were nothing short of insulting, and amateurish. The audience didn't help much, as they fell into morbid silence upon hearing the word "f---". The play's final message — that the people who for so long depended on the Canadiens as their spiritual voice, could now express it through the newly-elected Parti Quebecois — was delivered with subtlety of a sledge hammer to a skull.

Poor Rick Salutin. Poor Ken Dryden. Very poor Canadian theatre. The running title of Theatre Passe Muraille's abominable production should be, "Les Pauvres Canadiens, with our apologies to the writers."

Fowler finally gains recognition

Madeline Mills

Currently on exhibition at Agnes Etherington Art Centre are drawings, lithographs and water-colours of Daniel Fowler (1810-1894). Born in England, he was trained in a similar manner as John Constable and J.M.W. Turner, and completed his education in the typical British fashion by travelling through Europe in his twenties. In 1843 he moved to Canada with his wife and settled to farm and paint on Amherst Island, near Kingston.

Canadian art has been neglected for a long time, it is only recently that Canadians in the field of art have turned away from foreign studios to acknowledge the genius of their own culture. Daniel Fowler appears to be a very important Canadian painter

However, he was virtually unknown until Francis K. Smith laboured to catalogue and exhibit his work.

There is great technical skill in the draughtsmanship of Fowler, he renders his scenes with the accuracy of any topographer. The charm and delicacy in his application of water-colour bears witness to the long and established tradition in this medium which existed in London, at this time. Though the skies and trees are reminiscent of John Constable and the Marine scenes bring the early works of Turner to mind, the artist has a charm that is all his own.

This show continues until February 25th, before going to Victoria, Halifax, Ottawa and Toronto. It is supported by the National Museums of Canada.

L'Ange Gardien - blah

Christiane Schull

In late December at Le Parisien in Montreal Middle Aged Women in gawdy fur hats and balding husbands who had won tickets through a local french radio station sat in polite but embarrassed silence as they followed Margaret Trudeau's antics in the premiere of her second movie L'Ange Gardien (her first, "Kings and Desperate Men" is still in pieces on the cutting room floor according to an NFB film producer).

L'Ange Gardien is the story of Annie (Margaret Trudeau), a lovely woman who arrives at the beautiful village of Casses on the Mediterranean for a vacation. She is watched by Aldo (Francis Lemaire) a daffy looking detective hired by Annie's lover back home, Monsieur Roussel (Andre Falcon).

A series of close calls for Annie begins when, by chance, she meets a tanned, good-looking frenchman, Guy (Michel Lauvin). After picking up her dropped parcels, Guy ravenously attacks our Maggie T in a clothes closet. Here and elsewhere Annie is hotly pursued but with the help of her guardian angel, Aldo, she bionically escapes her pursuers' hungry clutches. Naturally, by the end of the movie, they have fallen deeply in love.

L'Ange Gardien was a disaster. Margaret Trudeau's performance betrayed a Vancouver girl's ridiculous attempt to look like a Parisienne starlet — her part was dubbed because she could not speak French well enough. The audience waited in mute horror for something to happen, for Margaret to DO something, but that empty face could not give anything. There was too much coy, too many little girl smiles, too many sexy pouts which Brooke Shields could carry off with OOMPH but Margaret could not and too many rapid lines like "Vous etes un homme tres curieux".

Except for the exquisite scenery and some rare comic moments such as when Aldo dresses up as a buxom woman and is subsequently accosted by an elderly gentleman and the one spic scene of Aldo and Annie in bed (Paris audiences will get the full nude scene which was cut out for the more conservative Canadian audiences), the film had nothing to recommend it.

To be fair, Margaret did have a lot working against her. Bad plot, bad direction and trivial lines made her performance look all the worse. She was also battling negative public opinion — people were going to see and mainly will go to see how their "national embarrassment" works as an actress, hoping to discover new ammunition with which to condemn her. Perhaps if I didn't think she was such a silly ass I would say that she was an actress with "potential" who needed lots of work and good direction.

The moment which brought the whole film and Margaret Trudeau into perspective was a typical lovers' scene; against a blue sky, sun and ocean they divulge their life stories. Margaret, when asked about herself, smiled, fluttered her eyelashes, raised her hands in despair and said "Moi? I. e. e. il n'y a rien a raconter... il n'y a rien a dire!" No Margaret, there isn't a lot to say.

Artist loves light, watercolours

Window Making - June, 1973
- watercolour on rag paper

Peggy Walker

"It seems like I have always been painting" says Lenni Workman of her art work. "When I'm happy, I refer to the process as a "course at exploration" and when depressed, as a habit, like biting one's nails."

She is currently exhibiting a selection of watercolours and drawings, some available for sale, at the Agnes Etherington Art Centre, continuing until February 25. Watercolour is her favourite medium. Working mainly from photographs, still-lives and collages, her work concentrates upon light; its sharp contrasts mould to form the subject of the painting. This clearly illustrated in Window Making of 1973.

Recently, her work has evolved to encompass the reflection of light.

Panel switches views

Rob Reynolds

A government official opposed to cutbacks in the arts? A journalist in favour of them? These were the positions taken at Tuesday night's discussion on art's funding in Canada, an Arts Festival event.

The government official was David Peacock, Associate Director of the Canadian Council while the journalist was Toronto Star theatre critic Gina Mallet.

Mr. Peacock focussed on the theatrical arts noting that in this previous position as director of theatrical funding for the Canada Council he had seen the number of theatres receiving Council money grow from 63 to 115. He lamented, however, that while Council grants have decreased, in real dollar terms, this year's operating costs in theatres has risen 14 per cent.

In contrast, Ms. Mallet argued that there are, "too many theatres for the talent." The Toronto Star theatre critic suggested that the government be more selective in its funding depending upon the marketplace to decide a theatre's fate.

"If tickets weren't subsidized you wouldn't have people going," insisted Ms. Mallet.

A third member of the panel, Ontario visual artist Vera Frenkel, imparted that no matter how severe cutbacks become, "Art will survive." She did suggest, however, that "it is the developing relation between art and its audience that will suffer."

Ms. Frenkel, the only producing artist on the panel, stated that art is influenced by the relevant financing body thus creating "company or state art." She suggested that the wisest patronage would be one with its only qualification, "fulfill your own vision."

Mr. Peacock stressed the autonomy that must exist between the Canada Council and the government. He stated that the "freedom must be there" both for the artist and the Council. This is to secure funding for applicants as an artist must be out of time in his own period.

Moderator of the panel, Robert Swain of Agnes Etherington Art Gallery, noted at the outset that scheduled guest Bernard Ostry was unable to participate. The deputy minister of Communications had a meeting in Vancouver to attend.

The Dunning Hall audience numbered only 40 persons. Last year 250 had attended a similar symposium held in conjunction with Arts Festival.

Convenor of the week, Jill Yarnell, knew of no cause for the poor attendance. Ms. Carrell was uncertain whether to recommend a similar panel discussion to next year's Festival convenor.

It took Chapin five minutes to get on stage once he arrived.

Letdown causes B-ball defeat

Ron Jamala

A three minute lapse in the final moments of the first half cost the Queen's Golden Gaels basketball team a victory. The Gaels, who led from the opening tip and by as many as nine points, saw a four point lead with 5:00 remaining dwindle into a six point half time deficit. That was the turning point as the Gaels were unable to regain their poise, as the University of Ottawa Gee Gees went home with a 95-67 victory.

The large crowd at Bartlett Gymnasium was treated to an exciting first half of basketball. Both teams ran the ball up and down the court creating many three on two breaks. The Gaels came out strong capitalizing on a number of Ottawa mistakes to grab a 14-6 lead five minutes into the game. With Mark Gagnon and Phil Moore controlling the boards it looked like Queen's might break the game wide open. Ottawa was not to be denied though as the individual play of guard Pat Signorotti kept the Gee Gees within striking distance. A couple of missed Gael opportunities were quickly turned into Ottawa points and with 5:30 remaining the teams were deadlocked at 28-28. At this point Mike Kirby picked up his third personal foul and had to leave the game.

With the slick ball handling Kirby on the bench the Ottawa full court zone press, which was being handled with ease, now became a major factor in the game. Four successive turnovers were converted into points and the Gee Gees, who were struggling throughout, had a 40-32 lead. The game was virtually over for the Gaels who never regained the poise they showed earlier.

The second half saw the bench strength of Ottawa take affect. The tired Gaels squad was no match for the aggressive substitutes of the Gee Gees. The game turned into the "Pat Signorotti show" as the quick guard dominated both ends of the court. His outstanding dribbling and passing abilities were the highlights of the second half. The frustrated Gaels could not do anything right; playing their poorest half of the season. Coach Tom Frood was disappointed in his team's second half performance stating only, "We played poorly, very, very poorly."

A dejected Rick Varsava stated, "We had them in the first half and we let them come back, then the great collapse."

The loss makes it essential the Gaels win all remaining games if they hope to make the playoffs.

Ottawa's Steve Huck was the game's leading scorer with 21 pts. Pat Gaels guard Rob Alvo throws up a hook in Tuesday's loss.

King

Signorotti had 14 pts., along with seven assists and six steals. Rick Varsava led the Gaels attack with 16 pts., captain Phil Moore and Mark Gagnon chipped in 12 apiece.

Key Notes - Some interesting statistics on the game outlines why the Gaels are losing Queen's committed 25 turnovers while Ottawa had five (5). Ottawa shot 68% from the floor and Queen's 48%.

The Gaels' next league action is Saturday evening in Sudbury where they will be taking on a tough Laurentian team.

Gaels face key twinbill

Chris Cuthbert

The Queen's Golden Gaels hockey team approach their "weekend of reckoning" as they ready themselves for a home and home series with the York Yeomen Saturday evening and Sunday afternoon.

The Gaels travel to the York Ice Palace for Saturday night's game (8:00pm) and return to Jock Hartley Arena for a rematch Sunday at 4:45pm. Both games will be broadcast on CFRC 1490 AM.

The Gaels, in the midst of a nine game winless streak, must play up to their potential against York or be relegated to the status of also-rans in the OUAA eastern division.

Last Friday's 6-1 loss to Toronto combined with York's loss and tie (6-3 and 5-5) against Laurentian leaves the Gaels a single point behind the Yeomen with five games remaining in the regular season.

The Gaels are faced with a tougher season ending schedule than York with two matches against Toronto, the York doubleheader and a single date with Ottawa.

York has a further advantage on the Gaels in that by virtue of a 6-2 win and a 4-4 draw previously with Queen's they are within one point of capturing the season series between the two clubs.

If the two teams should be tied at the conclusion of the regular season the team with the series advantage will be awarded the final playoff berth.

In view of this the Gaels must garner three and possibly all four points at stake this weekend to have a realistic shot at making the playoffs.

After an opening weekend sweep of the Laurentian Voyageurs in Sudbury the Gaels machine has sputtered. The club has been riddled with injuries all season but they cannot be held totally responsible for Queen's lacklustre record. The Gaels, of late, have appeared to lack the intensity and desire of their early season play.

Queen's, with a record of 2-5-4, is fortunate that it still remains in the hunt for post season competition. This weekend provides the Gaels with a final opportunity to rectify what is slowly becoming a season of disappointment.

Queen's must improve play this weekend to grab a playoff spot.

Gaels beat Canton

The Queen's Golden Gaels hockey club turned in a solid performance Tuesday night at Jock Hartley Arena recording a convincing 7-2 victory over the Canton College of New York.

"It was a good mid-week game for us," said a satisfied coach Fred O'Donnell.

The York Yeomen this weekend. Dale Sandles and Steve Watt paced the Gaels with two goals apiece with singles added by Mike Conway, Paul Stohart and Gary Brandt. As well, John Nightingale turned in an inspired performance.

Canton's goals, both scored late in the game, came off the stick of Dan Horn.

York outstrokes Gals

by Judy Harvey-Smith

The women's swimming team finished a close second to York University last Saturday. The meet proved to be very exciting as York squeezed by Queens by a score of 63-61.

Carla Pepplar and Cathy Masson received two firsts each. Other top performances were attained by Francine Vickery, Karen Nixon, Chris Dixon, Judy Harvey-Smith, Diana Harrison, Cecile Chiasson, and Renee Robinson who each placed second in one or several of their events. Third place finishers were Catherine Lund and Lucie Hewitt-Henderson who swam her first ever 200 fly in fine style. Irene Christie also turned in a good performance in her 200 backstroke.

The highlight of the meet was when the Queen's 'A' relay team placed first. Cathy Masson, Carla Pepplar, Diana Harrison, and Karen Nixon were members of the winning team. The 'B' team placed third with a fine swim by Sheila Cliff.

The swimming team will travel to Waterloo this weekend to face stiff competition from teams from the United States, Maritimes, Quebec, Ontario, and Alberta.

Squash Gals smashing success

Sandy Koerner

Missing their numbers 1 and 5 players Queen's squash gals turned out yet another smashing performance to take a landslide victory at the York Invitational this past weekend. Rookies, Julie Reapes and Cathy Johnston, adding all the necessary strength to Claire Smith, Sandy Koerner and Natalie Snyder allowed the gals to make a clean sweep of their opponents: Waterloo, York, McMaster and the University of Toronto. Claire, Sandy and Cathy did not lose a single match all weekend. The gals play next at Waterloo Feb. 3 and at the OWIAA finals at Trent Feb. 23 and 24. The gals' 2 consecutive wins have earned them a solid first place in the OWIAA league thus far this year. Spirits are keen for the championships this year!

Athletes of the Week

The Athletes of the Week are Cathy Hunt and Judy McGillivray. At the Queen's Invitational Figure Skating meet, these two young ladies were able to capture 1st place in the Senior Similar Pairs event. Their performance was strong and contributed to the team's third place finish.

Honorable mention goes to Janean Sergeant of the Golden Gals hockey team for her strong scoring and assisting performance against McMaster-helping to maintain the Gals 1st place standing. Honorable mention also goes to the four outstanding performances made by the Judy McGillivray and Cathy Hunt members of the Track Team. Each of these individuals achieved a gold medal at the York Invitational. Ann Webster - 1st in 800 metres. Karen Rahn - 1st in shot-put. Claus Rinne - 1st in 1500 metres. Jeff Bellinger - 1st in 3000 metres.

Coach Archibald pleased

Gym men set for OUAA's

Coach Jamie Archibald has nothing but praise for the Queen's Gymnastics team this year. "We have a lot of talent on this squad. The boys have technique, strength and endurance. Their only problem is concentration but if we can keep attractive women out of the audience during the finals they have a chance of going all the way."

The Gals have enjoyed two competitions so far this season. Two weeks ago a close contest with Laval ended with Ron Robinson of Queen's winning the honours as first all-round. Ron Collins won a medal doing his tumbling while Meds student Jaimie Hutchinson was impressive with consistently polished routines. Valuable depth was added by Ian MacIntyre and rookie Dale Fisher. Due to an unexpected gap in the starting line-up alternate Steve Leafloor stepped in at the last moment to round off the team.

This past weekend the team was less successful, facing a powerful

American team, Oneonta and the perennial Canadian champion, York University. The Gals were off-balance and unable to consummate their rhythmic motions. Rob Robinson and Jaimie Hutchinson again performed well, although without the spark of the previous week. Veteran Ron Collins, tried for the sympathy vote by competing on an injured wrist.

The team's constant hours of practice were well reflected in the routines of Ian MacIntyre, Dale Fisher and Steve Leafloor, athletes who are improving with each day as the finals approach. Perhaps the most impressive individual was returning team member Martin Blaser, who creditably demonstrated his ability after a long absence from the gym.

The team is now training intensively in preparation for the OUAA finals. These will be held at Queen's on Saturday February 10th at 6:00pm.

Bews News

Mark Pentland

Before we get too far into the second term sport seasons, it may be appropriate to formulate some possible, but undoubtedly correct predictions. Competition is bound to be very stiff in all of the team sports, however, certain units have a slight edge on their opponents. This second half of the Bews season may be the "spoiler" half, with several units surprising these previously proposed predictions.

Prediction - Arts 79 has been impressive in Ball Hockey and should take that title, despite efforts by Don Cameron (Ball Hockey Convenor, Referee, Statistician etc.) to ensure a Comm 79 Championship. Prediction - Civil and MBA will likely meet in the Basketball championship, with Civil emerging the victor there. Prediction - Broomball convenor Randy Riel foresees Mining as the team to beat this year. They will attempt to retain their title of last year. Prediction - MBA appears strong in the Curling league, although any unit could prove the spoiler in that calculative sport. Prediction - Reigning Champ Comm 79 has looked good in Hockey again this year. Convenor Rick Bond was unavailable for comment at this writing, however rumour has it that Arts 81 is the team to beat. Prediction - Comm 80 and Arts 80 will battle for the Water Polo title with Mike Borden (Comm 80) leading his team to their second victory in a row.

Prediction - The Bowling title could be taken away from PHE this year by a keen Commerce 81 team. Prediction - Mechanical and Meds will compete for the Cross Country Ski Championship. Snow conditions should be excellent this year and maximum participation is expected Monday, Jan. 29th at West Campus. Competitors are reminded of the two heat system this year and should contact their athletic sticks in this regard.

Students can sing the Banned Booze Blues

The Richardson Speakeasy has finally been shut down. Vice Principal Love, feeling pressure from the community, our insurance company and, perhaps Frank Drea, has stepped in to handle a situation which the AMS has been unwilling to tackle. The result is that students, having had little or no input into the decision, are stuck with a policy created because of the acts of a few.

The question of whether the continuing violence and damage at football games necessitated action, perhaps the action finally taken by Love, has always been a sensitive matter among student politicians. AMS representatives, fully aware of the probable student reaction to strict enforcement of existing liquor laws at Richardson Stadium, have shied away from the issue. In so doing, though, they have abdicated a responsibility to deal with all problems that affect the long-term student interest, however unpopular the decision may be.

That drinking lies at the root of the majority of incidents of property damage, personal injury, and general irresponsibility at football games is beyond doubt. Over the past two years, numerous cases of assault (usually minor but occasionally more serious) in the stands have been linked to intoxication. While most students have considered alcohol and football games a good, fun, and harmless mix, some have exploited the situation to destructive ends.

Drinking at Richardson Stadium dates back over many years. Tradition dies hard. Yet the irresponsibility that has characterized games in recent years has not tapered off, and our student government has not succeeded in tackling the problem.

Only once in recent years has the AMS treated this problem with the degree of seriousness it deserves. That was during the last administration, and though there was considerable debate over the issue no tangible suggestions were proffered. When the present executive came into office they informed a Journal reporter they would take the matter into serious consideration, however nothing of substance resulted, and Love was forced to act unilaterally.

It was suggested by some senior constables last fall that the AMS experiment with a few dry games, in order to drive home to the student body the responsibilities attached to drinking at the stadium. The AMS failed to act, though, and now that the decision has come from above, one cannot really scream about the injustice of it all. Love faced innumerable pressures, and he dealt with them. One can still look with understandable aggravation toward a student government which failed to do the same.

An ascent out of the maelstrom?

The masses are not easily stirred. Such, it appears, is the premonition on the minds of Ontario Public Services Employees Union leaders, who, in the current wage dispute between community college support staff and the Council of Regents, have refused to bring the Council's latest offer to the rank and file for a vote. It is clear that the union top brass is gearing for a strike, and will not be tripped up in its designs by the workers they are elected to represent. In direct contravention of the basic tenets of union democracy, OPSEU's executive and negotiating team have decided that they know better what is in the worker's best interests than the workers themselves. That kind of thinking is dangerous, because it reveals a withdrawal of the leadership stratum from its base. It is a tendency that is to be found in all too many organizations, from union to government to political party. Leaders are retreating behind closed doors, fearful that their intentions may be thwarted by the unenlightened. The OPSEU executive must shed its elitist robe and leave its constituents free to decide for themselves on the Council of Regents' offer. If union members see the offer as unjust, then the vote will reflect that injustice, thus bolstering the negotiating committee's position. If, on the other hand, the members are satisfied with the concessions already achieved, then misguided is the leader who would wilfully deny the express desires of his constituency.

Landlords versus the tenants become aware of your rights

Eric Evans and Warren Everson

Certain Kingston landlords are attempting to pressure student tenants into renewing their leases in January by demanding notice, or advertising the accommodations as being available for next year.

AMS Researcher, Elinor Mahoney, a member of Student Tenants in Kingston (STIK), told the Journal that advertisements have been distributed in residences listing accommodations available for 1979-80. One landlord, Ms. Daphne Dean, has handed out a list which states, "Please note that the present tenants at each address have first priority until Monday, January 22, 1979 to renew their leases," and ignores the fact that the students are under no legal obligation to renew their leases, even if they plan to remain in their houses or apartments.

"According to the Landlord Tenant Act, the tenant has no obligation to renew the lease at all, but can continue to live there on a month to month basis. Should the tenant decide to move out, however, he or she must give 60 days notice," Mahoney points out. Even if new tenants have signed a lease with the landlord, it is void unless the old tenants have submitted written notice to their landlord of their intention to vacate the premises. Legal aid has already handled one case of this nature.

Mahoney suggests that, "in fact, it is to the tenant's advantage not to renew. Before the days of rent control, leases protected the tenant from sudden or drastic rent increases. But now the lease favours the landlord more than the tenant because it commits the tenant to financial responsibility for the rent for a set amount of time (usually one year). The landlord can only remove a tenant through eviction, but this can be done if the tenant goes against the original terms of the lease—whether he or she is still under the lease or

Chris McKillop elected to OFS chair

Rob Southcott

Chris McKillop will be the new chairperson of the Ontario Federation of Students.

McKillop, who is currently the Treasurer of OFS as well as the Vice-President (External Affairs) at the University of Western Ontario, won the election over Colin D'eca of Queen's, the only other candidate for the position.

McKillop will officially take office on June 1 and will remain as chairperson for a term of one year. He will replace present chairperson Miriam Edelson who has been in that position since June 1977.

McKillop is the first full-time chairperson to be elected by OFS, since the office became a full-time post only last spring. Edelson, though now full-time chairperson, was originally elected when the position was still part-time.

McKillop sees the position of OFS chairperson as a contact between the executive of OFS and its university membership, and he sees the purpose of OFS as essentially the same as in the past.

"The issues in 1975 (the year that McKillop first became involved in OFS) bear a striking resemblance to those of today," he told the convention, "though we certainly are a stronger organization now than we were then."

As for the future of the OFS, McKillop says the main goal of the organization will still be to fight government cutbacks in education, but he also wants to see improvement in the knowledge that individual students have of OFS.

"We need this so that OFS becomes more than something in a newspaper, so that it becomes someone for students to talk to," said McKillop, remarking that if the OFS hires another full-time staff worker, he hopes that it would be another fieldworker, so as to improve communications with the universities in OFS.

Attention: Candidates

Candidates for all AMS, faculty and society elections should submit their campaign statements NO LATER THAN 5PM, Tuesday, January 30.

Statements must be typed (set typewriter margins for 75 spaces) and will not be accepted if they exceed 20 lines. Please staple separate sheets together and ensure that your name and the position you are running for are typed at the top.

Photographs will be taken ON WEDNESDAY, January 31 between 9AM and 4PM. Come early to ensure that your picture is taken. Statements will not be accepted after the deadline.

Executive Race

Showdown

Janet Brick
The teams running the upcoming AMS elections presented their stances at a "Meet the Candidates" session in Dunning Auditorium Friday morning.

Richard Binhammer, running for President with a team comprised of Sue Morris (University Affairs) and Jeff Beck (Operations) stressed the experience which his team possesses. He is the current Internal Affairs Commissioner, and has served on the Queen's Entertainment Agency; Morris was President of Arts '81 and

David Corbett

Council, Burns has been an AMS Court justice, and a co-ordinator of "Sno-For-It," and Lindsay has been on the Board of Director for AMS Incorporated, and the Commerce Society Executive.

Tom O'Shaughnessey, running for President with Janine Gillman (University Affairs) and Dave Carpenter, (Operations) stated that his team's primary aim was to "revitalize" the AMS. They hope to define more clearly the function and the jurisdiction of various university organizations, to improve operating efficiency. They would like to see a review of the housing service, and the publication of an "Awareness Paper" on liquor laws in Kingston.

Richard Binhammer

co-ordinator of InfoBank, and Beck is on Outer Council and the Board of Directors for Elron College.

This team feels that the main issues will be Queen's relations with Kingston, Queen's involvement with the Ontario Federation of Students (OFS), the need for communication between the AMS and other university organizations, such as the Residence Councils. They suggested that relations with Kingston could be improved by having Queen's become more involved with community service programs.

The team lead by David Corbett (President), with supporters Nancy Burns (University Affairs) and David Lindsay (Operations) stressed the need for a strong student voice. Corbett was Speaker for AMS Outer

T2202 for tax cuts

John Philp
Students will be required to submit proof of attendance with any educational deduction claim for the 1978 taxation year. This requirement was introduced for the 1977 returns but confusion on the part of students and the universities forced Revenue Canada to process returns without this documentation.

The Education Deduction Certificate, T2202, can be picked up at the AMS office, the Registrar's office and in the residences. After completion, the forms must be returned to the Registrar's office to be certified. The Student's Education Deduction allows students or their parents to deduct fifty dollars from taxable income for each month of attendance at a post-secondary institution.

Discrepancies in prices?

Students deface books

Diana Coulter

Irate students concerned about the conflicting price labels on books in the Campus Bookstore are defacing the book with graphic suggestions for the management.

Jim Patterson, Assistant Manager of the Bookstore, states that "there isn't a darn thing we can do about it," the Bookstore still deducts 5 percent of every book purchased. According to Patterson, price discrepancies occur when American publishing companies stamp prices which are adjusted to allow for fluctuations in the dollar.

Old stock sent to the bookstore stamped with lower prices are changed to equal the higher prices of new publications already in stock. In the case of one book required for a Canadian Politics course, the publishing firm of Macmillan of Canada took over the Carleton Library Series and for no apparent reason raised the price stamped on the front cover.

Patterson feels that although the multi-labelling of book is "unusual," "any book dealer would have the same problem."

Bookstore manager Mr. Gauthier was not available for comment.

not. (In some leases, a nail hole in the wall might be grounds for eviction.)

Dean, a grad student at Queen's, when contacted by the journal insisted that she did not intend to pressure her tenants into signing leases this early. "It wasn't my intention to cause trouble or put anyone at a disadvantage," Dean pointed out that she is "one of the late ones. Many landlords had their tenants indicate well before me. I'm in fact one of the late ones." She also added that "It's now the peak renting period. I only have a few houses left and that may indicate to you that the peak renting period is right now."

Ms. Dean, who lists 27 units available for rent, states that "I'm one of the small fish. I don't consider myself to be any influence on the housing market." This, of course, is true. Several landlords own many more units than Dean, and many apply much less subtle pressure on their tenants.

Unity Task Force calls for decentralization of various gov't programs

Rick Emmerson

The decentralization of economic and linguistic programs is vital to Canadian unity according to the final report handed down by the Task Force on Canadian Unity on January 25. The committee, commissioned in 1977 by the Trudeau government, has attempted to involve the various regionally based economic and cultural interests by conducting its research in 13 Canadian cities.

In accordance with B.C. Premier William Bennett's previous proposals, they call for a provincially appointed upper chamber with power to appoint Supreme Court judges. In effect, the Senate is abandoned and the House of Commons is expanded.

At the centre of the debate lies Canadian cultural duality and regionalism. Principal Ronald Watts, a member of the committee since February, 1978, recently stated "We advise that the unity of the country is better served by recognizing these differences rather than suppressing them or overcentralizing the government." The report suggests that Canadians from sea to sea agree that Ottawa must allow the provinces a more determinant role on the economy. However, bilingualism remains a trouble spot both within the task force itself and amongst Canadians in general.

For instance, while co-chairman Jean-Luc Pepin advocates official bilingualism, the Quebec representative, Mrs. Solange Chaput-Rolland refers to bilingualism as "a complete failure." The enormity of the task, as reflected by this type of conflict, pushed the committee beyond its Dec. 31 deadline and its original $3.5 million budget.

Task Force member Watts

The report does contain 75 specific recommendations, but it is not clear how much attention the government will pay to these specifics. The committee hopes that some of the recommendations will be adopted, yet they do feel that the general analysis of the situation is more important.

Stephenson claims gifts needed alumni should contribute yearly

Reprinted from "eyeopener"

Graduates of post-secondary institutions should make a annual donation to their alma mater, Education Minister Bette Stephenson said yesterday.

The donations are needed to help solve the system's financial problems, Stephenson told a crowd of the about 150 students, staff and faculty at Ryerson.

"I'm talking about a personal donation commitment. It's part of the responsibility of every graduate," Stephenson said.

"If every one of us who had the privilege of attending a post-secondary institution were to, after graduating, provide even $25 each to the institute from which we graduate, we really would have very little financial problems."

"I would be misleading you totally if I told you you could anticipate any dramatic increase in funding in the next 18 months. I can't apologize for it, it's there."

Stephenson told the crowd that the provincial government could not increase the educational system's $3 billion slice of the $14 billion provincial pie.

The prospect of an even larger provincial debt burden is "hardly appealing, and the possibility of a tax hike is unlikely," she said.

"I have a very strong suspicion the vast majority of the citizens of the province of Ontario would be less than happy to learn that the government would be burdening their children and grandchildren with a massive increase in the public debt," Stephenson said. Stephenson said education has the second largest share of the budget, after health and health care, and had the largest increase of any budget category this year.

There are other ways to improve the financial situation, Stephen said. "We should be demanding, I think, more of our commercial sector than it has traditionally been prepared to provide."

"We have to try and persuade the financial and private sector their contribution goes on further than just paying taxes. They have been benefitting a great deal from our system," she said.

Student Ed Segalowitz asked Stephenson how she could justify such funding policies since the post-secondary educational system has been identified as a fundamental part

The Hole in the Wall gang and "the Big party"

Michael Allen

Hoping to start a new Queen's tradition, eight engineers living in two attached four-man row houses near campus, broke through the solid wall between their adjoining living rooms last week to hold "one big party".

Citing increased police hostility to street parties as their rationale, the two households decided that if they could break through the wall between their units, then people could pass from one house to the other without going onto the street and attracting police attention.

"It was great," said one engineer, "people even wanted to break through the walls into the other houses in this row".

"There's a good chance of a sequel," said another, "sometime before we have to fix the hole".

Attributing the success of their joint-venture to the skills they had acquired in engineering, one spokesman proudly proclaimed that, "we thought of using a chain saw, but since the wall was made of lots of narrow pieces of wood and mortar, we did it with a hatchet instead".

Said one concerned individual, "we have to repair the wall before the lease expires and have a look at the floor too. It's about an inch down on the other side with all the dancing and everything".

Faculties propose bylaw rights must be on paper

John Baktis

There may be a curious confrontation at the next AMS Outer Council meeting concerning a new bylaw introduced at Council last Thursday night. Bylaw 23, "Rights of the Faculty Societies", moved by the three faculty Presidents Dave Court, (Commerce) and seconded by Ross Bartlett (ASUS) and Charlie Lund (Applied Science) recognizes the inherent rights of the Faculty Societies which are beyond the jurisdiction and distinct from the rights of the AMS.

The purpose of the bylaw, according to Lund is to ensure that the Faculty Societies have some degree of autonomy. They shouldn't come under administrative control of the AMS.

Both Lund and Bartlett stated that the motion was not a reaction against the present AMS. "It's a good system now and we would like to keep it that way," said Bartlett. "The motion does not give the societies anything that they haven't got now. The rights of the societies are not written down and we would like things to be made clear," he added.

However John Koopman, AMS Vice-President (Operations) sees the whole thing as "ridiculous".

"All the AMS is is a collection of societies and I think it's sad that the faculties feel threatened by the AMS," added Koopman. "The faculties want to have their cake and eat it too. They can't be a member of the AMS and demand total independence at the same time."

Koopman also feels that the motion may even be unconstitutional. "It violates article 1 of the AMS Constitution," he said.

The motion states that every Faculty Society shall have sole jurisdiction over its own policies, both financial and otherwise; jurisdiction over its own governmental structure, its aims and purposes; authority and capacity to (among other things) regulate and control its own physical space.

Section 5 Article 1 of the Constitution states that "The Constitution of the AMS shall take precedence over all other societies and student organizations to which members of the societies belong, unless otherwise specified in the Constitution and Bylaws."

The proposed motion is indeed an addition to the Constitution in the form of another Bylaw.

Dave Court sees Koopman as "over-reacting." "If the AMS has that attitude, then this illustrates the need to have faculty rights written on paper," he added.

Pub chair kidnapped

Julia Grunau

In a daring but foolhardy escapade last Thursday night, two second-year male MBA students abducted a chair, valued at $225, from the Underground Pub.

The chair, a 1978 Chrome Cutie, was snatched on a foolish whim and was carried almost out of her home before an alert waitress noticed that a gagged and struggling piece of furniture was absenting herself from the premises without the use of her own legs. She immediately alerted the A.M.S. Constables. The two culprits and their terrified captive were caught on Union Street, some distance from the scene of the crime.

As they halted the fleeing band, the A.M.S. Constables pointed to the shivering victim and demanded, "What are you doing with that chair?"

"What chair?" said the pranksters brightly.

The two miscreants were told they would have to appear in A.M.S. Court shortly, and that kidnapping was a serious crime to be punished to the full extent of the law. The chair could not be reached for comment.

The World in Brief...

Sandi Arthurs

Cairo- The Shah of Iran has decided to take up residence in Cairo in response to President Anwar Sadat's invitation. The exiled Monarch still has intentions of eventually resuming his position in Iran.

Ottawa- A clean-up of radioactive debris in Northwest Territories (emitted from a Russian satellite crash) has proven costly. Canada has presented the Soviet Union with a 6 million dollar damage claim arising from the crash but the Soviet Union has not yet officially accepted responsibility for clean-up costs.

Tehran- The Government of Iran has taken a firm stand against the Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini's return. Thousands of angry Iranians rioted against the government's stand in several cities from January 24-26 and 22 people were reported dead with dozens wounded and hundreds arrested thus far.

Toronto- Four teenagers from Winston Churchill Collegiate in Scarborough have been charged with possession of an explosive device. After receiving threatening calls from William Bartal (one of the four charged) police discovered a homemade fire bomb in the auditorium of the high school.

Toronto- Four students from Weston Collegiate in Toronto were killed as a result of a bus-tanker-truck collision on Highway 400 near Barrie on January 25. The OPP released the names of the deceased seven hours after the accident. 29 others were injured, some seriously.

Ontario- The Ministry of Education will begin nation-wide achievement testing of selected students this spring to find out if the average students are meeting provincial curriculum standards. Province-wide competency tests will be available in June of 1980 for optional use by schoolboard officials and teachers.

London- The strike situation in Britain has been described as the worst since the 1930's. Rail workers, truckers, teachers, gravediggers and hospital orderlies have all taken their turns. Low-paid hospital workers left many cancer patients without care, including radiotherapy. Hospital officials say they expect some patients to die without this care.

Canada- The Canadian Government has arranged to borrow 35 Billion yen from Japan at 7.1% over a 10 year period and then the same amount at 7.6% over 20 years. Seventy billion is approximately 353 million dollars (U.S.)... tuck money for the Canucks.

Beirut- The head of the Palestinians' secret service Abu Hassan was killed along with four bodyguards and four pedestrians in a car bomb explosion last week in Beirut. One of the three suspected assassins is 25 year old Ronald Kolberg, a Vancouver man studying biology at the University of Israel. The Palestinian guerillas made this identification through the discovery of Mr. Kolberg's passport. His father is desperately trying to convince the Palestinians that it is a case of mistaken identity.

Booze ban blues

Shelly Matson

Thursday night Outer Council voted to support the ban on alcohol at Richardson Stadium next year. The move was prompted by a letter to AMS President Dave Brown by Vice-Principal H.M. Love encouraging the support of the law at public events at Queens.

Brown told the Journal, "We suspected it was coming. They (the Administration) received a letter from their insurance company. As Love pointed out, (referring to an incident at a game this year) when they have visions of students hanging from light standards and get a call from their insurance company there is only one answer."

"We've had complaints from students that they couldn't enjoy the game (because of drunkenness) as well as from property owners and constables," he added.

Love commented, "You don't have to explain why one attempts to obey the law. There has been a general impression that Queen's students are exempt from the law. Our insurers didn't bring pressure at all but we found when we were investigating this that if we were to condone illegal activities our insurance probably wouldn't be valid."

"Increasing drunkenness and accidents at games" prompted the move, according to Love.

Chief Constable Colin Carter

admitted that there was no pressure from the constables before to ban liquor, although it was talked about. "I think it's a sad thing—I'm sorry it had to come to this, but I think it's in the best interests of the students."

When asked whether the alcohol ban could actually have an effect on drunkenness, Carter said, "Most definitely I don't think the crowds will be as rowdy. The gates will be a lot more of a problem though, and there will be an increase in parties before the game. There'll still be a lot of inebriated people at the game."

Carter said that he couldn't predict how the alcohol ban will actually be enforced as next year's Chief Constable will be responsible.

AMC Vice-president John Koopman said, "It's too bad that Queen's students weren't able to drink and act civilized, but I understand Love's position." When asked why the AMS had not experimented with a few 'dry' games last fall, he said there were difficulties enforcing such a measure mid-year.

Among students interviewed around campus by the Journal, the general consensus is that drunkenness will not be decreased by an alcohol ban. Rather students will drink just as much, if not more, before games, and warm-up parties will definitely increase in popularity.

Those were the days... a few changes are expected for next year's games.

Close down your factory

Dear Editor,
I would like to address an appeal in the face of subtle abuse of power. While it is within our rights to ask someone to stop smoking in our presence, there are times when we dare not, or rather I dare not.

In a seminar with a few students and an instructor, the instructor lights up his, or her's, cigarette, cigar, or pipe, pauses elegantly and then may state "No one object?" I pause, with my last breath of stale, but still relatively carbonogen, carbon-monoxide, and methylxanthine free air still in my lungs. My eyes fix on the nicotine stained fingers (how cliché) of the instructor, just for an instant, then I fight my mounting nausea and remain silent. In fact, I remain silent for the rest of the seminar. The purpose of the seminar may be completely lost from me, my eyes burn, my stomach churns my head explodes; a hectic day becomes a devastating day. A few hours later I come home, run a few miles, shower, and change, throw my clothes in the laundry—the smoke still lingers.

How do you ask the person who cradles your whole life (that's for real in my program) in his hands, his yellow stained hands, those hands kept steady by an addiction I pity him for, yet understand, how do I ask him (or them—for they are legion) to close down the factory for awhile.

In the past I have objected with little success, much social ostracism and real damage to the vital teacher-student relationship. By insisting on my rights, protecting my health (and the instructors), I have opened a wound, a raw aching wound in the instructors psyche that will not heal, that will have no balm but smoking and that I have denied or threatened and I am thus the enemy.

My plea is this, you all know who you are, smokers, you are only 32% of Canada's population now. Do not light up where you don't know whether your habit is welcome or not; don't shove it down the throats of those who, like me, dare not object but who lose so much of their joy of life and learning through your subtle abuse of power.

I am desperate and in a corner!!!!

Residence rip-off

The Editor,

A curious phenomenon in residence is starting up at this time, as it does every year at Queen's. A great many upper year students are considering renting houses, apartments, etc. and a few of them have decided that it is perfectly acceptable for them to furnish their kitchens, living rooms, bedrooms or whatever courtesy of Queen's. Not only are people holding countless "cutlery parties" at Leonard and Ban Righ, but they also have no scruples against taking glasses, bowls, plates, in short everything but the kitchen sink (and the only reason they aren't taking that is because it's cemented down).

I have also overheard others discussing ripping off cots from other floors or residences (so their own residence won't be charged for it), discussing ways to rip off Leonard for chairs (they've decided the tables are just too awkward) and other unmentioned places for desks. It is a well-known fact that hundreds of dollars worth of sheets have already been stolen and I'm sure this trend is being encouraged to continue

Come on people, don't you realize that you're ripping yourselves off! Are "the authorities" going to be forced to have patrols checking each and every one of us as we leave our cafeterias? What has happened to our standards? Are we all so poverty stricken that we can't afford to buy our own implements for our own houses? I thought one of the reasons for moving into a house was to teach us how to manage. What about our younger brothers and sisters coming into residence within the next few years?

At best most people say nothing - usually they just smile at this "petty theft". Have they ever considered that all this stealing is one of the reasons residence fees are rising again this coming year? Most people just turn their heads when others steal boxes of cereal, loaves of bread, etc., but it's got to stop somewhere - can't we be responsible for stopping ourselves, by ourselves?

Editorial misleading

The Editor,

Friday's editorial "An ascent out of the maelstrom?" was a naive, indulgent, misinforming, and misleading comment on union democracy in general, and the strike involving community college support workers in particular.

You conjured up the false image of a strike-mad union leadership which, frenzied by a blood-lust for militancy, "...will not be tripped up in its designs (to call a strike) by the workers they are elected to represent." You then asserted that this was "In direct contravention of the basic tenets of union democracy."

Rubbish! What is your source of information proving that the leadership is in fact running roughshod over the "unenlightened" rank and file and abusing the union's power structure in an undemocratic fashion to the detriment of the workers themselves? I strongly suspect that your sources go no deeper than your own casual conjectures. Such musings should not be misportrayed as facts that is irresponsible journalism at its worst.

I feel compelled to note that the strike decision was agreed on by all twenty-two local delegates and has been very strongly supported, indicating support of the leadership and their decisions. We would expect this from a democratic body, of course.

Further, just because a union does not identically conform to your own obviously very narrow notions of "democracy", this does not categorically illegitimize its actions. You should have been prompted to compare your own blinkered prejudices with the facts and noticed that the union being considered is quite possibly a fine example of what a union should actually be.

It would have required a large sledgehammer to make the true facts conform to your caustic condemnations, yet you proceeded with your unsubstantiated rant regardless. It seems that you wished to pin a hypothetical construct which dwells only in your mind on the closest thing at hand - definitely a bad shot in this case.

In short, the editorial was clearly an irresponsible attempt to mount an inappropriate hobbyhorse. The facts were subsequently distorted beyond recognition to better serve the rhetoric which you evidently wished to espouse at any cost. Next time consider the facts a little more carefully, even if they happen to be inconveniently incongruent with the sermon which you wish to preach. Responsible journalism demands this much, as does your own integrity and enlightenment.

Shhhh...

The Editor:
There is a problem here at Queen's. It has neither the great importance of tuition increases nor the great interest of cafeteria chairs, but if this Queen's problem seems boring, don't worry, there is a quick and easy solution right at hand. But we've gotten ahead of ourselves... first the problem.

Many people seem to feel that the reading rooms in the library are "quiet" places. Well, they are mistaken. The reading rooms in the library are "silent" places. This is the only way I can think of to demonstrate the distinction: One is "quiet" when one drives their car through a hospital zone, one is "silent" when one is lying in a funeral home.

What the distinction means in the library, is the difference between an attempt at intense, concentrated work, and an attempt to think despite the people at the next table who are exchanging recipes, completing illicit drug sales, or enthusiastically gossiping about their mutual friends or enemies.

A plea to library users, even a single minute of conversation is enough to break someone's concentration. If you were to exchange gossip, insults and academic advice in the hallway instead of in the reading rooms, (who knows?) the

Eunuchs, macho men and the YMCA

The Editor:
I don't particularly like the Underground, with or without a new name and I'll still avoid it at night, turned off by the sight of 150 oversexed crossbreeds between Annie Hall and Farrah trying to manoeuvre another 150 carefully lemon-rinsed studs onto the steel postage stamp they call a dance floor. Seeing them try to sweat gracefully bothers me.

One time I do like the Pub is Friday afternoon. In fact, for about 3 years now, ole Jemichael and the boys have been going down there for a beer, good music and a hot sandwich. But there are flaws to this girl watching, beer guzzling heaven and they are summed up in two words "Village People".

I hate disco. I can take the Bee Gees, even after they put their I've-just-been-castrated-voices to a disco beat, but not much else. I draw the line at Macho Man and YMCA. To crown an already dismal tape the other day these two sterling productions slid into the Pub, and to my shame, some people actually got up and danced. If the CUAA had seen trend might spread and eventually even the library employees might catch on.

Sean Dewart

it, they'd have taken the trophy back and given it to UBC.

I know the managers are trying to give a good selection, but my point is simply that people do not have the right to hear "Village People." Topless waitresses - yes. The Body Politics "How To for Tonka Tots" - yes. But there are limits. And the

OPEC is not UNICEF

The Editor,

I definitely agree with Mr. Paul Tinari that a considerable amount of the O.P.E.C.'s oil money goes to the rulers of the O.P.E.C. countries rather than to the people - still, this does not mean that these people do not badly need the money. I would like to remind Mr. Tinari that it is the U.S. who supports these rulers and their regimes. When the people in Iran rose against corruption and demanded that the oil money go to the people, not to the Shah or the army, it was the U.S. who backed the Shah.

Americans think of the Iranian revolution either as a communist one or a revolution against modernization and an attempt to go back thousands of years to establish their ancient Islam. Strange enough that it is wrong for Iranians to establish Islamic rules in their own country but right for Israelis to establish Judaism in other countries, though the Jewish limit is "Macho Man."

Last Friday they interrupted Springsteen to put on a disco song. Now I know that's illegal in eleven states and two provinces. You get shot for it in some strict European nations. It's got to stop here. Down with disco.

J. Michael Thomas

religion is more ancient than Islam.

You say, "I would be happy to pay more money for my gas if I thought it was going to help the poor." Sir, you are not paying the price of oil as a charity. It is their oil, their money and their right to raise the price when the price of everything in the world is rising except for the dollar.

Another claim you made was that "Arab countries have more advanced equipment than the majority of Soviet and U.S. forces." I do not know how you reached this conclusion but I know that studies conducted by U.S. government show that Israel has more advanced weapons (and more in quantity too) than all Arab countries together and that there is no need for Israel to doubt its security. Don't you think the Arabs too might be in need of armed forces, at least to maintain their own security?

9 Opinion

by Eric Evans

It was encouraging to notice surveyors working at the foot of Johnson Street this week. This means that the new waterfront development project is finally under way. At long last Kingston is making some real progress.

The waterfront development project, Harbour Place, calls for the construction of three apartment buildings, 123 condominiums (the passenger pigeon of tomorrow?), "luxury" offices and a Ramada Inn. This economy version of Toronto's Harbour Castle has been approved by Kingston City Council and is to be located between city hall and the Kingston Yacht Club. This project, along with the Holiday Inn and Howard Johnson's already located along the water, should just about completely obstruct the waterfront view in that section of Kingston.

Well, what a relief that is. For too many years Kingstonians have been forced to look at the boring shore line of Wolf Island. Besides, most of that water is polluted anyway and all of those sailboats one sees in the summer simply clog up the skyline.

Under the gleeful, but shortsighted eyes of Kingston merchants, important innovation and progress is being made along the shoreline. One only has to look at the contrast between the new Howard Johnson's and the old Firehall Restaurant to have the true beauty of concrete driven home.

We at Queen's, of course, are already familiar with the joys of concrete in the form of the more recent buildings on campus. It is about time that Kingstonians also abandoned the use of limestone. Concrete is lovely stuff. It never needs any care. It just sits there - probably forever.

Progress is what Kingston needs - more concrete, aluminum siding and above all, fake wood panelling. Old buildings have uneven floors, old plumbing and real wood that has to be painted. Hopefully the trend being established towards revitalization through concrete along the waterfront will reverse the disturbing practice of some entrepreneurs to remodel old buildings. The Prince George Hotel is a case in point.

At least some of the credit for this fine development project must go to the Ramada Inn people. After tearing down a block of student rented houses several years ago at the corner of Princess and Barrie streets to build one of their fine hotels, they have farsightedly put the empty lot up for sale so that they can build on the water.

Contrary to Mr. Pantony's belief, the values and morals held by society do not exist themselves outside of man's consciousness. I agree with Mr. Pantony that philosophies and religions play a large role in the determination of our values, but it is men who create their own philosophies and religions.

In creating our philosophies, we draw upon our subjective life experiences for their basis and legitimation. In any society these experiences are continually changing and therefore our philosophies, values and morals must also change. Our laws must change to serve our best interests as they exist now, not in the past. Man makes laws for his benefit, man should not exist for the benefit of the law.

Mr. Pantony believes that we are moving away from the former North American value set as characterized by the institutions of Christianity and democracy. I would suggest that he critically re-examine these particular institutions as they have operated in practice rather than in theory. He may discover some internal inconsistencies.

The politics of prohibition

The Editor:

True to its Scottish origins, Queen's is a university of drinkers. Or rather, we were. Now the powers that be have decided that we shall no longer have the pleasure of drinking (alcohol) at our football games.

Where can we place the blame for this unilateral and inequitable action of Vice-Principal Love? Several, among them the editorial writers of the Journal, say that alcohol is the root of the problem. This is a falsehood. Alcohol does not cause violence and stupidity anymore than cars cause accidents.

People cause violence. People break legs and climb light poles. Alcohol is but a convenient scapegoat. The problem lies with those few people who are unable to control their behaviour. The problem lies with an inept student government. The great majority of our students are capable of controlling their consumption of potables and of controlling themselves. But because a few people have been very foolish, all of us must suffer.

Why could the A.M.S., who were so quick to protect me from the harmlessness of the Battered Wives, not act on an issue which really mattered? Why was there no specific policy established, and publicized, to deal with intoxicated boozers? The A.M.S. failed to act, failed to think. But what else is new, you ask?

This is democracy in action. I am being punished for something somebody else did. I resent that I am extremely angry with our acclaimed representatives. I am also frustrated. There is nothing to do not except bitch and moan, and let Dave Brown and his troupe of clowns know that I am not pleased by their total failure to serve the interests of their constituents. Had they even announced that they were considering the problem, Vice-Principal Love could have got by without making this momentous announcement.

Shaw (I think) said "The law is an ass." Quite often, so is the man who administers it. I have never had any trouble ignoring those asses in the past, and whether I shall in the future is not for me to say.

lain Bruce

The only problem that I can see with the project is that one side of each apartment building is going to face the lake - but then I'm sure a few must always suffer for the benefit of us all.

Soviet turn of events

by Paul Tinar:

With Brezhnev in his mid-seventies, and his health and strength uncertain, thoughts now turn to who will be the person big enough to fill his shoes. Rightfully, there is much concern in the west as to who will head the largest Communist country in the world.

In the front spot at the moment is a man by the name of Y.V. Andropov who has been the head of the K.G.B., the dreaded secret police of the U.S.S.R., since the early 1970's. He is known by his friends to be a faithful party leader and by his enemies as a ruthless pursuer of all those who threaten the political stability of the Soviet Union or its allies.

Cool but awake

The Editor:

Sandy Stephenson's concern over this university's wasting of energy, in the January 16 edition of the Journal (Hot air leaves her cold) is rather misinformed in that the reason for the university's "benevolence" in supplying the environment with warm air is simply to provide ventilation. As anyone who has ever tried to stay awake in a stuffy classroom knows, air circulation is essential, even in the winter. While ventilation is reduced during the winter months, in order to minimize heat loss, it is still necessary to let out stale, warm air.

As for "economy and well-organized financial administration", Queen's physical plant, which controls heating, has managed to reduce energy consumption at Queen's by 35 percent in the last 5 years.

Kim McCahill

He was first noticed by the world when he made a speech in the city of Petrozavodsk, stating very clearly that he believed that the United States had run things in the world for long enough. He went on to say that the whole of North American society is already condemned by the basic inefficiencies of the capitalist system and as far as he was concerned, the West was a "has been" power.

It is clear the Andropov's view of détente is a state of affairs where all western countries acknowledge their inferiority and bow to the will of the Soviet Union, which is, he said, "The nation of the future."

The nations of the West wait patiently for the inevitable death or resignation of Brezhnev, knowing little of what will follow. It is quite certain that should Mr. Andropov become the new head of the U.S.S.R.

Diamonds and Toads

by Julia Grunau

Let's say that you're sitting down at your desk fully intending to start that long-put-off, face-blanching, eye-twitching essay which you've been putting out of your mind for the past month. It is due in two days. (The reason you're starting so early is that you have a firm commitment to put it with all the other child molesters tomorrow night.) Statistics have proven that the most probable thing to happen next is that an Obstacle will come to you.

It will come to you because of your deep-rooted subconscious conviction that your time is too valuable to waste dithering about with references to Berkeley and Kitto and Plato and Tennyson when you could be outside building a beer bottle fifteen feet high. An Obstacle presents itself in just such a way that you wonder how you could have thought of writing trivia about Yeats when there is this very pressing, urgent thing that has to be attended to straightaway. Pushing your books from you, you congratulate the powers that be (mistletoe for us Druids) that you have your life in order and you know the importance of using your time wisely.

What constitutes an Obstacle? Suddenly deciding that you must pray to your patron saint for guidance - and your patron saint lives on Johnson Street and is in fact your boy or girl friend - is an Obstacle. Saying "Diet be damned" and going to fuel your bod (again) is a very hazardous Obstacle. Deciding to review your knowledge of Colonial America and consequently burying yourself in "Sweet Savage Love" or "Wild Western Winifred" is also an Obstacle fraught with peril. Obstacles are crafty. Many of them have been to Oxford. Obstacles are just as educated as you are. Obstacles are as wily and cunning and joyful and sly as Salome. And they're infinite.

"Writing Journal articles is the biggest Obstacle of all" said my friend Michael, dutifully studying biophysics and looking resentfully at me.

A future apart: Canadian unity at any cost

Dave Duff

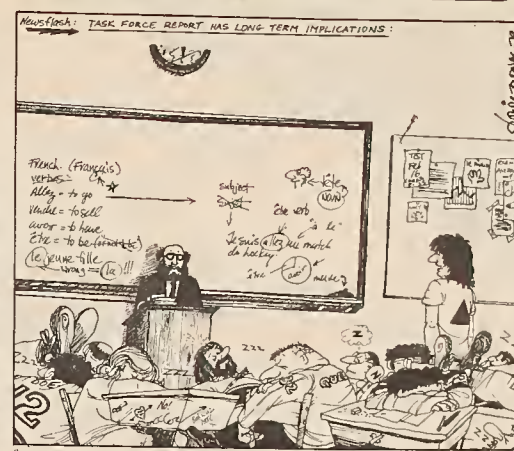

While looking at the recommendations made by the Task Force on Canadian Unity, the words Sovereignty-Association kept ringing in my mind. The report, entitled "A Future Together", stresses provincial autonomy and particularly the special status of Quebec to such a degree that I couldn't help thinking that Rene Levesque should be quite pleased.

Sovereignty-Association, though a vague term open to various interpretations, seems to be a system whereby Quebec would be given a large degree of sovereignty while still maintaining certain ties, especially economic, with the rest of the country. There is a fine line between this definition of Sovereignty-Association and the plan set out by the Task Force on Canadian Unity.

The one factor that becomes abundantly clear in the report is that the Task Force is scared - so scared of separation that it is willing to maintain unity at almost any cost. As a result, the Task Force has suggested a system consisting of two separate nations within the same country. The report clearly emphasizes Canada's "duality".

"Let us put our conviction strongly: Quebec is distinctive and should, within a viable Canada, have the powers necessary to protect and develop its distinctive character; any political solution short of this would lead to the rupture of Canada."

Since a special status for Quebec alone would be extremely unpopular in English Canada, "A Future Together" proposes that all provinces be granted the same added legislative powers.

The most significant alteration to the present system concerns language rights. Rather than entrenching minority language rights in the constitution, the Task Force would leave decisions concerning language up to the respective provincial governments. Furthermore, the Federal Government's right to disallow provincial legislation would be eliminated. In effect, the Task Force has given its tacit approval to Quebec's Bill 101.

According to the Task Force plans, the Supreme Court will be restructured to consist of eleven judges, five of them from Quebec. This seems an obvious move to placate Quebec.

50 foot fangs a fantasy phobia

The Editor

Instead of viewing Drew Fagan's defence of the Body Politic article as a "defence of perverse trends in a society" one may see it as a defence of the right to one's individuality. The issue to be dealt with is not the actual article but the whole issue of homosexuality in general.

A response to Rod Pantony's letter is necessary in light of recent spray painting exhibitions around campus including the literary masterpiece, "Q.H.A. F-k off and die."

Our generation, supposedly enlightened, tends to be fairly closeminded about the whole homosexual issue. To put it down in the name of Christian ethics is childish. To be paranoid about homosexuals because they might bite you with their fifty foot fangs only points out how unsure people are of their own sexuality.

An individual's sexual preference, be it heterosexual or homosexual, is something very private and personal. The drive behind them both is basic. Let's not judge a person by their sexuality, let's try and be a little more open minded and judge someone just for being themselves.

Lets start living in the twentieth century and not retreat to the old days of conducting witch-hunts.

It's not lease it or lose it

The Editor:

On behalf of Student Tenants in Kingston I wish to offer some advice to students looking for a place to live. Already, many landlords have notices spread over the campus advertising houses and apartments for rent, and in the eagerness to secure a place for next year before the supply dries up, some students may do themselves a grave disservice.

Is your landlord trying to get you to renew a lease? If so, he probably won't tell you that it is to your disadvantage to sign on for another year. If you wish to stay on, merely let your lease run out, and your tenancy will automatically continue on a month to month basis. This means that you can leave at any time during the coming year provided that you give your landlord sixty days notice. For students who have a September to September lease, and plan to leave in May 1980, letting this year's lease run out and continuing on a month to month basis will save them the trouble of trying to sublet next summer. Your landlord cannot evict you for refusing to renew a lease, nor can he raise your rent by more than 6 percent per year without cause, so that you are as well protected without a lease as with one.

Are you renting for the first time? Make sure that the premises your landlord shows you will definitely be free when you plan to move in.

Do you know what to look for in a lease? Your rights and obligations as a tenant? Most students don't, which is why year after year they face disputes with their landlords, or worse, meekly submit to unnecessary inconveniences. Tonight at 7 p.m., in the 3rd floor Common Room of the University Centre, there will be an opportunity for you to learn how to be an effective, protected and happy tenant.

By Paul Tinari

Of the four "forces" known in nature, gravity is by far the weakest, yet because its effects are additive, it can be responsible for compressing huge chunks of matter right out of existence, and thereby tearing the very fabric of space and time.

The black hole is the result of such compression, composed of matter at infinite density, and with such an intense gravitational field that nothing, not even light can escape to the outside, hence the name Black Hole.

He will find himself compressed to zero volume and at the same time stretched to infinitely extended length Picture a hypothetical accumulation of mass about the same size as the Earth. Initially, assume that the escape velocity for a particle starting from the surface is about the same as for the Earth, or 7 miles/sec.

A light photon emitted from the surface would lose energy in escaping from the gravitational field, so would be seen by an external observer as shifted to the red, or at a lower energy than that at which it was emitted.

Now, as large amounts of matter are added, the magnitude of the velocity necessary to escape from the planet would also increase, and the

our fate and that of the whole universe is sealed light photons would be seen to be shifted farther and farther into the red as the mass was increased.

Eventually the internal temperature would reach that necessary for thermonuclear fusion, and the resulting energy production would tend to counter the mounting gravitational forces. Such is the situation for our sun.

When the sun's hydrogen fuel is exhausted, it is expected to eventually collapse into a white dwarf with a radius of approximately 5,000 km, and with a density of about 1 ton/cm<sup>3</sup>. The escape velocity from such a body would be of the order of several thousand miles/sec, and the matter would be supported against further collapse by degenerate electrons.

If the mass of the body is increased still further, it will eventually achieve densities of the order of  $1 \times 10^{14}$  gm/cm<sup>3</sup> which is the same as that of the atomic nucleus. Such bodies are known as neutron stars, and have long been known to Cosmology.

Such bodies usually have radii of about 10 km, and are supported against further gravitational collapse by repulsive forces with the nucleus. The escape velocity from such a body would be about 9/10 the speed of light.

If still more matter is added to the pile, we finally reach the critical stage when there no longer exists a repulsive force powerful enough to hold out against the ever increasing gravitational forces.

When the escape velocity reaches the speed of light, the matter collapses to infinite density. A hole now exists in the fabric of space-time.

There are several points of interest relating to black holes which should be examined. The black hole is in a closed horizon, meaning that it is totally isolated from the rest of the universe. No signal can be sent from the inside of a black hole to an external observer.

Cosmologists explain this state of affairs by pointing out that when the black hole is formed, the whole of the space geometry around it will collapse in around it, creating what cosmologists call a singularity in the fabric of space-time.

It is believed that once a black hole has been formed, there is no way of reversing the process. Simply said, the matter inside the black hole is effectively eliminated from the rest of the universe.

To understand the implications of Black Holes investigations consider a hypothetical example. A curious layman decides to ride on the surface of a collapsing star so that he can gain some knowledge on the formation of black holes. To play it safe, he decides to send uniformly spaced signals to a friend, a cosmologist, who will remain as an external observer at a very large distance away throughout the experiment. At first, everything goes as expected, cosmologist receiving the regularly spaced signals from the layman telling him about the progression of the collapse.

The layman continues to send out equally spaced signals according to his clock, but as the critical density for black hole formation is approached, the external observer will receive the signals at more and more widely spaced intervals, until when the black hole is formed, the signals take an infinite amount of time to reach him.

The signals, and the layman who sends them, get trapped and eventually destroyed in the collapsing geometry around the black hole.

As far as the distant external observer is concerned, light from the star becomes more and more red shifted, and clocks appear to run more and more slowly. He measures an infinite amount of time for the star to form a black hole.

As far as the layman on the star is concerned, his clock continues to measure equal intervals of time, but things rapidly become very uncomfortable for him. The various parts of the layman's body experience different gravitational forces.

While his feet are attracted to the force acting on the layman's body becomes infinitely large. Thus, since the layman is being pulled into regions of spacetime of infinitely decreasing circumferential area, he will find himself compressed to zero volume and at the same time stretched to infinitely extended length.

The external observer concludes that the fate of the layman is certainly not worth the knowledge gained.

It has been proven mathematically that the matter inside the black hole will be compressed to infinite density, and anything, or anyone which dares venture too close will be sucked into the singularity, and will be condemned to ultimate destruction.

At the international symposium on black holes held recently in

Black Holes

Colorado, it was indicated that there was a very strong possibility that based on radio-interferometric measurements made on our galaxy, that there is a black hole at the geometric center of the galaxy.

As seen from earth, it appears as a zone of concentrated radio emission

A black hole - the graphic representation of a continuous region of curved space time in which two different regions would normally be separated from each other by a large "space-like" region. The formation of a singularity is indicated by the formation of a singularity in the fabric of space-time, the tidal increases as the star collapses. When the critical density is reached and a singularity is formed in the fabric of space-time, the tidal situated in the constellation of Sagittarius. Calculations made by the U.S. Astronomy Observatory indicate that the source of the high intensity emissions is a black hole with a radius of a few kilometers, and with a mass about 100 million times that of the sun. If and when this is confirmed, this could add a whole new dimension to cosmology as we now know it.

Gravitational collapse. Einstein predicted it, because the equations demanded it. Yet Einstein himself could not believe his own prediction. The universe as we now know it, according to all the existing equations must develop a singularity. We observe an expanding universe. Yet, we are left with the possibility of the gravitational collapse of a closed model universe, with all matter, and all of humanity, going to infinitely high densities.

Ahead there lies a rich future for cosmology. The present estimate of the age of the universe varies from upwards to 10 billion years. If we assume that the universe started with a "big bang", then we cannot say what preceded the initial singularity. The equations just refuse to tell us. At the other end of the spectrum, no one is really certain what lies in the future of our universe.

Will our universe continue to expand forever, or will gravitational forces predominate, and cause the universe to end in a spectacular final singularity?

Perhaps the new X-ray telescope which NASA placed into orbit will provide some of the insights needed to find the answers to these questions. The field of neutrino astronomy has barely been touched.

It has been suggested by some researchers that collapsing stars, and perhaps neutron stars and black holes could be detected by their emission of neutrinos. These are essentially massless, particles with no electric charge which are so unreactive that they are believed to be able to pass through several light years of lead without reacting. There are some who believe that the neutrino's extreme frigidity could be overcome with the proper tools, and with enough work and determination.

Gravitational physics remains one of the most fascinating areas of modern science. Black hole formations and its implications to large scale collapse of the universe itself shall provide the ultimate test to Einstein's theories.

It is the opinion of many that modern physics has now reached a crisis point at least as serious as that experienced in 1911. At that time Rutherford's experiments indicated that matter was built up of localized positive and negative charges. But Maxwell had indicated that accelerated charges must radiate, thus all matter should have undergone electric collapse in about  $10^{17}$  seconds. This paradox led to the establishment of quantum mechanics, and a successful solution to the dilemma.

Now, in 1979 we are faced with another crisis. Gravitational collapse appears to be the greatest crisis in physics of all time. If we have a closed universe which obeys Einstein's equations, then eventually a singularity must develop.

We can cope with black holes, because we have the choice of either; 1) observing the collapse from a distance, in which case we can determine nothing about what is happening inside the black hole, or 2) we can simply allow ourselves to slip right into the hole, paying the ultimate price for the knowledge gained.

But for the gravitational collapse of the universe, we have no choice. Our fate, and that of the whole universe is sealed. The prospect of being driven up to infinitely high densities is not appealing, but that is what the present equations tell us.

"All of these endeavours are based on the belief that existence should have a completely harmonious structure. Today we have less ground than ever before for allowing ourselves to be forced away from this wonderful belief."

Fans calmly accept Wiffen at Scarecrow

Wiffen rests on laurels

Colin Hunt

Scarecrow was good for nostalgia last weekend with David Wiffen making one of his annual appearances. To an almost sedate audience, Wiffen played a selection of songs that most of us have heard and loved from past years.

True to tradition Wiffen opened his first set with "Coast-to-coast Fever", the title track of his second album. While there is no question that it is an excellent composition even the best of songs become a bit tired after being used for the same purpose for so long.

The baritone voice for which Wiffen has become renowned performed excellent renditions of his material. It seems as though it was voice build specifically for singing the blues. All of Wiffen's songs are sad songs, but the tempo varies considerably from the melancholy "I Climbed the Stairs" to the hard-driving pace of that old anonymous Blues classic "Stormy Monday". Wiffen has imposed novel interpretations of other writers' songs as well in such tunes as "Cocaine". Wiffen's version is considerably more jazzed up than the more common talking-blues style of Rev Gary Davis. However, even Wiffen's humorous jokes and asides between numbers failed to break the ice, as the audience remained silent for most of the evening.

For anyone who anticipated new compositions the evening was perhaps a disappointment. Wiffen remarked afterwards on his reluctance to present new songs, however the laurels of the best performers eventually wilt, and, recognized this, Wiffen has promised to produce a third album this year.

The guest set was performed by Logan Murray who has acquired a sideman playing bass guitar and flute since he last performed. Murray is impressive, not so much in his current ability but in his potential to develop into a fine writer. His latest compositions are slower, quieter pieces than his normal country style and considerably more moving particularly in "Drift Away" which features a starkly simple and powerful melody. All that Murray needs is expertise; the talent is clearly there waiting to be tapped.

Is Wiffen stagnating?

Demonic perspective controls in Halloween

Mark Henderson

"Suspense is basically providing the audience with the information that the characters do not have. The point is to draw the audience right inside the situation instead of leaving them to watch it from outside, from a distance." Alfred Hitchcock.

The date is Halloween night, 1963. The place is small-town America. Someone enters a house, finds a knife, climbs a set of stairs, and enters the bedroom of a naked young girl, stabbing her to death. The killer is Micheal, a child of six who is committed to a psychiatric hospital for 15 years. It is now October 30, 1978, and Micheal escapes from the institution, setting off a race with time to locate him before he can kill again. This is the premise of Halloween, a new horror-chiller that pulls out all the stops, much in the same tradition of Carrie or Night of the Living Dead. Written, directed, and scored by newcomer John Carpenter, Halloween never wavers from its objective of terror and suspense, managing the feat better than most films of its type.

The opening sequence is an amazing three minute continuous shot from Micheal's point-of-view. We don't realize this yet, as the camera peers from behind bushes and into windows, spying on a young couple wrestling on a couch and retiring upstairs. The camera holds on the empty living room until the young man leaves. We are taken around the house, through the back door, up the staircase and into the room where the victim-to-be is brushing her hair. Heavy breathing permeates the soundtrack as the psychopath executes his twisted act. The bobbing and shifting hand-held camera work effectively involves us, forcing the viewer to face the inevitable.

Donald Pleasance stars as a psychologist who knows all too well, the unbalanced and totally evil mind of Micheal, who has been his patient

"Applause, Applause"

Christiane Schull

What is it we're living for? Applause of course, the musical drama coming to the Grand Theatre February 1,2,3,8,9,10.

The musical, based on the movie "All About Eve" which starred Bette Davis and Lauren Bacall, revolves around Margaux Channing (played here by Cathy Brouse), an aging actress whose position as star is threatened by the young burning ambition of Eve Harrington (Debbie Frehr). Eve, with coy engineering, becomes very friendly with Margaux's friends, wins them to her side and uses them to climb from understudy to star. Once Eve claims Margaux's place on stage, Margaux is left bitterly floundering until she realizes that the love for her director Bill Sampson (John McFarlane) is that "Something Greater" (theme song) which in the end replaces her all-embracing passion for the stage.

Applause is a "very adult show", director Jill Hodgkinson says, the one non-student in an all student run Queen's Musical Theatre Production. It is a musical with substance, and a multiplicity of strengths "Applause" might just get yours.

over the years. After an excellent escape scene shot in a rain storm, Pleasance tries to warn the authorities of Micheal's home town of the impending danger, but with minimal success. The main body of Halloween concerns the parallel story of a young teenaged girl, who, while babysitting on Halloween night becomes the killer's new target. A night of friendly spooks and candy evolves into a setting for murder and violence, involving some friends who fall prey to a vicious-looking meat cleaver.

Director Carpenter understands the mechanics of the horror genre and exploits the style admirably. The mundane script doesn't cause much damage as the audience is taken through a plot twists, being forced to observe from the killer's point-of-view. Carpenter's driving, forceful musical score adds tension to the proceedings, as the doctor attempts to locate his strangely silent patient before he strikes again. Dark corners, menacing shadows, and the camera's restricting view create an atmosphere which becomes unbearable at times, as the characters remain oblivious to the impending danger. Halloween manipulates us incessantly, a classic Hitchcockian example of allowing the viewer a privileged position of awareness.

The moral implications of the film are laid out concisely. Goodness is represented by the children and the teenagers involved, with Donald Pleasance racing to prevent their annihilation. The killer is evil, a totally immoral creature who may be Satan himself. The difference in Halloween is that a clever twist at the end subverts the usual culmination of good triumphing over evil. 1970's cynicism is perfectly asserted in a fashion that places the film above the simplistic (and unconvincing) moralizing of Dracula, Frankenstein, or other monsters of the "old school". Evil isn't so easily defeated here, and Halloween pushes the horror genre into an uncharted territory of disturbing dimensions.

Interview with Harry Chapin

Rob Southcott

Many of your songs are unhappy. Is that the way that you look upon the world?

Say there's two people who have cancer on their foot. One goes dancing and the other goes to have his foot cut off. The guy who dances all night is a fool, but the guy who goes and gets his foot cut off is an optimist, 'cause he's dealing with the real world so that he can have a future. So yes, some of my subject matter is based on reality, but if anyone goes out of a Harry Chapin concert feeling depressed, it just happens. I think seeing things clearly is the important first step.

Why are so many of your songs about loneliness?

Loneliness is the unique burden of mankind. A tree doesn't know it's alive but a human being knows he's alive, and we understand the spaces between us and rock or trees so a large part of human intercourse, both literal and figurative, is how we bridge those distances, and I think loneliness is a very important part of this human condition. Yes, I write a lot of songs about lonely people, but who isn't lonely?

Tell me how you became involved with funding World Hunger Year?

Well, back in the 60's I had the obligatory big mouth, asking why successful people didn't do more for society. In 1972 I started to become successful and I had to face my own bullshit, so I started doing what I call "guilt concerts": name a disease and I did a benefit for it. I started realizing that it was only gesture and if I was really serious, I'd get involved in what I call "change oriented organizations". A perfect example of leverage is when the oil companies put $50 million into lobbying and get $50 billion in tax benefits. That's a sensible investment. If I'm going to raise $700,000, I want to make sure that it gets that multiplier effect.

The sub-total cost of getting a presidential commission to re-evaluate all of American food and hunger policy, was $90,000. Now if we do what we're supposed to do, we'll have an effect on the lives of hundreds of thousands of people.

We're not just private citizens anymore, we're public citizens who are armchair experts on the basic items, and to the degree that we're not doing that, we're not good my own life, and I don't want to say something that negative about myself. We've got to have a close enough relationship to our own selves so that we can start making value decisions again.

How is it that you seem to really be enjoying yourself all the time on stage?

I've had a lot of jobs, and this is my job now. I go where I want, when I want. I play for thousands of people and get thousands of dollars. I give my own songs and get extraordinarily positive response. Do you think I should be dumb enough not to enjoy that? I've got the best job in the world and if I didn't enjoy it I'd be a bigger damn fool than I already am.

Why is it that you write so many story songs?

What storytelling can do is kind of synthesize ideas, and it's a magical thing that just happens to have been forgotten. Nobody else is fool enough to do it because it's not economical in terms of its quantitative success and it doesn't translate as best it could onto records. A good record is something that, when you've heard it, you put it back on, but when you've finished a story, you don't necessarily turn back to page one.

Are you just a "cult performer"?

I don't know, I think I'm a little bit different. I think that compared to some performers, I'm more committed to certain aspects of my music. The good performers have always given the audience the opinion that this night in this place, is important to them, and the audience responds to that, and it's a mutually building thing.

Americans, we're not good Canadian. Would you say that the dominant force behind you is more your charity work than your music?

No, I'd say it's a combination. I don't want to make napalm all day and then go home and be nice to my kids. I don't want that kind of dichotomy, I'd rather find a way of integrating. I think you really can find a way of putting your life together so that your family, your music, the things you love, your community, they can all be mutually supportive. All the good and services, the lifestyle that we know has been trickling down in a negative sort of way, and I, in the last five years have been trying to deal with that fact in

Orford Strings and York Winds - 21 fuge salute

Fugues are fatiguing

Fiona Grieve

What would you think if you looked at a programme and found that you were going to hear twenty-one Bach fugues? My initial reaction was one of dismay.

I felt this was unfair to an unsophisticated audience who had no idea what kind of programme to expect. However, as one of the artists pointed out to me in intermission, a series of fugues confront us each time we go into a church.

The combined sounds of the Orford String Quartet and the York Winds was far superior to that of an organ, though. The richness and contrast in tone was far beyond what pulling out a few organ stops can do.

All in all, the variety of fugues was amazing. Bach's inventiveness with rhythms and "mirroring" was augmented by the artists' choice of phrasing, instrumentation and dynamics. These must have presented quite a challenge as Bach gave no guidance for interpretation in these areas.

The opening fugue had the mature, well-controlled sound of an experienced string quartet. From here the artists gradually introduced the wind players, culminating in a fourth fugue which involved them all. This risks being rather 'busy' but concluded the first section well.

Although the next two movements were played in a polished fashion, the intensity was sustained at too high a level for comfort. The release finally came in the ninth movement which was faster and more lively.

After intermission, the stylistic contrasts were even more pronounced. From formality to simplicity, from the marked drama of a fugue featuring the lower instruments, to a subdued, muted sound, the wealth of tone combinations continued.

The last fugue was never completed (Bach left it hanging in the 23rd bar) and is rather anticlimactic. The artists rightly added one of his Choral Preludes, "Before thy Throne". This rich, harmonious work made a good ending.

The Orford String Quartet impressed me throughout the performance with the polish and sensitivity of their delivery. The idea of pairing this group of Kingston favourites with a well-known Wind Quintet was a good one. However, the programme selection left something to be desired for the majority of people. The audience congratulated the performers heartily

The show must go on

There were a few anxious moments for the cast and crews of A Midsummer Night's Dream Saturday. While taking a much deserved second curtain call Friday, Julian Cunningham (Theseus/Oberon) took a nasty spill when he tripped over a riser on stage. Despite being totally immobilized because of the severe swelling and bruises he suffered, Julian went on to perform for Saturday's sold out audience with the aid of crutches.

Bravo to the entire cast for their determination and a brilliant production.

Not just mechanical engineering

Madeline Mills

It was encouraging to see such an excellent turnout at the opening of Baroque Architectural Drawings, a student-organized exhibition at the Agnes Etherington Art Center. One might not think of architectural drawings as beautiful but they do not merely concentrate on the mechanical engineering aspects of the structure. Considerations of light, shadow and decoration are important elements.

Since the exhibition is organized by students at Art History 397, it offers a unique flavour in its approach and composition. The presentation of the material is concise and direct and interesting relationships among the drawings has been brought to light.

The guest curator aptly describes the Baroque as "one of the richest and most diverse periods in the history of Western art". From 1600 to 1750 the cultural climate in Europe proved ideal for the growth of the individual geniuses both artistic and intellectual, like Bernini, Newton and J.S. Bach. Their period was characterized by courtly opulence and zealous religious devotion. This is nowhere more apparent than in the architecture which survives as a tangible record.

With the available drawings from the Phyllis Lambert Collection, the students relate the work of the English architect Nicholas Hawkmoor to the European Baroque. This facet was reinforced in the Architectural Historian, Pierre Du Prey's, entertaining and enlightening lecture following the opening.

The exhibition continues until February 22nd.

for achieving the feat of managing to remain artistic to the last in such a long series of similar pieces. I could not help noticing those who were driven off at intermission, despite the artists' skill.

York sweep shelves Gaels

Chris Cuthbert

The Queen's Golden Gaels hockey team will be on the outside looking in when the OUAA eastern division playoffs get underway two weeks from today.

The York Yeomen administered the crushing blow to Queen's playoff aspirations with a weekend sweep of a home and home series between the two clubs winning 6-4 Saturday evening at York and 5-2 Sunday at Jock Hartly Arena.

By virtue of the two weekend victories York can eliminate the Gaels from post season competition with a victory or draw in their final three matches.

The Gaels led in each match going into the final period, but in both games the Gaels wilted under York's heavy third period pressure. The Yeomen scored three unanswered third period goals Saturday night. Al Sinclair, Chris Kostka and Alf Beasley (into an empty net) paced York's come from behind triumph.

The Queen's defeat spoiled a brilliant individual performance by John MacIntyre who recorded the hat-trick and was outstanding on the Gaels' penalty killing unit.

The Gaels held four one goal leads in the seasaw match but the persistent Yeomen would not surrender.

Bob Fukumoto with two and Scott Densom matched MacIntyre's output before Paul Stothart gave the Gaels their final lead.

The Gaels' third period collapse coincided with Mike Conway's departure from the game with a re-aggravated new injury. "The loss of Mike really hurt because he's one of our most aggressive players", lamented assistant coach Dave Laton.

Sunday afternoon, the Gaels carried a 2-1 lead into the final frame before the Yeomen exploded with four third period goals.

In the doubleheader, the Gaels were outscored 7-0 in the third period. Scott Densom led the Yeomen with two goals, including one into an empty Queen's net. Chris Kostka and Steve Faulkner also contributed to the Yeomen scoring binge. The go-ahead goal, credited to Kostka, was inadvertently steered into the net by Gaels' defenceman John Murray. It was that kind of weekend for the Gaels.

The Gaels' Gary Brandt and York's Steve Faulkner exchanged first period goals before Paul Stothart's second period marker gave Queen's a shortlived lead.

York dominated the game

The York defence was tough as the Yeomen beat the Gaels twice.

territorially outshooting Queen's 34-21. The Ottawa Gee Gees at Jock Hartly Arena in a battle to avoid the basement of the OUAA eastern division.

Bball Gaels scare Vees

Jack Aubrey

Very few teams leave Sudbury with a victory against the Laurentian Voyageurs, yet the Queen's Golden Gaels basketball team nearly pulled off the feat this past Saturday night, losing 78-68 in a close, controversial game. The loss came after a victory the night before in Peterborough against Trent University, 74-69 in an exhibition.

The Gaels started off strongly in the first half, playing strong defense and breaking the Laurentian press easily to jump to a 12-4 lead. This, however, didn't last long, with the Gaels failing to move the ball well on offence. At half time, they trailed 33-23. Coach Tom Frood could find consolation in that this was the finest half of defense the team has played this year.

The Gaels continued to move sluggishly at the offensive end and fell further behind 44-26. At this point, Coach Frood had his team put on their 2-2-1 full-court press which proved so effective that the Gaels drew within 2 points of the Voyageurs, 68-66. It was at this point that the Sudbury referees bestowed ball-hawk, Mark Gagnon with a controversial technical foul for reaching across the plane on a in-bounds play without the proper first warning. Laurentian then drew away and ended the game with several uncontested lay-ups.

Ieff Folkard and Mark Gagnon each scored 15 points with centre Phill Moore adding 14 points. The Laurentian Voyageurs scoring showed how effective the Gaels were on defense holding Mark Bennett, the league's top scorer to 16 points after he had scored 34 points in a league game before Christmas. Mike Mulvihill picked up the slack scoring 26.

The match in Peterborough proved to be a better warm-up to Saturday night than Queen's had anticipated. Trent remained within striking distance through the entire game, and, led by ballhandler Greg Garvey, a former Carleton University star, gave the Gaels a competitive game.

Coach Tom Frood was pleased overall with the play of his team and feels that the experience attained from the game against the Voyageurs will help them this coming weekend when they face University of Toronto on Friday night and Ryerson Saturday afternoon.

Gals trounce Guelph

Mini

The Hockey Gals continue to dominate first place in the OWIAA. On Friday and Saturday the Guelph Gryphons were in town only to be clobbered by margins of 9-1 and 7-1.

Queen's players showed one of their finest team efforts of the season, containing the Gryphons in their own end throughout most of both games. Having to play a good portion of both games shorthanded did not hamper their passing and skating skills. A strong Queen's offense out-manuevered the Gryphon's defense for a total of 70 shots on net (as opposed to Guelph's 12) in the weekend games. Guelph's goalies were the only strong players on their team, managing to keep double figures off the scoreboard.

Queen's scoring over the weekend was led by Kim Ferguson and Sue MacGregor, each with four goals, followed by team captain Janean Gerow with 2. The remaining 6 goals were split between Linda Murdoch (her first for Queen's), Lori Boyce, Karen Orlando, Sue Fife, Betty Reid and Suzanne Jackett.

This Friday night at 8:00 p.m. in Jock Hartly Arena the Gals host third place Toronto. The following afternoon at 1:30, the second place York squad will challenge Queen's 13-game unbeaten record.

The Friday evening encounter will be broadcast on CFRC 1490 AM from the opening faceoff.

Vball men ranked 4th

A record of eight wins and no losses qualifies the men's volleyball team to be called winners although the championships are a couple of weeks away.

Unfortunately, the team plays most matches away from home and therefore lacks the support it deserves. Volleyball does not feature bruising checks or tackles. It is a game of control and perfect timing resulting in spectacular spiking and net play.

Gael's volleyball is vastly underrated as a spectator sport. There are only three university teams in Canada ranked above Queen's. The men have been invited to compete in a twelve team tournament at Penn State against top ranked NCAA clubs; a distinction that few other Queen's teams have merited.

Last year the men won the OUAA east division but were narrowly defeated by Guelph for the OUAA title. Guelph went on to finish third in the nation while Queen's travelled to South Carolina and won a tournament which included the top collegiate teams from the American east coast.

This year Queen's is a strong contender for the national championships. Fans have a chance to watch the men Friday at 8 p.m. and Sunday at 2:30. Both matches are against York.

The nationally ranked Gals will host York this weekend.

Sports: an injury perspective

One of the finest defencemen in the history of the National Hockey League retired recently, citing his inability to overcome the debilitating effects of six knee operations. Bobby Orr revolutionized the role of the defenceman, won scoring titles and led the Boston Bruins to two Stanley Cups in his relatively short career.

After watching the salute to Orr on television and seeing his sweater retired, one could not help but remember some of the golden moments in his career. In particular, this writer recalls watching highlights of Orr in action during the Stanley Cup playoffs a few years back, while Frank Sinatra sang "I Did it My Way" in the background. For the thousands of people who jammed Boston Garden and the millions enjoying the spectacle on the tube, Orr's feats will be remembered in this magical, sentimental way.

Bobby Orr was an amazing athlete and literally covered himself in glory, yet there are a number of disturbing aspects in his career which reflect both the individual and sport in general.

It is an accepted fact in professional sport that serious injuries will strike a high percentage of athletes. Sports magazines report on a player's recent surgery in the same tone as vital statistics, position or salary. A few rugby, soccer, track and football stories have more in common with medical articles than sports reports. People may not have known whether Bobby Orr had a right leg or an upper body that functioned, but they certainly knew about the cartilage removal and calcium deposits on his left knee.

Is severe and possibly permanent injury the price that a professional or amateur athlete must pay for stardom? Is it worth the pain in order to continue a career that is relatively short? A top athlete, at the peak of his or her powers, may not want to miss the fulfilling sense of achievement that only competition can provide. For a short time, a good athlete will feel this exhilaration of victory and satisfaction with himself before his physical abilities inevitably wane. Those few moments in the limelight will sustain his pride and ease the pain in later years.

The desire of the athlete to keep performing despite pain is assisted by another factor: medical advances in sports injuries. The rapid development in sophisticated athletic surgery and rehabilitation has artificially lengthened professional careers. Football players and knee surgery are virtually synonymous.

One group of researchers examining the American football system estimated that the rate of injuries rose from 30% in high school and 65% in college, to 100% in the NFL. Not all of these required surgery, but the sheer number of injuries is alarming. Players return to action, while still recuperating from previous injuries. Jim D'Andrea, defensive captain of the football Gals, once jokingly remarked early in the season that, "you had to be wearing a cast on your arm to play in the Gals' defensive backfield."

A cursory glance at the football and hockey teams reveals this willingness to play with pain. Whether for personal pride, love of the game, an obligation to the team or a desire to excel, Queen's athletes have accepted the physical punishment and returned to the wars again. Each player may give his own reason for performing in pain, but all are motivated by the desire to contribute to a winning team.

Quarterback Jim Rutka has had a sore knee for a couple of years, injuring it in each of the last two seasons. Each year he has recuperated in near-record time in order to lead the Gals in the playoffs, while ignoring (for the moment) the possibility of permanent damage. Dick Bakker played the entire season with a broken hand. Linebacker Bruce Balson suffered a separated shoulder in the Bishop's game but continued his hard-nosed play without complaining. Blaine Shore cracked his ankle against McGill, but returned to kick again. The list is endless. Football players take pride in playing with injuries - they drive themselves to overcome nagging aches. A writer once asked Art Donovan, legendary tackle of the Baltimore Colts if he ever felt any pain on the field. "Only between plays", was the answer.

Some members of the hockey gals have been hit by multiple injuries, but they refuse to quit playing. Mike Conway damaged his knee for the second year in a row and yet returned five weeks later. Joe South separated his shoulder against Cortland, recovered, then re-injured it in practice and was gone for seven weeks.

Ron Folk should win an award for his suffering this season. He cracked a collarbone and broke his wrist on the same play against Ottawa in November. Rejoining the lineup in January, he suffered a cracked kneecap and is lost for the season. And yet, he will probably be the first player on the ice next season.

To a spectator, these athletes must appear insane. But that is why these same players turn in outstanding performances the ability to block out all else in the pursuit of victory. For that moment of ecstatic joy, they are willing to pay any price.

The Gaels chalked up their third consecutive win in the Ontario Universities alpine series last weekend by taking the Trent Invitational giant slalom at Georgian Peaks. The margin of victory was closer this time and Queen's only shaded Western by seven race points, 137-130. The race was a cliffhanger and was actually decided by the fourth men to finish on each team.

The race was won by Rob Salfrata of Western in 106.05 seconds. Dave Beatty, Queen's was second and Mike Owen, Toronto, was third. Fourth place went to another Western racer, John Rooney; Rob Gripper took sixth spot for Queen's and Kevin Titus finished in eighth place. He was followed by Bob Rooney, Western, in ninth place and Peter Flowers, Queen's came in eleventh. That was all the Gaels needed as Western's fourth finisher was down in 22nd place behind two more Queen's racers, Tim Wardrop (19th) and Bryan Fitzpatrick (21st). It was very much a team victory.

Queen's now leads the OUA standings with a perfect 30 points followed by Waterloo, 24, Toronto, 21, Western and W.L.U. tied at 16, Trent, 14, York, 13; McMaster and Brock in a tie with 11, and Guelph with 2 points.

Andrea Esson of Queen's again dominated the women's giant slalom by a comfortable margin. Second and third places went to two Western girls, Kelly McConville and Lee Gardner. Nancy Firstbrook in fourth place was the only other Queen's finisher scoring points for Queen's were Karen Buleychuk, Susan Patch, and Suzanne Curtis. Gretchen Crawford became a casualty as the result of a bad fall in her second run but the injury was not serious and she returned to Kingston with the team.

Western Ontario won the girls' race quite handsily with McMaster second and Waterloo third. Queen's again finished in a fourth-place tie, this time with Guelph. Trent, the host school, was sixth and Laurentian, Ottawa, Wilfrid Laurier, and Toronto followed in that order.

The teams now have a two-week breather before the University of Western Ontario's invitational slalom at Beaver Valley, Thornbury, February 9th.

The Queen's curling team was decided from the results of a twelve team double knockout competition.

The winning team, consisting of skip Brent Stackhouse, vice Bill Shorter, second Bernie Frasson and lead Bob Wardrop, closed their season last weekend by hosting the eastern Ontario finals at Gananoque.

The round robin tournament included teams from RMC, York, McMaster and Toronto. Queen's lost their opening match in a close contest to Toronto but rebounded to beat York and RMC. The men lost their final match in regular play to McMaster, the eventual winners of the tournament.

Three teams Queen's, RMC, Toronto ended the tournament with a two win, two loss record which forced a playoff to decide the final standings. Queen's lost both of their playoff games, thus, allowing RMC and Toronto to accompany McMaster to the all Ontario finals in two weeks at Brock.

In earlier season matches Queen's won one and lost two in a bonspiel at Brock and recorded a similar score two weeks ago at a York bonspiel.

Fencing team triumphant at Trent

On Saturday 27 January the Queen's men's foil and epee teams competed with teams from Trent, Carleton, and R.M.C. in the O.U.A.A. quarter finals at Trent. The foil team of Paul Armstrong, Gord McLellan, and Ron Walker placed third in team competition, while a strong third place performance by Walker advanced him to the provincial semifinals in individual foil. In individual sabre Gary Boyd placed third to also go on to the next round.

In epee competition the powerful team of Scott Scheuermann, Gordon Kubanek, and Gregor Smith finished first, defeating R.M.C. 5-4 and Carleton 8-1. In addition, they placed second, third, and fourth respectively in individual action thus all qualifying for the semifinals in Toronto next weekend.

Coach Peter Kingsman was pleased with the weekend results and invites all interested in taking a stab at the sport to come to a practice this week or sign up next fall.

Such household names as Ron Greschner, Phil Russell and Pat Hickey must leap to mind when sorting out those who most excel at their particular trade in this year's National Hockey League campaign, right? If this crop would not happen to be on the tip of your tongue, you would not be alone among most hockey fans. Yet, according to results of the first nationwide voting with less than a week to go in the balloting, these same observers were going to send this doubtful trio, along with slick Swedes, Ulf Nilsson and Anders Hedberg, and goaltender, Tony Esposito to represent the N.H.L. in its three-game showdown against the Soviets in this year's revamped all-star classic.

One's first thought might be that a remarkable metamorphosis has taken place among the NHL elite with a fresh lot of faces reaching the pinnacle of this profession. The more cynical would have noted that this sextet was comprised solely of N.Y. Rangers and Chicago Black Hawks and represented a concerted effort by two of the more populous regions of hockey's domain to see their local heroes occupy a position of prestige which they obviously did not deserve. Such action was bound to bring cries of indignation from cities of those more deserving players and

Brockington Visitor

The Rt. Hon. Lord Caradon, a world authority on Africa and the Middle East, will be speaking Monday, Feb. 5 at 8 p.m. in Grant Hall. With almost 50 years of active service in the British Colonial Service and then at the United Nations, Lord Caradon, 71, will give his public lecture on the Middle East and Southern Africa as world danger spots.

In 1943 he was posted to Cyprus as colonial secretary; then was acting governor in 1944. The next two years he was in Jamaica as colonial secretary and the following four years in Nigeria as chief secretary. When he returned to Jamaica in 1951 he was appointed governor-in-chief, a post he held until 1957. In both Nigeria and Jamaica, Lord Caradon played a major role in preparing the colonies for self-government. He described his personal involvement in this transitional period in a book entitled A Start in Freedom.

From 1964 through 1970 Lord Caradon was minister of state for foreign and commonwealth affairs and the United Kingdom's representative at the UN. Since then he has undertaken a number of UN assignments.

Lord Caradon, arriving directly from the Middle East, will be at Queen's from Feb. 4 through Feb. 9 as the ninth Brockington visitor. His week on campus will include a round of informal seminars and discussions with students and staff in addition to Monday evenings' public lecture.

The Brockington visitorship honors Leonard Brockington, rector of Queen's from 1947 till his death in 1965. Previous Brockington visitors were the late Rt. Hon. Lester B. Pearson, Sir Bernard Lovell, Claude Ryan, Buckminster Fuller, Gunnar Myrdal, John Kenneth Galbraith, Sir Walter Perry and most recently Hugh MacLennan.

Policy of action

The OFS will have a new chairperson as of June 1 and, as is the custom, it would be timely to reflect upon the performance of the outgoing executive. Under Miriam Edelson, the OFS expanded its image and heightened its profile. It became a well-organized and respected body not only among its constituents, but among members of the Ontario government as well.

The readiness of Edelson and her staff to confront the government on issues of importance to Ontario students attests to the vigorous and innovative leadership that became synonymous with her term of office. Perhaps the culmination of her tenure was the student rally last March. This demonstration catalyzed the provincial student body into action at a critical time, a time when it was necessary to show Harry Parrott that the quality of post-secondary education in Ontario was not negotiable.

Yet, OFS policy extended beyond just demonstrations. Efforts to establish an ongoing dialogue between government and students resulted in a more permanent lobby at Queen's Park.

Now that the groundwork for permanent relations between the provincial government and the OFS has been established, it is reassuring to note that the Federation plans to solidify its position as a viable interest group. The issues have not changed since Edelson took office in 1977 and the need remains for a "sustained lobby" effort at Queen's Park... specifically the interests of Ontario's students required a policy of action, not reaction.

Finally, if the term of Edelson has had one failing it is that the Federation has been unable to maintain a sense of purpose and direction in the province's students. The consciousness has been sporadic rather than consistent. Hopefully, the incoming executive will make headway in this important respect.

Pursuit of happiness

Reminiscent of the federal-provincial struggle for power in Canada, is the recent attempt by the presidents of the faculty societies to constitutionally entrench faculty society rights and powers. A motion was presented by Dave Court (Commerce) and jointly seconded by Charlie Lund (Engineering) and Ross Bartlett (Arts and Science) to Outer Council last week that will, if passed, constitutionally guarantee faculty society autonomy from the evil clutches of the AMS.

The by-law was introduced, they claim, to prevent the further encroachment of the AMS into the affairs of the Commerce Society, Eng. Soc. and A.S.U.S. Shades of provincial autonomy!

One only has to, of course, examine recent history to see what has caused these new demands. Court and his Commerce House were given a rough time by Outer Council but now that he has it, he may be leaning towards sovereignty association. Mr. Lund, on the other hand, is an Alberta boy from Fort McMurray and perhaps he's struck oil in the basement of Clark Hall. Bartlett is probably still annoyed at AMS Inner Council's decision not to allow the Battered Wives at Queen's.

Next on the agenda in this conspiracy to remove the central power in Queen's student politics is an attempt to give some of the AMS's taxing powers (i.e. student interest fees) over to the faculty societies. Perhaps later an attempt will be made to ensure that the cultural identity of the Engineering Society remains intact (i.e. limit the number of guest lecturers and educational events).

Perhaps what really is needed is a Task Force on University Unity. Maybe we could get Principal Watts to head it...

Traumas of tenancy

Don't be deceived. Renting a house or apartment is tricky business, and it takes more than a signature if you want to be protected. The appearance of notices in Victoria Hall listing houses presumably for rent next fall, lends credence to this advice. They were posted by a local landlord, and read:

"The following is a partial list of accommodations available for 1979-80. Please note that the present tenants at each address have first priority until Monday, January 22nd, 1979, to renew their leases."

Please note that this is patently incorrect. Under the Landlord and Tenants Act, any tenant planning to leave the premises must indicate his decision in writing sixty days prior to the expiry of the lease. If the tenant decides to stay, he may do so without renewing the lease. The landlord has no power to unilaterally declare the lease terminated unless he wants to occupy the house for personal use. A tenant may be evicted with proper cause.

When inquiring into the rental of any premise, prospective tenants should ensure that the existing tenants have served notice of their termination. If they have no intention of leaving, the landlord is powerless to install a new group of tenants in their place.

Students engaging in the ritual of house searching should keep their eyes open, especially at this time of year. Landlords are frantically trying to ensure that all their houses are filled, and some may take advantage of students' ignorance with respect to the Act.

"Quiet enjoyment" clause breached

Building infringes upon privacy

Joanne Langley

Seven Queen's students who successfully sued a local landlord have had their monthly rent reduced by $125.00 bringing to $1,100.00 the total rent abatement in what has been termed a near-landmark case.

Represented by Martin Black, a third-year law student, the residents of 276 Victoria street's case hinged on landlord Peter J. Holmes' breach of the "quiet enjoyment" clause. The breach was "clearcut", but slightly unusual.

One morning last August a team of workmen arrived at the Victoria Street house and proceeded to tear down the back porch and veranda.

When the somewhat surprised tenants questioned the men, they learned that a new house was being built in their backyard. The construction crew refused to leave, saying ownership had been transferred to Leo Matzov, who had authorized the building.

One month and hours of noisy construction later, the remaining students returned for classes to discover a number of inconveniences resulting from the new building. On the advice of Legal Aid they attempted several times over a two month period to discuss the problems with Mr. Holmes (who still had title to the property), but he offered no compensation.

The case was next taken to Kingston County Court Chambers under the Ontario Landlord and Tenant Act, which allowed Martin Black, as a law student, to represent the clients. Mr. Black won the case, arguing that the construction had been an infringement of the lease's "quiet enjoyment" clause a standard clause affirming tenants' right to "peaceably hold the premises during the term of the lease without interference by the landlord."

Among the assorted inconveniences cited were loss of the backyard view, no ventilation in the kitchen, flush pipes routed through a bedroom, a reduction in storage

Debts force OFS to raise member fees

Rob Southcott

Students attending Ontario universities that belong to the Ontario Federation of Students will have to pay higher fees to the federation next year.

At the OFS winter conference, held last weekend in Waterloo, OFS Treasurer Chris McKillop stated that if students continue to pay only $1.50 of their students fees to the OFS, the federation will be broke within about two years. Rumors at the conference indicated that fees could rise to anywhere between $2.00 and $3.00, but McKillop refused to state an actual figure before final auditing of this year's financial reports has been done. McKillop said to the conference delegates that a correction in bookkeeping showed the OFS currently about $2,000 in debt instead of the $18,000 deficit that had been previously predicted. In addition, McKillop produced statistics showing that of the 26 universities in the OFS, only 10 of them have even partially paid their membership fees for this year.

the conference was presented with a number of proposals, from which emerged several policies. Two of the more notable policies passed were that the OFS would establish a full-time lobby bureau and that the OFS head office would compile files on all members of the Ontario legislature.

The idea of a lobby bureau, which was originally proposed by the Queen's delegation, will be to organize better lobbying procedures for both the OFS executive and for delegations from any universities who come to lobby MPPs at Queen's Park. Also, the OFS hopes to have a file on each MPP, in order to give a lobbying group better knowledge of what each MPP's stance and knowledge is in regard to post-secondary education in Ontario.

The conference also studied a report on the indexing of university tuitions to the inflation rate. The report, prepared for the provincial government by P S Ross Associates, recommended that university tuitions be unpegged and thus, indexed to increases in the cost of living. The report received very negative reaction from the delegates, and a policy to oppose it was passed.

Controversial election proposal

Janet Brick

The proposed student aid program put forth by Richard Binhammer has created controversy among the AMS executive candidates. The program involves investing AMS capital stock, estimated at $90,000 - $100,000, in high interest accounts. The interest would be combined with money raised from local small businesses in order to avert an overlap with Queen's Quest. Such funds will be distributed among students considered needy by the University Administration. Binhammer concedes that "Administrative problems have to be worked through."

The program is intended to supplement, not replace, the current OSAP program. Binhammer says of OSAP, "That program is moving in the right direction but that doesn't mean it will continue that way." Binhammer's reasoning is that "If the money can't be used for anything except a safety valve or something the AMS thinks students will support, it might as well be used to earn money to help students."

Dave Lindsay, candidate for Vice-President, Operations, speaks for his team in saying the program is not feasible. He points out that the purpose of capital stock is to sustain the AMS over the summer months. Thus, money cannot be locked in high interest savings, as they are long term. He adds that "Financial and technical details aside, we are all for a student aid program."

space requiring that the freezer be stored in the living room and the garbage in the hall by the front door, and a new shower which leaks to the room below.

The judge then awarded a rent abatement of $125.00 a month - retroactive to the beginning of the construction.

Mr. Holmes' lawyer, Graham Lord, said in a telephone interview this week that his client felt himself "an innocent victim", and called the case an "unfortunate incident where the tenants were overlooked." He added that there was "no chance" a similar incident could occur with Mr. Holmes' other houses.

Joe Dewhurst, law professor and director of Legal Aid says the Victoria Street case was an important one.

"The case clearly indicates there are certain basic legal principles which the courts will uphold for the benefit of tenants. It serves as a warning that landlords must respect the rights of their tenants, that they be certain they are complying with the law and not just trying to see what they can get away with."

Analysis

Election Fever

Warren Everson

Overheard in Leonard Cai:

Bob Hey, who you going to vote for for AMS?

Pete "Hell I don't know. They all seem kind of dumb to me. Anyway, what'd I know about AMS?"

Bob (Positively) I'm voting for Sue Morris. I figure, with a body like that she must be a great executive (chuckles fiendishly).

Mike "Yea, you seen that Gillman? (Makes graphic motion with hands and rolls eyes). "She can have my vote, and anything else she wants"

Roger You guys are jerks. Who cares what they look like? aren't you interested in the issues?

Mike Screw the issues. Look, how about Nancy Burns? I always did like them tall.

Biological considerations aside, the fact that Queen's will actually have an election is exciting; it's been three years since the students had a chance to inspect the merchandise offered beforehand. Whatever criteria they use to make their selection, the opportunity to think about it is important, for a lot of reasons.

It's important because it makes the teams formulate policy before they are elected, makes them study and understand the issues.

It's also important because of the way in which teams prepare for a campaign and conduct themselves during it indicates how they will perform once in office.

The slate of candidates offers some fascinating studies in personalities and policies.

The Binhammer team has been working toward the campaign the longest, and was the first to surface as a contender. Their elaborate election machinery has probably served them well in the important block meetings and candidate speeches of the last two weeks, and if they manage to keep it well concealed they may walk away with the election. But it's hard to take people seriously when they themselves are so serious and conscious of their image. So if the students realize just how elaborate their preparations have been, the team may find themselves the subject of laughter.

The Corbett team is an interesting one. Led by the Adlai Stevenson of Queen's they are probably the hardest to predict. Corbett has perhaps the best mind in the race and is far and away the best public speaker. But, surprisingly, he does not come across well before students. He seems too polished, too caught up with his style to convey his knowledge of the issues. His running mate Lindsay is the most impressive of all the candidates, speaking well in public and carrying a pretty good track record from Outer Council, but he doesn't seem to know when to shut up, and the wisecracks may hurt them.

Inexplicably, Corbett hung an anchor to his team with the selection of Nancy Burns for VP University Affairs. No doubt convinced of the necessity of having a woman on the slate, he picked one with a relatively weak background and real problems in addressing groups of people. She's not stupid, but she appears argumentative and defensive, and her attitude in public is stilted and forced.

This team will probably do very well with the first year students who have seen them in the residence meetings, but their publicity cannot equal the Binhammer team's.

The third team is a shame. One cannot help thinking they belong in Welcome Back Kottler with O'Shaughnessy's tough street-thug image, and Carpenter's self-deprecating approach. But perhaps if they would stop pointing out how inexperienced they are, and showed just how very hard they have worked to prepare for the campaign, they might surprise everyone.

At the "Meet the Candidates" night last Monday, they came across very well indeed, contrasting their honest openness with the other teams' polish. But O'Shaughnessy made several bad errors on matters he ought to have understood better and their general inexperience showed a little too often. The real prize here is Janine Gillman, who has showed a quick grasp of the issues, and handles herself extremely well in public. If elected this team could competently handle the administration of the AM, but the mistakes they might make in learning the job could be costly for Queen's.

Best bet is probably the Binhammer team, in the final analysis. If nothing else they are the best known, thanks to a heavy publicity campaign. But whoever is elected will find good material for commissioners from the other teams.

Meanwhile back in Leonard Cai....

Pete (Gloomily) I guess it really doesn't matter. They aren't likely to do anything very exciting anyway.

Bob Yea you're right. (takes bite of unidentified meal) Anyway, the food isn't gonna get any better.

Mike (Sadly) Yeah, but she's probably not the type anyway.

Mike (Nodding sadly and sagely) Probably not. Damn.

Cult; Fantasy of fear

Sheila Croit

The jungles of Jonestown, Guyana are closer to human civilization than we like to imagine. This was the theme of the lecture on Wednesday night by Professor G.S. Smith, associate professor of History at Queen's.

His lecture emphasized the sense of National failure for which the massacre occurred, and its close relation with the moral confusion of the 60's.

"The 1960's began a series of intersecting catalysts", states Smith. "Urbanism and Industrialization replacing agriculture, hindered the nation's equality and participation. John F. Kennedy's hopes for a better world were quickly terminated. Technological changes such as the genetic advances were thought to be ideas of the supernatural, resulting in the loss of real significance and meaning in the world. And Johnson's escalation in the War of Vietnam resulted in a loss of confidence in American constitutions."

Radical theology has characterized this increasing problem of rootlessness for the past sixty years. Smith gave reference to Sister Amy, domestic and institutional context of the first American Revivalist in 1818, 19th and 20th century American whose prime target was the reformed foreign policy, and American social sinner. Father Divine of the 1920's and intellectual history. His books emphasized that "white and black include; To Save a Nation: American are not to be used", and Sweet Daddy Countersubversives, the New Deal, Grace of the 30's appealed to the power of the charismatic leader, who might in fact be weak. "It is disconcerting to realize the fantasy we all have to escape, and that this is a vice not only of a cult."

Smith's final comment was on the power of the charismatic leader, who might in fact be weak. "It is disconcerting to realize the fantasy we all have to escape, and that this is a vice not only of a cult."

Fifty year old college closes door

Kirsten Morris

The Senate of Carleton University has moved to close St. Patrick's College, in Ottawa. A small liberal arts college, St. Pat's included such notables as John Turner, former Liberal cabinet minister and Wilbert Keon, heart specialist at the Ottawa Civic Hospital among its graduates.

St. Patrick's started as a high school in 1929, with a teaching staff composed of English-speaking Oblate Order priests who received only room and board as payment. In 1931 it established an accredited general B.A. program and started its tradition of liberal arts college within a religious environment that placed emphasis upon human values.

During the 50's and 60's the college started to employ more paid lay staff which increased the financial strain on the college, which became even more acute after the responsibility for subsidizing post-secondary institutions was moved from the federal to the provincial government in 1967. "Ontario refused to continue subsidizing St. Pat's because of their policy against subsidizing sectarian institutions," said Gerald Clarke, acting Dean of St. Patrick's.

This decision forced St. Patrick's to order to prevent and extinguish theft and vandalism in society and today's youth.

Although the date has not yet been determined, a general meeting regarding the Restitution and Compensation Project will be held in Kingston in the near future with guest speaker Paul Sonnixen from the Ontario Government Correctional Services.

Quattrocchi's project has developed rapidly in scope and support in the last month which can be largely attributed to his determination and his claim that "everyone talks about it and no one does anything, so now I am finally doing something."

integrate with Carleton University in 1967. It was moved to its present location, near Carleton campus in 1972, which led some to conclude that the end was near. This impression made it even harder for St. Pat's to attract students in an age of the declining influence of organized religion and dropping enrollments in the liberal arts everywhere.

Enrollment in St. Pat's dropped by nearly two thirds in the last ten years, although a "slight increase" occurred this year.

The proposal to close St. Pat's was contained in a report by chairperson of the Senate Academic Planning Committee, James Downey. Downey's submission to the Senate gave recent financial difficulties and declining St. Pat's enrollment as proof the college has ceased to be a "viable institution."

The report states that "Carleton University and universities everywhere have suffered falling enrollments in the liberal arts during the last few years. This problem struck St. Patrick's College early and continued with greater than average intensity."

Businessman petitions for old style punishment

Andrea Gordon

New Year's day 1979 was not a great celebration for Phil Quattrocchi, owner of a Kingston food business, which suffered the loss of a $9000 company truck early that morning. It was this incident combined with numerous other acts of theft and vandalism that the company has suffered ("at least four times a year for the last thirty years" claims Mr. Quattrocchi), which prompted him to petition for the implementation of a Restitution and Compensation scheme.

The philosophy behind restitution is explained in the Bible (Exodus 22, 1-9). The idea of repaying and restoring the property of victims of theft and vandalism is briefly outlined on the petition (which also voices the intention of returning to an "open door philosophy").

According to Mr. Quattrocchi, who instigated the push towards this project in early January, this system is bound to prove more effective than the present one which eighty-five percent of first offenders return to prison.

"If you have a child who is bad, what is going to teach him better - a slap on the finger or a paddle on his rear?" To Quattrocchi and his supporters, restitution constitutes a "paddle on the rear". His example deals with the teaching of children while theft and vandalism which are crimes that would conceivably be dealt with by a process of restitution, are in fact frequently enacted by juveniles. Perhaps punishment by hard work, or double restitution in hardship cases would teach the offenders in a significantly more practical, productive, and effective way.

Quattrocchi believes that with the implementation of this policy, Canada may eventually be able to revert back to the "Pioneer lifestyle" where locks did not exist. Work in city parks and properties as well as farm labour throughout the surrounding areas have been included as major considerations with respect to means of punishment. "We are not concerned with hardened criminals - it's too late for that, but we are concerned with reaching people before they get to the prisons," Quattrocchi explained.

As chairman of the Citizens Advisory Committee at Joyceville, he has been discussing restitution seriously for the past year and even across Canada have been introduced to this idea. However, as Quattrocchi emphasized, "you can't start building from the roof, you've got to begin with the foundation," thus stressing the necessity of initiating the policy into individual communities before trying to convert the country as a whole.

Despite the long hours devoted to his project, Phil Quattrocchi feels very encouraged, and justifiably so. Thus far the city of Kingston has agreed to support the project and has written a resolution suggesting the presentation of the petition to both the federal and provincial governments. Among other supporters is Walter Gagara, manager of the Chamber of Commerce in Gananoque and also member of the Women's Penitentiary Advisory Committee.

The next step is to seek support from numerous Kingston groups including Queen's and various churches, clubs, and organizations, which are the most effective means of inspiring action. Because the appeals were made just last week, the extent of Quattrocchi's support has yet to be determined. (Among those he spoke with was Queen's Vice-principal Courtwright.)

Quattrocchi also stresses the importance of reaching church groups and individual families in

Defending our fatherland

The Editor,

When leaving Canada to return home, you must endure that trial of patience known as customs. As Arlo Guthrie aptly put it, you get "...inspected, detected, infected, neglected, selected and other kinds of mean, nasty ugly things". This was after seeing Midnight Express, so God knows what I had to expect. I was totally innocent of anything, but it still got me uptight (once in a psych class, the teacher asked me to define paranoia, to which I promptly answered, "seeing a police car in the rear-view mirror," to which he just as promptly threw me out of the classroom).

Up I walk and hand the customs official my ID (my voters registration card), and go through the interrogation:

Guard: "Are you a US citizen?" (no German accent, to my surprise I expect something like, "Unte are yoo a U-Ess-Citizen?")

Me: "Yahvol. er... yes?"

Guard: "How long have you been in Canada?"

Me: "Since Thursday" (It is now Tuesday).

Guard: "Where did you stay?"

Me: "At Kingston. I was visiting my girlfriend at Queen's University."

Guard: "Was it business or pleasure?"

At this point, my patience started to wear thin. What was he implying, exactly? I fought the urge to say "business. I'm actually a pimp and my girlfriend is the college tramp," but instead, answered, "pleasure."

Guard: "What's that in your jacket pocket?"

I looked down and my heart skipped a beat. When at Queen's, your columnist, Julia Grunau gave me some strawberry flavored tea. It was loose in a baggie and, I might add, just the right "gold" colour. The headline "American Student Shot Smuggling Strawberry Tea Across Border" flashed through my mind.

Me: "Tea?"

Guard: "What kind of tea?"

Me: "S. s. strawberry. Here, smell it."

Guard: (never changing tone of voice) "That's nice. Please open your suitcase."

I had a very small suitcase, so following my father's advice, I rolled all my clothes into little "jellyrolls" to save some space.

Guard: "Why are your clothes rolled? Is there something inside you're trying to... protect?"

Me: "No, but I'm telling you now, that it took me hours to pack this and if you unroll them, you're gonna repack it."

Guard: "It's alright sir, you may board the bus now."

Me: "Thank you."

Twenty minutes later, I was back in the US, where freedom is our policy and you are innocent until proven guilty.

Poll provoked by pub preferences

The Editor,

This letter is written with reference to a letter which appeared in Tuesday's Journal. It is written out of the deep sympathy which I feel for its author - J. Michael Thomas.

I am truly devastated when I think of this poor unfortunate young man being brutally bound to his chair in the "Underground", only to be sadistically tortured by ruthless Pub Staff. Yes, it's time, he was forced to listen to two songs which he didn't particularly like. Horrifying. I am sure that those of us who have been "Beach Boyed" into oblivion, "Beatled" into submission and Billy "looled" to the point of no return cannot begin to imagine the pain which apparently pierced Mr. Thomas to his very soul when the first few notes of YMCA reached his sensitive ears. Friday afternoon I shudder to think of it.

There can be only one solution. In order to prevent any further abuse of the student population in general by the vicious and malicious Pub Staff, a concerted effort must be made to institute a comprehensive new Pub Policy. Before any tape may be played in the "Underground" a thorough survey must be made of all patrons musical tastes each night. A professional statistician will then compile the data and, in a written report, will name the song(s) which may be played on that particular afternoon or evening. After all, it is a student Pub and therefore must be run democratically.

I will bring this idea up at the next Pub Staff meeting. Perhaps we could even form a committee. Student's To Unilaterally Protest Inhumane Disco (Stupid). Mr. Thomas, would you like to be chairman?

AMS Housing Lottery

Monday, Feb. 12

Doors open 6 - 7 p.m.

Grant Hall

Draw at 7:15 p.m.

Rules and Procedures

1. The lottery establishes only a position on the waiting list. The number of units available of any size depends on the number of renewals. There is usually a 50 percent turnover. We will know which apartments and houses will be available on March 1, at which time you will be informed if you have a unit.

2. The lottery is open only to Queen's students who will be registered as full time students for the academic year 1978-1979. Student cards must be presented at the lottery or at the AMS office by 5 p.m. Thurs. March 1, if a place on the list is obtained. You don't have to stay for the draw, but it is up to you to find out if your name is selected. A list of those names will be posted on the bulletin board outside the AMS office.

3. Each student is entitled to only one ballot, available at the door, which can be applied to only one type of dwelling unit. If two ballots are found in the same name both will be destroyed. However, if you are applying for a five-man house, for example, all five prospective tenants may apply. Bring your own pencil to sign ballot.

4. An individual whose name is drawn and who chooses to accept the dwelling must be a tenant of the unit, and must have his name on the lease (and be legally bound by the terms of the lease.)

5. Units leased through AMS Housing based on number single bedrooms.

Rhodesian transition government needs time

by Gil Gross

Although the Rhodesian issue has been obscured in recent months by more sudden and drastic world events, the pot has been simmering on a back burner of the global range. The ever-escalating guerilla war has been claiming lives at the rate of 500 a month.

Yesterday, Rhodesia re-emerged on the front page scene as a result of the referendum held on the issue of the proposed new constitution. The constitution, drafted by Prime Minister Ian Smith in conjunction with his three black colleagues on the Executive Committee, calls for a transition to black majority rule beginning with one-man, one-vote elections to be held in April. The document also includes safeguards for the white minority, which is outnumbered by a ratio of 25 to 1.

In a world torn by strife and bloodshed, the fact that 70% of the eligible white Rhodesian voters turned out to vote 85% in favour of the constitution is somewhat cheering. It demonstrated that, in some places, people still have faith in negotiations and compromise, as means of solving their disagreements. Whereas in other places leaders have resorted to threats and coercion in order to avoid loss of face, Smith and his white followers have honourably, albeit reluctantly, resigned themselves to a future under black rule.

Critics of the agreements, including virtually every other government, have rejected it on several grounds. They claim that the negotiating process was incomplete, since it excluded the co-leaders of the Patriotic Front guerilla factions, Joshua Nkomo and Robert Mugabe.

The stance, however, has its basis in a Neville Chamberlain-Munich Agreement style of mentality. The Western Powers figure that if the men with the guns are given what they want, the whole problem will quietly fade away. Unfortunately, strong lessons in human nature were not properly drawn from the turmoil in Rhodesia's neighbour, Angola, which took place just 3 years ago, as well as countless other examples. When radical, armed fighters displace a real or perceived oppressor they themselves quickly assume the role, turning their guns on each other or on the helpless population. Witness the Khmer Rouge takeover of Cambodia in 1975. There is no reason to believe that there would be a deviation from the pattern in Rhodesia.

Another criticism of the new constitution is that the so-called safeguards for the whites are, in fact, an assurance of their continued dominance. While it is true that the armed forces, police, and other important institutions will remain in white hands for a period of five years, several things must be said in the Whites' defence.

Firstly, it is very easy for outsiders to stand back and criticize their exploitation of the blacks. The whites, however, perceive the upcoming changes as a complete upheaval in a lifestyle with which they have been brought up for several generations. They have lived well, they must now adjust to a whole new situation, and adjustment is a process which must take place gradually. How many centuries did the transformation of England from an absolute monarchy to a democracy take? People simply are not tuned to drastic overnight changes.

Secondly, the fact remains that Rhodesia's blacks will take on the actual running of the country, this is entrenched in the new constitution. During the five-year transition stage they will be able to learn to properly handle the many and varied responsibilities of a government. This way, Zimbabwe-Rhodesia will not become just another badly mismanaged, autocratically ruled Third World African state, of which there are already too many.

Today, as jubilant black leaders prepare their campaigns for the scheduled April 20 national election, they and their white countrymen ask for only one thing; endorsement, at least partial or tentative, from the Western nations. Surely, the democratic system deserves at least a chance to work, a chance which only we may be able to give it.

Starvation strikes ghetto

by Drew Fagan

Queen's University is faced with a problem so benign and catastrophic that perhaps many of you have come to blindly accept the reality of it all. There is nowhere near the student ghetto to go for good late-night food. To illustrate, let me paint a scenario.

Heading for the pub on a typical Monday Night, your thought processes are probably concentrated on the partaking of beer or other fine intoxicants. While the purchase of beer nuts or chips may provide your deteriorating taste buds with a welcome respite, no thought is given to your growing appetite for solid food. Then, at one o'clock, while being wheeled out by a friendly constable, the need for sustenance will probably hit you with the full force of a blow to the stomach. Now, to many of you this will not be a reason for concern, the ease with which you can go home and fix yourself a sandwich is clearly evident. However, if your place of residence is similar to mine, the thought of swallowing a ketchup on green bread taste treat may not be particularly appealing.

What do you do? Mr. Submarine has already closed as have all the countless restaurants that serve the cuisine Chinese. While Tim Horton's is open all night and stuffing yourself with the old guy's finest would fill that knowing sensation, for those of us without autos, the trek is just a little too distant. With little alternative, you undoubtedly make the regrettable decision to order a pizza from one of Kingston's fine late-night pizzerias.

Not being particularly willing to be sued for slander, let me just say that from the specimen I have eaten during my years in Kingston, I have seldom come across a pizza at 2am that doesn't have enough grease to clog your sink or enough half-cooked dough to putty your hole in the living room wall. Even more maddening, they always seem to arrive fifteen minutes late with the pizza teasingly welded to the bottom of the box.

Why is it then that there is nowhere on the Queen's campus where you can obtain a late-night snack? In fact, any restaurant or store in the ghetto closes before the first pangs of an empty stomach are felt.

It seems to me that the University should make the first move on pointlessness and unnecessary hunger. By inducing the Sidewalk Cafe to remain open past its present afternoon closing, they would be alleviating a great deal of pain among the student populace. And if that decision is not financially possible, I probably would be willing to endure slightly higher student interest fees in order to subsidize a Sidewalk Cafe that remained open twenty-four hours a day. While the food may not be great, at 4am the thought of such a nearby cuisine would be enough to make student life pure joy.

Hurry! Hurry! Step right in, folks, and welcome to the Chamber of Canadian Pre-election Extravaganza! Hold onto your hats, and remember, you can't tell the players without a program.

As we gaze down from our gallery railing to the sea of caterwauling humanity below, allow us to enlighten you as to some of the identities of some of the illustrious men, women and issues which make this such a truly spectacular warm-up for The Greatest Show On Earth.

In the right hand ring we have Pierre and Ringleader and his famous lion-taming act. Those of you who caught the show ten years ago won't recognize too many of the faces down in Pierre's ring, but then show-biz really is a transitory thing these days, isn't it? Featured in his show are Big Jean the Lumberjack, who performs his famous budget-chopping act with one hand while planting new sapplings with the other, and Iona the Wonder-Woman who swings from the high trapeze before fearlessly plummeting into a net woven of old Loto Canada tickets. And let's not forget those great performers behind the scenes, such as Keith the Rainmaker and John the Wing-Waiter! But the star of the show really is Pierre. He's been training lions since the days of P.T. Barnum, and when they're hungry, you should hear them roar.

Now, if you folks are wondering where all that hullabaloo is coming from on the other side of the arena, it's not a bunch of stray cats fighting over a piece of old fish, but the Opposition Ring. And don't be alarmed if it's always changing shape - that's all part of the act.

You see, the Opposition doesn't have its own Ringleader just some poor fellow they call "The Leader". The object of the game in this ring is to have as many people as possible contradict The Leader in the most politically and personally embarrassing way possible. See how red the leader becomes! Hear the lions roar!

See how a group of Quebec candidates come to the edge of the ring and argue with the Leader. See how animated he looks as he waves his arms and shouts in a funny language. See the candidates cringe at the sound of the words "sovereignty-association." Hear the lions roar!

You'd better step lively, folks, because the show only lasts here in Ottawa until the spring, when it hits the road. Yes, it will be coming to your own town. All the excitement, all the thrills and chills. But don't worry if things seem a little confusing down there right now, they're bound to put their act together any day. At least that's what they say. But it really doesn't matter, does it? It's all in the spirit of show-biz, and that's what it's all about, isn't it folks? Folks!

Temperance

The Editor,

I am writing in regard to the issue of drinking at Richardson Stadium. First of all, there was advance consultation between the University and the AMS executive before any action was taken. The laws of the Province, of course, prohibit drinking in a public place, and it doesn't take much reflection to realize that the University and the AMS must recognize the laws of the Province in spite of any feelings which we might have about the wisdom of those laws. That students are not immune from the law was graphically illustrated during Orientation Week.

You may recall that I wrote the journal earlier in the year to remind students of their responsibilities to the citizens of Kingston. Property owners along Union Street continually complain about damage done by drunken students returning from football games. We all received complaints from students who could not enjoy their own football game. Our constables do everything they can to keep the crowd under control, but unfortunately, they have a difficult time when faced with thousands of intoxicated students.

The AMS provides two pubs on this campus and the Commerce Society runs a football pub at West Campus. I find it a sad reflection on ourselves if we can't go for a couple of hours without alcoholic refreshment. Of course there are some who won't be satisfied until we rig bottles of vodka around campus, in the same way as you arrange for your pet hamster to always be provided with water. Next year will be an opportunity to demonstrate that the Queen's spirit is not entirely dependent on inebriation. It will also be a chance for all of our students to enjoy a football game without fear of injury or abuse.

Sherlock Holmes is confused. There are a number of possible solutions. Maybe the darkness was simple too dark and the photographer selected one of last year's negatives. Perhaps the Queen's Journal is also being affected by

Researcher reacts

The Editor,

I read with cynical disbelief Ms. Dean's response to the Journal's probe into the pressure exerted by landlords on tenants to renew their leases. The article states that "she insisted that she did not intend to pressure her tenants into signing leases this early." How else could the tenants construe her action when they saw their apartments listed as available for occupancy in 1979-80? Few tenants are conversant with laws governing leases, thus many probably thought that if they did not renew by Ms. Dean's arbitrary January 22nd deadline, they would lose their apartments. Surely this is pressure of the highest degree.

Ms. Dean is quoted as saying that she is "one of the late ones. Many landlords had their tenants indicate well before me." This is entirely Cutbacks and hence, they must covertly eliminate excess photography expenses. Oh - but no - our Journal never fails; they never deceive. Let us discard the above hypotheses and conclude that our paper is experimenting with novel ways of testing our powers of analysis. Sherlock give thanks to Darlene and Steve for assisting in this new Journal game.

Lise Doucet

beside the point. Just because Ms. Dean was not the first to start pressuring, in no way does this mitigate the fact that she jumped on the bandwagon with amazing alacrity.

She stressed that she is "one of the small fish" compared to other landlords. The truth of this must be balanced by the fact that she is also a graduate student at Queen's, a fact she broadcasts to prospective tenants. Students, not unnaturally, tend to believe that the "smaller fish" a landlord is, the better he will treat his tenants. They also believe that a landlord who is a student as well, is likely to be more scrupulous in his or her dealings than one who has no ties with the university. Sadly, this is not necessarily so. Small fish or big fish, few Kingston landlords are doing anything to clear the murky waters of the student housing market.

The Journal should be commended for alerting students to this situation. Due, in large part to the Journal's coverage, the attendance at Tuesday's STIK meeting was healthy for those students who missed this meeting; there is another scheduled for Tuesday, February 6, 7pm, in the 3rd floor common room of the University Centre.

Photog snaps double take

Chris Woods

The Queen's Photo Contest, held as part of Artsfest during the past week, was popular with people passing through the Ceilidh at the University Centre. The contest, in which the winning photographs were chosen by those viewing the competition, featured about one hundred black-and-white pictures taken by Queen's people, ranging from sports action shots to "still-life" photos to nudes.

The winner was a photograph of a cross-country skier by Allan Beech, taken from a low angle and emphasizing the dynamic nature of the activity. The winter crispness in this photo gave it the most immediate visual impact of any in the exhibition.

Coming in second was another picture by Beech, this time of a dried plant photographed against a background of snow. I liked this picture better than Beech's winner, largely because of the particularly effective composition of the photo, with the shadow of the pod extending across the entire lower right quadrant of the photo, and because of the excellent rendition of the crystalline detail of snow, always a difficult task, and even more so when attempting to achieve good shadow detail.

Third place was taken by Jerry Simon's "Winter Solitude", which portrayed a solitary and insignificant human figure beside a huge tree in mid-winter. (Simon's choice of subject was the same as that of another photographer in the show), but his presentation of tonal values throughout the picture seemed somewhat more proportional and was more effective in terms of composition, because of the presence of the human figure.

There were a lot of "sleepers" in this contest, they might have received more recognition had it been possible to divide the contest down into categories. Among those which I really liked were Shannon Lee's reticulated treatment of a costumed figure in "drag", and Janet Cardiff's stunningly composed and previsualized still-life of a pair of polished boots in a window, beneath which stood a bicycle against a mottled brick wall.

The show might also have been more effectively staged had the illumination of the photos been better. A switch of location to the Agnes Etherington Centre, offering better lighting and extended viewing hours, should definitely be considered for this contest, next year.

Allan Beech won twice - first prize for above photo, second for photo below.

Inside Uganda's bloodbath

Lorne McDougall

"I want to see Amin's regime broken," said the Archbishop of Canterbury Dr. Donald Coggan, following the February, 1977 murder of Uganda's Anglican bishop, Janani Luwum and two senior Cabinet ministers.

The brutality of Idi Amin and his troops prompted a howl of protest around the world. UN Secretary General, Kurt Waldheim, called for an "international impartial investigation."

Bishop Luwum's death, ironically, may have been prompted by his courage in speaking out against the atrocities that have characterized Amin's reign of terror.

Since Amin seized power in 1971 opposition has been ruthlessly eliminated. The Church was one of the few groups that had not been silenced.

Amin's brutal excesses and bizarre antics have made headline news around the world but little is popularly known about Uganda otherwise.

The country of 12 million people is one of Africa's most fertile, but its potentially prosperous economy has shrivelled under Amin. Priority has been given to the skyrocketing military and police budget at the expense of productive enterprises. The sugar mills have fallen into disrepair and exports of coffee and cotton have diminished. Uganda's population now suffers sky high inflation and drastic shortages of basic commodities, staggering unemployment and poverty as well as constant fear of secret police.

Upon Amin's takeover, parliament was abolished, political parties were suspended, and presidential rule by decree was established. The security forces were given wide powers of arrest without warrant and allowed to detain persons suspended of subversion. Indefinitely without charge. They were also granted immunity from prosecution which was made retroactive to the beginning of military rule.

The major bloodletting in Uganda occurred shortly after Amin's takeover in 1971 when Amin attempted to consolidate his power by purging the army of men suspected of loyalty to his predecessor Milton Obote.

One of the first to die was Brigadier General Muhammed Hussein, the army chief of staff who had attempted to oppose Amin's takeover. According to published reports Hussein was killed by soldiers, his stomach and groin crushed by rifle butts.

Later a servant at Amin's house in Campsala claimed that Hussein's severed head was brought to Amin who placed it on a table and berated it and then put it in the refrigerator overnight. Other officers were disembowelled, marched into rooms that were then blown up, or suffocated with their own genitals. Amnesty International estimates that up to 300,000 Ugandans have been massacred since Amin's takeover and that more than 250,000 have fled the country.

In their 1978 report entitled "Human Rights in Uganda" AI noted that the victims of arrest by Amin's security forces are liable to summary "execution" and torture in the most unspeakable fashion.

A Ugandan, Geoffrey Mugabi, described how he had been arrested on 17 February 1977 and taken to Makindye Prison where he heard the noise of prisoners being strangled and their heads smashed. "The floors were littered with loose eyes and teeth," he said and he had been forced to load the battered bodies into trucks.

Another Ugandan refugee who escaped to Kenya, Jacob Mugisha, had been arrested on the 20th of April 1975 and accused of theft. At Naguru barracks he was beaten unconscious and two days later was ordered at gunpoint to use an iron

This type of atrocity seems to be one of the more regular methods of execution in Uganda. According to AI's report detainees are frequently ordered at gunpoint to murder other detainees by hitting them with a hammer, axe, or car axle.

In one version of this grotesque and common method of killing, the detainees are lined up: the first is given a hammer to kill the next man, he is then in turn killed by another man until the whole line is killed, the last survivor being shot.

Members of former President Obote's ethnic group (Lango) and the adjoining Acholi have been especially subject to killings since 1971. There were several massacres of Acholi and Lango soldiers in the army in 1971-73 and 1977. Reports state that there was a Death List planned in advance and organized on a country wide basis in February, 1977 of all Acholi and Lango prominent in the professions, educational institutions and the civil killings also take place all over the country especially after any "crisis" thought to affect the security of the regime, such as coup attempts and assassination attempts, the circulation of anti-government leaflets, student demonstrations, or demonstrations of popular support for the church.

Some sources report that some persons organizing the Catholic welcome for the Cardinal on his return from Rome in mid 1976 were arrested and killed.

Many other persons have also been arrested and killed simply because a security official or soldier decided to possess their wife, their house, their car, their property or shop, their cattle, their coffee crop etc. This happens as much in the towns to wealthier Ugandans as in the countryside to poor peasants.

There have also been reports of a number of prisoners being forced to commit cannibalism upon other prisoners and of men being ordered to roll in the blood and gore of some mutilated corpse.

Idi Amin's vengeance has also been directed to members of his own family. A former Ugandan diplomat reported that Amin's former wife, Kay, whom he had divorced in 1973, was brutally slain when he learned she had an abortion rather than bear a child out of wedlock.

Amin then had her arms and legs cut off and then sewn back on but in the opposite way. He then marched his two children by Kay into the room to view the deformed body saying "See what happens to bad mothers!" The doctor who performed the abortion along with his entire family was also killed.

The massive waves of killing produced so many bodies that disposal became a rather gruesome logistical problem. Bodies at first were simply thrown into roadside ditches and then over the bridge at Karums Falls to the hungry crocodiles below.

But even this proved unsatisfactory since one report stated that scuba divers once had to remove 30 bodies blocking the intake duct at the Owen Falls hydroelectric plant.

Although the Canadian government has voiced its disapproval of Amin's regime, and Canadian representatives at the UN supported the UN proposal for an independent inquiry into Bishop Luwum's death, we nevertheless still maintain diplomatic relations with Uganda.

In April 1978 Amin announced that a "Uganda Human Rights Committee" would be set up to monitor all information in Uganda concerning human rights and coordinate with the UN Human Rights Commission. But although there have been periods in late 1977 and 1978 when political killing has diminished in intensity, the pattern of arbitrary arrests, disappearances, torture, killings and violations of fundamental human rights seem to persist unaltered.

bar to beat to death three other prisoners who were bound hand and foot. Before escaping a month later he had killed more than 20 prisoners this way. During this time he estimated the total number of prisoners he knew of killed in this fashion was about 200.

service

After former President Obote's broadcast in London in February 1978, attacking the regime for its policy of mass killings there were extensive reprisals killings in Lango and Acholi districts.

Arbitrary and random arrests and

Ugandan speaks at Queen's

Dr. Lakutome Kayiiru, former superintendent of prisons under Idi Amin, will be coming to Queen's February 2nd to speak on "Human Rights and the Administration of Justice under Idi Amin."

When Dr. Kayiiru left Uganda, ostensibly to write a dissertation, he sought political asylum in the United States. He is now a professor of criminal justice at the University of New Haven, Conn.

His talk, which is sponsored by Amnesty International as part of a three day focus on the struggle for human rights, will be in Etherington Hall on Stuart St. at 8PM.

JOURNALEntertainment*Triumph: Interview with Mike Levine

Brent Lavictoire

You've established a good reputation as a live band. What type of hall do you prefer to play in?

It's nice to go to places where the bastions of rock can do good. Like, the last tour we did the Aragon in Chicago and the Royal Oak in Detroit where Bob Seeger and those people started and the audience is really with you; it makes you feel good.

Have you been satisfied with the progress the band has made in a relatively short time?

As far as making it goes in length of time, Triumph's has been a short process, 3 years isn't a long time to come as far as we have. Triumph is at that point in its career where time is a very important element, making sure you go out and tour and support a record when it's released so the people can see you play and realize that you're a real live thing and not just some record company hype.

What about your approach to touring?

Triumph has not gone the opening act route. We don't want to forego our visual effects because some headliner doesn't want his ego bruised by the opening act doing better than them. As an opener you're in a restricted situation. This meant having to go to the smaller places as a headliner. Fortunately we did very well.

You've just finished mixing down your new album. What can you tell us about it?

Just a Game is a little bit more of a sophisticated approach. Triumph hasn't really left what they're known for, that hard-rock genre, but we're getting a very sophisticated, individual sound. All of it is the kind of music you could hear on FM radio, we don't necessarily go for that, we don't plan and say, "OK let's make a song that sounds good on FM radio," but I think that's what we've come up with. The album has a bit more of a concept, dealing with the whole thing about the music industry as a giant game and life as a game and that sort of manipulation. I feel really good about it.

How about future goals and aspirations?

The way the industry works now, it's no longer just go out and play your music and have a good time, it's very business-like. We're looking forward to a European tour within a year and a half. This album comes out the third week of March and we want to get going on another one, we want to speed things up a bit. Everyone in the band wants to do a solo album sometime because, as an artist and a musician, that's where it's at. Records are the biggest gratification of the whole thing. The live thing is really terrific; it has that instant gratification and that immediate communication, but the album has a little more historical significance. Once you play the show, it's gone.

What do you think are, and will be, the major influences on rock music?

Triumph's trio - Gil Moore, Rik Emmett, and Mike Levine

at this time?

The sort of thing that went down with jazz and R&amp;B and Disco, and they called it fusion. I think fusion is something that will spread to the other art forms of music as well. I think new-wave will discover the benefits of heavy metal and heavy metal will discover the benefits of progressive rock and art rock.

How does your life show relate to your image and your music?

The live show is very important to us in that it has to be as entertaining as we can make it, as visually grabbing as possible. We don't try to overshadow the music but we're trying to make the music happen. In a hockey rink where some guy who's sitting a 100 yards from where you're playing isn't going to notice this expression on your face or your intricate fingering. You have to be aware of that and be larger than life. The theatre aspect is a very important part of live art from dance to rock bands in hockey rinks. If anyone's paid between $4.50 and $9.00 for a ticket I don't think they want to see some guy standing there under a blue light with an acoustic guitar.

Mitch Hellfield: Pop music is ok

Brent Lavictoire

Are you looking to the States as a major market?

You've got to be realistic about where the market is. There is a market in Canada but all you've got to know is in Canada you only have to sell 50,000 records to go gold whereas in the States if you only sell 50,000 they drop you from the label.

Did you have a hard time getting a contract?

I took a demo to CBS. I did the drums, guitars and everything, and they bought it right there, so I had a contract before I had a band.

What are your major influences as a writer and musician?

McArtny. Well, the Beatles, you know. Obviously, when I grew up in England the bands I was listening to were the Beatles, the Stones, the Who, the Faces. In Canada you listened to Bobby Curtola, Peggy Lee. These days I listen to Elvis Costello, who I like very much, and Bruce Springsteen. To me, they're like, new, they're saying something. Costello may be angry but at least he's saying something I mean, John Travolta, to have a TV actor singing, it might as well be the Monkeys, it just doesn't mean anything.

How would you classify Hellfield's brand of rock?

The stuff that I write and will write is pop music. I consider Costello to be pop music, McArtny and Bob Segrini, too. They're listenable, they're enjoyable, they're commercial and they're simple. To me simplicity is where it's at. I'm not adverse to writing commercial tunes, that's what I want to do.

Where do you see the music industry, especially rock, going?

Out of the ashes of disco and punk we'll come up with pop music because out of the ashes of the pre-60's music which was very bland people like Perry Como, came pop music with the Beatles. Out of the ashes of what we've just gone through there will be people like Costello, Segrini, Nick Lowe, Hellfield.

Do you feel more comfortable in a studio or is the live performance what you really enjoy?

I think the band is better live because you get the other dimensions, you get the visual aspects which you can't get from a piece of plastic. You get the costumes, the bombs, the show, the energy, we're a very high energy band.

The studio is not my idiom, really because you can cheat and spend 3 months to make a perfect product whereas on stage it's live, it's real. I need the 3-D image; I need to see it live, to see the sweat. We've been missing it, too, listening to David Soul and the Eagles; I want to hear some rock.

Liona's warmed touch

Julia Grunau

Variety has said that she makes her instrument sound as though it had been invented for her alone. The Globe and Mail remarked on her "technical dexterity of virtuoso calibre." The Denver Post raved that she is "nothing short of fantastic." Before a performance, Liona Boyd warms her hands in hot water bottles. Once all the stage hands, the managers, the backstage assistants forgot her in the dressing room at the concert hall, five minutes before the opening curtain caught fire.

Liona Boyd is an extraordinary classical guitarist. She has a little Spanish blood from her father, but she was born in England and raised in Canada. She began studying the classical guitar at the age of 14 with Eli Kassner in Toronto after hearing the master Julian Bream play. "We've all heard classical guitar, but that was the first time I noticed it," she says now. "I think it was the colours, the different timbres he got." Subsequently she studied with Bram, also with Narciso Yepes, Alirio Diaz, and Alexander Lagoya. Lagoya rarely takes private students, but after hearing her play, he offered to teach her. Today he says she is "one of my most brilliant students." She is twenty-eight years old.

Now composers all over the world write pieces especially for her, the way poets used to write for "fair Geraldine", the "dark ladye", and Gloriana. This is only just. Liona tours almost constantly, sometimes America with Gordon Lightfoot, sometimes Europe and South America, all by herself. The reaction is the same everywhere: astonishing technique, fine musical intelligence, and a growing presence and command of the stage.

She will be performing at the Grand Theatre on Saturday, February 3.

Interview: Liona Boyd

Julia Grunau

Who were your greatest influences?

My major teachers were Lagoya and Julian Bream, he was the one that inspired me to take guitar lessons.

Studying with these masters, what did you find was more important to you, the technique that they could teach or the actual experience of working with some of the greatest masters in the world?

That's an interesting question. Julian Bream, what I gained from him most was general sort of inspiration and being able to see the way he worked and the way he played and watching him up close. His enthusiasm for the music was very contagious. I was about 17 when I worked with him. With Lagoya I was more interested in technique, I was older then, 23, and I'd already had my inspiration. I just wanted solid technical advice on fingerings and hand positions and that type of thing. That's why I went to Paris to work with him. There were quite different things that they gave to me as teachers. Since then I've worked with Alirio Draz, the South American guitarist, and I studied some of the SA pieces that I do with him, that's his specialty.

Guitarist Liona Boyd is the lady with the classical touch

Do you feel any special rapport with a university audience because of your age?

Yes, I think that's interesting. I always use to enjoy listening to Chris Parkening, the American guitarist, because he was younger, sort of my generation. I think people can identify easier with a person their own age. That's not to say they wouldn't enjoy Bream or Segovia or whatever. I think I get a lot of young people coming to the university concerts; it's great to see how appreciative they are for classical guitar.

You have a rather unique image for a classical performer. Your looks and your sex appeal draw a lot of comments from the press.

They don't see me when I get up in the morning. People have asked me if it's helped though, and I guess it's helped in some respects like I've been on a few magazine covers and on TV. But, as far as when you listen to a record or hear a concert that isn't the important thing at all. You don't care who's playing it's just the music that you're interested in. I'm just cashing in on being a woman in classical guitar.

Do you feel the 1976 Olympic Benefit Concert in Maple Leaf Gardens in Toronto with Gordon Lightfoot had a lot to do with your success? For many people it was their first exposure to you and the classical guitar.

That was my first hockey rink. I don't think I was a major factor, it certainly helped, like all of these things. They're all sort of stepping stones. The big concert with Gordon, the first record contract that I had, the first performance at Carnegie Recital Hall, there's a lot of different things and everything leads to something else. Yes though, I enjoyed Gordon using me on the whole tour because we worked three years together and he saw that it went over really well. Maple Leaf Gardens was the second one we did. I'd like to continue working with him, and I'm sure that did reach a lot of people, so it's a way of expanding the classical guitar audience.

Ottawa sub thwarts Gaels' rally

Chris Cuthbert

The Queen's Golden Gaels hockey team ran into some bad luck and a hot Ottawa goalie Tuesday night as they bowed to the Gee Gees 5-4 in an OUAA eastern division contest.

The loss was a bitter pill for the Gaels to swallow as they extended their winless streak to 12 games and fell into the division cellar.

The Gaels deserved a better fate as they totally dominated the third period in pursuit of the tying marker. Only the outstanding work of Luc Lavalee in the Ottawa net prevented Queen's from blowing the game wide open.

Lavalee, substituting for injured netminder Bill Thompson, made game saving stops on Kevin Treacy and also stymied the persistent attacking of John Nightingale, Gary Brandt and Steve Watt. Watt, who turned in a strong performance, rang a shot off the post as well.

Brian Chambers second goal of the game at 18:01 of the middle frame stood up as the winner for the Gee Gees. Chambers blast was partially stopped by Gaels' netminder Dan Galbraith but trickled behind him and over the red line. "It just got over the goal line by an inch," stated Galbraith.

Chambers, Dan Anderson and Marc deLaplante counted first period goals for the Gee Gees with Rick Makuch adding the other tally in the second period.

Ron Davidson scored for the Gaels in the first period from a scramble in front of Lavalee. In the second frame an errant Ottawa pass banked into the Gee Gees cage off Gary Brandt for Queen's second goal. Kevin Treacy knotted the score at 3-3 by stuffing in his own rebound after being sent in alone by John MacIntyre. Brandt's second goal of the night, a blast from the faceoff circle, gave the Gaels their only lead exhibition encounter with the 9th of the game.

The Gaels next match is an Harty Arena Saturday at 8:00pm.

Nittany Lions spike Vball Gaels

Dave Tod

Last weekend the Queen's men's volleyball team travelled to Penn State to play in an NCAA tournament against top ranked U.S. college teams.

Overall, Queen's finished third behind Penn State and the other Canadian entry, University of Western Ontario.

The Gaels first match was against University of Pennsylvania on Saturday morning. Queen's lost the first game of the best of three match 10-15 but recovered to sweep the remaining two games 15-12 and 15-

13. In the second match Queen's rolled over New Jersey 15-8, 15-7 in two straight games.

Next, the Gaels faced Penn State in a match to decide which team would finish first in their pool. Queen's defeated the Nittany Lions in the opening game 15-12 and led in the second game 14-11 until Penn State recovered to win 17-15. After an hour and a half of play, and with the momentum on their side, Penn beat the Gaels 15-13 leaving them as winners of the pool.

The Gaels were then matched against the winners of the weaker pool, the UWO. Unfortunately, the match against Penn State left Queen's physically and mentally weak thus helping Western to defeat Queen's in a hard fought match 15-5, 15-12. In the other semi-final Penn State whipped Cornell in two straight games 15-5 15-6.

The final was a mismatch as the Nittany Lions easily defeated Western 15-8 15-7.

It should be noted that Queen's was the only team to defeat Penn State and score more than 10 points in a game against them. That's quite an accomplishment since Penn State's budget for their volleyball program exceeds 30,000 dollars.

Spikes: Queen's will host the York Yeomen in the Ross Gym at 7:00pm, not 8:00pm as previously reported. The Gaels need only to win one of the two matches to guarantee them first place in the OUAA east. This would mean that the OUAA finals would be held at Queen's Feb. 23-24

Swimming men keep pool record perfect

Ken Davies

The men's swim team kept their undefeated record intact by racking up their fourth victory of the year last Saturday against Western. The victory did not come easily however as Queen's had to win in the final relay to capture the meet 57-56.

Jack Raleigh led the Gaels with an incredible display of endurance as he won three gruelling events, the 1000 and 500 yard freestyle and the 200 butterfly.

Several other team members had an excellent meet including Rick Cockfield who won the 50 yard sprint and was instrumental to the success of both the medley and freestyle relay teams. Bubbles Lawryniuk qualified for the Canadian championships while posting a crucial win in the 200 breaststroke and Captain Tim Dennis won the 200 I M and placed second in the 200 breast stroke. George Bovell placed a close second to Western speedster Paul Thompson in both the 100 and 200 yard freestyle events while rookie Martin Fieritag grabbed a second in the 50 free. Veteran Joe Schnitter picked up a third in the demanding 1000 free, John Lane a third in the 200 free and Drew "Inspiration" Fagan a key third in the 500 yard freestyle.

The strength of the Western team were their divers who dominated both diving events and truly outclassed the Queen's competitors. The Gaels travel to Guelph today for their final meet before the Ontario championships.

The Gaels edged Western with a victory in the meet's final race.

Legal eagles Inter-Fac champs

Billy Berger

The Law Faculty Hockey team is this year's Inter-Faculty Hockey tournament champions.

The win capped several years of frustration for the law team who saw themselves in the finals of this tournament for the past 3 years, only to lose each year. However, the team was determined to shed the image of 'chokers' in 1979. Having been humiliated yearly in BEWS hockey, due to an idiotic ruling whereby each year in Law had to enter a BEWS hockey team, even though the entire male population in law school numbers only 300, the law faculty had something to prove to the university. Practising three times a week since the beginning of the term, the law team acquired not only a certain degree of hockey skills, but there also evolved a distinct sense of camaraderie and devotion.

In the opening game of the tournament, Law thrashed Education by a score of 8-0. In the second round the Law team defeated an overconfident Engineering team by a score of 3-0. This led to the exciting climax of the tournament on Sat-

January 27th. The determined Law team defeated the pre-tournament favourite Commerce team 2-1 to win the tournament. In 3 games the Law team tallied 13 times while allowing only one goal against; quite an admirable record. The case is now closed and the Law School Hockey team is truly #1.

Gal swimmers in tough

The women's swimming team competed in Waterloo last weekend where they placed a strong ninth out of a total of 16 teams. The Gal's competition was the best yet this season as teams travelled from Michigan, New York, Pennsylvania, Quebec and Ontario to compete.

Cathy Masson swam tremendously as she picked up a 2nd in the 100 back stroke, 3rd in the 100 fly and 11th in the 200 backstroke. Carla Pepplar swam some excellent races coming in 5th in the 200 breaststroke, 11th in the 100 breaststroke and 1st alternate in the 200 I.M.

The relays were an exciting part of the meet. The 200 medley relay picked up a 5th place with Cathy Masson, Carla Pepplar, Judy Harvey-Smith and Karen Nixon all swimming well. The 400 freestyle relay also fared well as it ended up in the position of 2nd alternate. Members of this relay were Francine Vicery, Lucie Hewitt-Henderson, Renee Robinson and Karen Nixon. The 200 freestyle relay came 1st in their heat as Lucie Hewitt-Henderson, Fiona Duckett, Renee Robinson and Karen Nixon swam a tough race. Barb Daziel, Sheila Cliff, Cecile Chasson and Diane Eagle all turned in personal best times for the season.

Queen's only diver, Cathy Crowley, met with some very stiff competition this weekend as she finished 18th out of 25 other divers in the 1 metre diving. Her coach, Nelson Freedman said that this meet was good practice for Cathy and he expects her to place in the finals at the Ontario Championships.

Athlete of the Week

For the first time this season the Athlete of the Week is a member of the Queen's Golden Gals hockey team. The honour goes to centre John MacIntyre for his high level of play this season, and in particular, his outstanding performance against the York Yeomen last weekend.

Hockey Gals' John MacIntyre.

The Annapolis native registered the hat trick in Saturday's 6-4 loss and also played an important role on the Gals' penalty killing unit. Again on Sunday MacIntyre was one of the best players on the ice for either team. MacIntyre has the club lead in goals with 12 and his 22 points put him within range of the OUA's eastern division scoring title.

Honourable mentions this week go to forwards Sue MacGregor and Kim Ferguson of the Golden Gals hockey team. MacGregor and Ferguson each scored four goals apiece to pace the Gals to 7-1 and 9-1 victories over Guelph.

Racquets the Queen's rage

Diane Olchowik

Racquet Sports at Queen's are growing in popularity. If you, the Queen's sports enthusiast, are to take advantage of the BADMINTON, TENNIS, RACQUETBALL, PADDLEBALL, HANDBALL and SQUASH facilities, equipment and programs which the Queen's Physical Education Centre has to offer, the following information may be of assistance to you:

BADMINTON racquets can be rented by purchasing a 25c voucher at the change rooms counters. Persons are required to bring their own birds, however, there may be a few damaged ones available for use and obtained from the counter attendants. Badminton courts are located in Bartlett, Ross and Bews gyms. Nets can be set up during the free periods which are listed on the activity schedules posted in the lobby of the Physical Education Centre.

Queen's has numerous TENNIS courts. They are seasonally open, the nets are taken down in November and put back up in April. Six tennis courts are located on the arena roof, 2 on the lawns in front of Theological Hall and 8 out at West Campus. Tennis racquets can be rented from Queen's by purchasing a 25 cent voucher at the change room counters. Due to high loss risks, tennis balls are not supplied.

RACQUETBALL and PADDLEBALL are sports that are gaining popularity.

In the U.S. and other parts of Canada, racquetball receives the attention that squash gets here at Queen's. It is fairly easy to get a racquetball and paddleball court. These games can be easily picked up and are a lot of fun. A 25 cent voucher will enable one to rent a paddleball racquet and ball, and 50 cents (two vouchers) are required for a racquetball racquet and ball. There are 4 courts which are booked for one hour periods.

HANDBALL is the least known sport that can be played in the racquetball courts. Gloves and balls can be obtained from the change room counter attendants.

The SQUASH COURTS at Queen's are the highest in demand. However, play is predominantly in the 4 singles American courts. There are also 2 English courts which are slightly bigger than the American ones and differ in the type of ball used and rules played by. Doubles can be played in the two doubles courts. Courts are booked for 45 minute periods. Squash racquets and balls are rented as a set for 50 cents (two vouchers) at the change room counters. Racquets and/or balls can not be rented separately for 25 cents.

A $2.00 BREAKAGE CHARGE will be levied for all non-marked racquets which are broken. Marked racquets will not be charged, however all broken racquets must be returned to Equipment Control or the renter will be required to pay the full price. Also damaged balls returned to Equipment Control can be replaced for the game at no additional charge.

COURT RESERVATION POLICY requires that valid student, staff or membership cards be produced when booking a court. Reservation sheets are placed on two separate tables, one for squash and one for racquetball handball, paddleball and tennis. Therefore, two lines should be formed. If one is in line for a squash court and finds none available at a desired time, one has to then join the end of the other line if one wants a paddleball court.

DOUBLE BOOKINGS are not allowed. There often arises some confusion as to what this actually means. One is not allowed to sign up for more than one court - whether playing paddleball, squash, tennis or any combination. It means one cannot sign one's name for more than one court even if each game will be with different partners. One cannot sign up courts for people other than oneself and one's partners name. Correct full names are required too. An attendant will make periodic checks to ensure that the rules are being followed. This does not forbid one from booking a court and later playing again if one finds an empty court. These rules are to ensure the opportunity for access and use of the courts by a maximum number of people.

The RESERVATION SHEETS are placed on the tables at 7:45 am each morning (2:30 pm on Sundays). All bookings are made for the following day.

To cut down on the number of empty courts, BOOKINGS CAN BE CANCELLED by calling the EQUIPMENT CONTROL NUMBER 547-5970. Every few hours a member of Equipment Control will erase all cancellations on the reservation

LESSONS in squash, tennis, racquetball, paddleball and badminton are offered through Queen's Recreation Sports Skills Programs. Both WIC and Bews have ladders and tournaments through the terms for all these sports. The court reservation system is the responsibility of Queen's Recreation Services Committee and any questions can be directed to Sue Bolton (Recreation/Intramural Co-ordinator) in the Recreation Office or call 547-5843.

3 for the money and a better show

The entrance of three teams into the elections February 7 and 8 for the AMS executive is a welcome development after having acclamations for the past two years. Electing an AMS executive is vastly preferable to having one enter office by default, particularly considering the range of its powers and the size of its budget ($144,000 this past year).

All those in attendance at Queen's who have paid the student interest fee are members of the AMS. By providing students an opportunity to choose the team whose policy is most palatable to them, these elections mean students will have some say in how significant portions of the student interest fee are managed as well as in the general direction of much of student life outside the classroom for the coming year.

Welcome to the Commerce House!?

Unfortunately the acclamations of the past few years have helped create a gulf between student politicians and the students they theoretically represent.

It is difficult to perceive an executive as student representatives and leaders without the vital connection to the student body at large which arises from the approval implicit in an election. The current race holds the promise that given a healthy voter turnout the gulf between students and student politicians will be diminished.

With the AMS executive posts being decided in an election it has become necessary for the teams to develop coherent platforms and has alleviated the danger, always present in an acclamation, of teams entering office without a well thought out course of action. The need to attain credibility and attract votes has forced this year's team to formulate stands on issues they perceive as important to students. Thus, whichever team is elected can feel fairly confident their platform reflects the mood of the student body. This is true of course only if a significant number of students choose to vote.

The forum of the Meet-the-Candidates night was a chance for prospective voters to judge the teams on some of the qualities necessary for good leadership. In such an atmosphere factors like the ability to function together as a team, poise, and awareness of the important issues are inevitably brought to the fore.

Admittedly the radical alternative that the ten member socialist slate offered three years ago does not exist in this election, yet there is enough difference between the teams to make the choice a significant one. For better or worse, the leadership provided by our AMS executive will have a real impact on the quality of student life for the coming year and this year we have a chance to decide who these leaders will be. It just makes good sense to get out and vote.

More than just recommendations

Speaking to his fourth year politics class on the National Unity Report, Principal Watts expressed some concern about the way the report has been received. He feels that perhaps too much space in the press has been devoted to the recommendations of the report - at the expense of discussion on the body of the report.

The Task Force was set up as a response to the obvious strains unity in Canada was, and is, feeling. As such, the report is a thoughtful analysis of the social forces acting in Canada. The report's recommendations are not, notes Watts, an essential part. They are important as concrete recommendations of a legal, constitutional, and institutional nature that can be allowed to overshadow the context of the report. The report, both in content and recommendations, does not provide any radical alternatives; if you were expecting any you're politically naive.

It is interesting to note the strong influence that some members of the Queen's Political Studies Department seem to have had in the development of the report. Evident are the views of people such as Richard Simeon and Edwin Black - hardly radical political analysts. The end result, however, is quite readable and is worth examination.

Copies of the report are available on Reserve in Douglas Library (on the Politics 433 course list) if you're interested - and you should be. Just remember to read more than the recommendations.

Com Soc President acclaimed

Brian Prendergast

As president of the society, I see my next year's goal as one of consolidation. In the past few years, our faculty has expanded its horizons both internally and externally to the point of establishing itself as one of the foremost business schools in Canada.

Advancements such as the Q'BET conference, the recent Inter-collegiate Business Competition, the Inquiry on Business and the young but aspiring Conference Board have turned the heads of many in the business community. Now is the time for consolidation and control over these diverse interests. I will strive for tighter control over the existing committees so as not to spread ourselves too thin. The division of the vice-president's tasks into two positions; internal and external, will help to meet this end. Bi-monthly meetings with committee chairmen and the appropriate vice-president will keep me on top of the structure and enable me to spur on the development of this enterprising Commerce Society.

I am looking forward to my year as president as an active and extremely fulfilling experience.

Division of VP duties creates Internal and External posts

Internal Affairs

Miles Protter

Due to the rapid growth of the Commerce Society in the last two years I have been associated with it as President of Commerce '81, I think that now it is time for consolidation and evaluation. Because of my experience on the Executive, I have a good knowledge of the structure of our organization, as well as some ideas on improvements that should be made to certain facets of it. I intend to work hard and have fun doing the job at the same time, as this kind of work can be enjoyable. The division into two positions of the Vice-President's office will enable me to concentrate more on the task at hand, rather than merely cope with the deluge of work. Don't let yourself down, get out and vote!

Barbara Scott

The following is a brief introduction to the position and myself. The position for which I seek election is one which assists the President with his internal activities. Specifically, I would be responsible for the coordination of all activities in which only Commerce students would be involved; in organization, presentation and/or participation. I would initiate resource persons when necessary. I would have no official contact outside of the Commerce Society.

I believe I am a competent and able person to fill the position. I am at present a member of the Formal

Com Soc Secretary

Rhoda Newman

Thank you for the opportunity of introducing myself. I am Rhoda Newman, your candidate for Secretary on the Commerce Society Executive. I am in Commerce '81, and have been involved in many ways, from preparation of the Frosh Booklet, as a Boss, to the Commerce House Committee, and Host of the I.C.B.C., among other things.

Queen's has been good to me and I want now to be of some service to the University, and to all of you in Commerce. Apart from my interest in the society, I have the skills necessary, having worked for the past three summers at the Whitby Municipal Building, preparing minutes, memos and reports.

February 7 and 8 are the days you vote, and I ask for your support. Please call me before that at 544-0194 if you wish to meet me, or talk to me about the contribution I feel I can make on your behalf.

Candidates for Secretary who did not submit a resume:

External Affairs

Ron Tolnai

This year there will be two Vice-Presidents of the Commerce Society. One VP will be responsible for internal operations and the other one will be responsible for external operations. There are currently 15 different committees, and all may be classified as either internal or external with respect to their purpose. Last year, the President and VP oversaw all these committees. The change in structure will facilitate a more effective co-ordination of committee work, and will provide the president with more time to work with the A.M.S. and the faculty.

My experience with the Commerce Society includes serving as treasurer of Q'BET '78, and co-chairman of the policy committee on this year's executive. On the policy committee, I had the opportunity of working closely with this year's President and Vice President. As a result, I have experience with both the internal and external facets of the Commerce Committee and the Lecture Series Committee. From these I have gained experience in both social and educational functions of the society. I have also offered and given assistance in the promotion and running of year activities.

I ask you for support and thank you for it.

Society. My experience with Q'BET, and my research into other conference participation enables me, I believe, to make a valuable contribution to the Commerce Society as VP of external operations. I would like to see active participation of as many students as possible. I would especially encourage participation of the younger year students. The continued success of the individual committees depends on these people. Leadership and enthusiasm are characteristics that are observable, so I invite you to come out to the candidates meeting tonight and hear what the candidates have to say.

Q'BET and the Intercollegiate Business competition have rapidly begun to establish Queen's as the top business school in Canada. The Commerce executive, as head of the School of Business, therefore has the tremendous responsibility of continuing this trend to newer and more dynamic heights. I feel that I do have the necessary experience and enthusiasm to carry out this job. I have been and still am on the Commerce 80 executive. This along with BEWS participation and involvement on other committees has given me the necessary qualities to be able to lead the Commerce Society onward. To do this I need your support in the elections.

Please vote FRED JAUQUES for VICE-PRESIDENT, External Affairs.

Com Soc Treasurer

Ed Nagy

Contrary to popular belief, the position of Treasurer is not as glamorous as one would think-but read on anyway. What I can tell you is that the position is responsible for many day-to-day behind the scene activities of the Society. The most obvious responsibility of the position is the control and quantitative function. Who makes certain that the Society's phone bill is paid—that daily expenses are properly handled? You guessed it. The Treasurer must also set priorities in the allocation of funds to the various activities within the Society. This is important in that there is a finite amount of funds to work with.

A common responsibility of all executive members is to encourage communication and participation within the Society. Since all functions of the Society depend on voluntary participation, without it, the Society structure would fail. It is thus vital that everyone be kept informed of the opportunities the Society has to offer.

The Treasurer must therefore have the ability to organize and work with both people and finances. Serving as Stu-Fac Rep for '81 and being on Q'BET '79 has given me the opportunity for this interaction. My accounting background and book-keeping functions in past jobs provides the necessary financial experience.

I am enthusiastic towards both the Society and the position and will offer my best. Thank you.

Darcy Thompson

Society elections are upon us once again. The position of Treasurer is not as demanding as some of the other positions however this does not lessen its importance. The treasurer basically has the responsibility of keeping track of the society cash inflows and outflows of the society, that is, balancing the books. The position requires a knowledge of accounting and the willingness to put in the required hours.

In my three years at Queen's I have gained a great deal of experience working on Commerce Society related events. I have the accounting experience necessary for the position and would enjoy working within the Commerce Society as Treasurer. With such events as Q'BET, and the Inter-collegiate Business Competition, scheduled for next year, it will be a challenge to work in the Commerce Society.

As the main liaison between the Commerce Society, which is rapidly emerging as a very influential body on campus, and the A.M.S., the Senior A.M.S. Representative must be someone who is both representative of all Commerce students and who also has the desire to do more than just sit at meetings as a passive spectator. This is particularly true in light of such recent issues as the Commerce House as well as A.M.S. stands on several current social issues, which affect all Queen's students.

As BEWS Stick for Commerce '81 (two years), a 'Boss', and a member of the Inter Collegiate Business Competition Committee I feel that I have the experience and certainly the desire to represent all Commerce students as Senior A.M.S.

Representative. I urge you to give me your support for strong representation on the A.M.S.

Two vie for Eng Soc President

Don Lindsay

I am running for President because I want to represent Engineers. I have been involved in many different activities in the past three years and I think this gives me the knowledge and background necessary for good representation. I was one of the few people to get their Bews letter in first year. In second year I was captain of the men's varsity rowing team and was on the team again this year when we won the OUA championship. So much for sports I have been a member of several EngSoc committees including Engineering Week, Industrial Liaison, Handbook, Orientation, etc. This past year I have been on the six-man executive that runs the Engineering Society and from that experience I can safely say that I know as much about the organization as anybody running. I have also been a member of the Campus Bookstore Board of Directors. There are many valid issues coming up before the Board (i.e. excess profits) and experience would be advantageous in the future. In addition, I have been a delegate to the Canadian Congress of Engineering Students twice and to the Association of Professional Engineers of Ontario conference once. Oh yes I was also a FREC. I state my past involvement only to show that I'm willing to spend the necessary time required to do a good job. I would like to see EngSoc continue to provide necessary services while at the same time putting more emphasis on the things in life the engineer considers fun.

Bruce Lounsbury

The job of Eng. Soc president is to monitor and coordinate the actions of the executive and outer council and assume responsibility for all the actions taken by Eng. Soc. or its members. He must also communicate well with the university, the AMS, and the community, as well as other universities in order to be an effective representative.

My experience at this university includes one year on AMS Outer Council, one year on Eng. Soc. Outer Council, involvement in year government (as a member of the present Science 80 executive), involvement in the Mechanical Engineering Department, and active participation in BEWS. Through these various jobs I have met many people in different capacities at the university and learned to deal with the bureaucracy that is around us. It is important that the president be familiar with this. While the amount of red tape in Eng. Soc. is minimal, the president must also deal with the AMS where it is mandatory that everything be more complicated and time consuming than necessary. Fresh week of the upcoming year will be an issue of concern as the raising of the drinking age will make many events unenforceable. The format will have to be altered and dances with no alcohol or remote bars will be necessary. I feel an evaluation of Clark Hall Pub is needed, with the aim of making it more widely accepted and used on campus. Increased student awareness of industry is another of my aims. Finally, I hope to see a good turnout at the polls and encourage everyone to get out and vote.

Social Convenor

Sharon Self

Social interaction is a vital aspect of Queen's life. To facilitate this, the job of social convenor requires dedicated and tireless effort. Enthusiasm and leadership in a social convenor are important. However, without participation and support of the Commerce student populace, there is no such thing as a Commerce social life. The role of social convenor is to realize the wishes of the Commerce student.

The Commerce Society convenor encourages unity within the faculty while helping to sustain the diversified spirit of individual years. I would like to promote interaction between the years through smokers and the Commerce Carnival as well as through holding regular meetings with the year convenors.

The experience as Commerce '80 Social Convenor has enabled me to recognize the job involved as well as providing the necessary qualifications to do an effective job.

So with your support, we can all anticipate a great year ahead!

Jr. AMS Rep

Dan Sooley

I don't think the position of Junior AMS Rep carries any issues into this election. Instead it is a selection of the best person to do the best job, wholeheartedly.

The position of AMS Rep is twofold. Not only does he sit on the Commerce Society Executive but he is also one of three Commerce representatives on Outer Council. Both jobs require not only a great deal of time but a great deal of responsibility.

A good Junior AMS Rep must act as a sound liaison between the commerce Society and the AMS as well as be an active member of Outer Council willing to express the opinions of the Commerce Society, as well as his own.

There are only three Commerce members on Outer Council, and the Junior Rep will be representing at least one third of the Queen's commerce students. Therefore it is imperative that the rep be an active and vocal member ready to speak out on any issue, whether it be the changing the pub's name or the banning of alcohol at the school football games.

I am willing to put out the time and effort to be that vocal member representing commerce on Outer Council. I feel my experience with the Chronicle, CFRC, as well as previous student councils will allow me to perform the job with a better perspective. I hope we can look forward to a good voter turnout and a good Junior AMS Rep

Eng Soc VP (Pub Operations)

Sandy Williamson

Vice-President (Pub Operations) is a newly created position in the Engineering Society. My job, if elected, would be to ensure that the Clark Hall Pub and its various associated operations are run efficiently and in an economically sound manner.

This job calls for a good organizer, and by organizing such functions as Oom Pa Pa, Rock Around the Jock, two very successful dances in the Jock Hardy Arena, and more recently the Great Pecarve (Hypnotist and memory expert) in Grant Hall, I feel that I have gained good experience for this position. Through my position as Social Convenor for Science '80 for the past two years, I have also played an active part in making decisions for our year.

I have also been a Science Constable for the past two years, enabling me to see some of the operations in Clark Hall on a first-hand basis.

With the recent closing of Bitter

Grounds, Clark Hall has become available for booking on Friday and Saturday nights, and I feel that these nights can be used to re-establish Clark Hall as one of Queen's finest social centres.

In closing, I would like to contribute to the Engineering Society, and I feel that I can do the job well.

Joe Kennedy

I see Vice President (Pub Operations) as one of the most important and demanding positions in the Engineering Society. The near and distant future of Clark Hall Pub revolves around electing someone resourceful and responsible. I am willing to give all the time and effort needed to uphold this position and do the best possible job.

My experience as a Science Constable has given me a great deal of insight into the operation and organization of the pub. I plan to gear some of my efforts into the promotion of Clark Hall in order to make it a more popular spot and to revitalize the Friday afternoon pub and possibly recreate the 'traditional' Engineers' Pub. I would also like to see the music and sound system improved.

I feel I am qualified for this position due to my active participation in all areas of Engineering. I am presently a Science Constable, a member of the Mechanical Engineering Club, editor of the Engineering handbook and a convenor and ref in Bews sports. These positions have given me practical experience in organization and dealings with people.

Clark Hall pub is very unique in that it is the only pub that can be booked for club and discipline events. This is an important aspect of Queen's and Engineering so be sure to get out and vote.

The Special Projects Director is an extra man available to work on new projects and problems. If elected to this position I would like to make industrial liaison my special concern. This is an important issue especially now during tight job markets. At present there is a fourth year resume book and a visitation program which I will give full support and try to improve. I would like to examine the summer employment programs in the various departments. The formation of a brochure which would be slanted towards selling Queen's engineers could be widely distributed across the country to various industry. It would describe programs while tossing out a few highlighting statistics. When I talk of support, I mean financial! The Engineering Society has a great deal of assets which should be invested for everyone's benefit. I would be willing to listen to any suggestions and would try my best to put them to action. I feel I have the time and enthusiasm for this position if elected!

At a special meeting of the Senate on January 18, Queen's University established itself as one of the most progressive universities in Canada. The landmark decision to make students mandatory on all tenure committees recognizes the fact that we are responsible enough to participate in appointment and tenure decisions.

If decisions such as this are indicative of things to come, then it is essential that student senators be both responsible and progressive. I feel that I fulfill these criterion and will contribute responsibly, progressively, and constructive ideas to the Senate.

In the coming months the Senate will have to address itself to a number of very serious questions concerning the future welfare of the university. Decisions will have to be made concerning the university computing system, scholarships and student aid, cutbacks, and student health services. Specifically, with regard to cutbacks, the Senate will have to decide whether or not the university should maintain the quality of programs offered at the expense of the number of programs offered, or vice-versa.

As a past President of Science '81 and a former member of both Eng Soc. and A.M.S. Outer Councils, I feel that I have developed the necessary knowledge, experience and responsibility that the position of Engineering Society Senator requires.

By directing our energies to new issues and applying ourselves conscientiously we can do nothing but benefit the university. I feel that I am worthy of being a Senator, and ask for your support on Feb. 7 and 8. Thank you.

Bill Hunter

The position of senator is a big commitment but is rewarding as it is of extreme importance. I am willing to devote my time and effort to represent Eng. Soc. on the Senate.

The senator is not a position which only requires attendance at a monthly meeting. The Senate governs the academic functions of this school. A senator must be able to acquaint himself with the issues before the Senate. This demands a person who can research to familiarize himself with topics such as; the need for student members on a tenure review board, scholarships and student aid, staff grievance boards etc.

To represent the engineers of this school on the Senate a senator must be able to communicate with them if he is to voice their opinions. It is these opinions which should determine how the senator votes. To vote by personal opinion is abusing the position.

It is important that you decide carefully who to vote for as the senator holds one of the few voices in the decision making processes of this school. If elected I will work to fulfill the responsibilities of a Senator.

I would appreciate your support in the election on February 7 and 8. Thank you.

David Wong

We at Queen's are presently faced with the reality of pressing financial restraint, with the accompanying implications of a declining quality of education. However, these dreary prospects need not and should not be approached with hopeless abandon. Policies suited to our times in such an area as tenure must be developed. With ever tightening budgets, we can no longer afford to accept mediocrity from any faculty member. The establishment of a process of periodic review of the performance of faculty is necessary. Tenure candidates must be able to demonstrate a level of excellence which we can rightfully expect.

This is an example of the issues presently facing the Senate. On such matters with important implications for students, a strong and responsive voice is needed to represent student interests. I believe I am ready and able to assume this role. I have the time and energy necessary to research the topics and provide intelligent input. With your support and assistance I can provide active representation of the Engineering Society in the Senate.

As you trundle through this collection of campaign blurbs, I wish that I could be strikingly original and witty for you. But please read on anyway.

The role of Outer Council is justifiably overshadowed by the key AMS positions, but the Council can be effective as a source of input to the executive and as a check on its power. I don't have a long list of Queen's activities that makes me eminently qualified. My involvement with student government at Queen's since I started here in September has been limited to a DSC and the ASUS government policy committee. But I was formerly actively involved leading a high school student government and several other student organizations. I'd now like to serve Queen's, because I like this place and am concerned about its welfare. Consider the large but related questions of OSAP, tuition

ASUS Treasurer candidates

I feel that it is every student's duty to play an active role in shaping his/her environment, in this light I submit my nomination for the position of ASUS Treasurer. Regarding my qualifications for the job, I am a second year economics major presently serving on the ASUS finance committee who is in close contact with this year's treasurer. I also spend time working on the ASUS bi-weekly, The Lictor.

As for my immediate goals should I be elected - I would strive for greater accountability to the public concerning the dispensing of funds, perhaps through a regular column in one of the campus newspapers. Furthermore, I would like to promote the development of more special interest groups and clubs here at Queen's. I would use my vote responsibly and will try to bring in more interesting speakers, perhaps those appealing to the more 'liberal' fringes in all of us. It is also my intention to help guide ASUS into a position of higher respect on the student government scene.

In closing, I ask that when casting your votes on Feb. 7 and 8 you consider my above proposals and give me the chance to implement them. I thank you for your consideration in this matter.

Shaun Hopkins

The Arts and Science Undergraduate Society with its membership of five thousand students, has an annual budget in excess of $25,000, along with a very substantial capital fund of twice that amount. These are no trivial figures. The portfolio of Treasurer is not that of a bookkeeper, but one of working effectively and efficiently with the other members of the executive to properly allocate these funds. I have never been in sympathy with those who believe that the faculty societies, as well as other student organizations, should be in the business of making money from the funds provided by their members. I believe that the funds provided should be put more into the hands of students for use in providing services for them.

In previous years, the Society has had a low profile, and many considered it a corollary of the A.M.S. It is my hope that the incoming executive will be able to mobilize the opinions of the arts and science students to make their voices known in the chambers of government. There is no reason why A.S.U.S. cannot be the leader in student government policy at Queen's.

It is also my hope that I will be part of that executive, bringing with me my experiences in student affairs, as well as my knowledge of financial matters through my involvements in many organizations, including the L.F.R.C. and A.S.U.S. Finance Committee. Thank you.

Candidates for the position of ASUS senators

Two year terms

Donna Finley

The issue of tenure faced this year by the Senate demonstrated how crucial student Senators are in representing student opinion at Queen's. Students can, and do, make the difference in the establishment of University Policy. The key here is insurance of informed representation.

The faculty of Arts and Science is represented by four Senators. Of these, the two-year term positions are responsible for maintaining continuity in the Senate, a consideration which is important in view of the numerous ongoing issues facing review every year.

A Senator must be knowledgeable about student politics and involved in extra-curricular activities. I feel the background I could bring to this position is unique in that I have been actively involved: Orientation Committee 1979, A.S.U.S. Academic Advisory Committee, the Steering Committee for the Conference on Teaching and Learning 1978, DSC. Your future at Queen's will be effected by your choice of Senator. Make your vote count.

Dougal Macdonald

Student involvement at the administrative level of this university took a giant leap forward two weeks ago with the approval of student participation in decisions on Professor's tenure.

The addition of this responsibility to an already demanding and important position makes the student senatorial post one not to be taken lightly.

This university is being run for the benefit of the students and so it is of paramount importance that student senators represent and voice the opinions and ideas of their fellow students with a high degree of dedication and knowledge at the administrative level.

As a disenfranchised former student of the University of Toronto, I feel that my experiences there have enabled me to compare the two institutions and recognize the tremendous amount of resources and number of positive attributes that this university has to offer

I value what other students take for granted as being inherent or present at any post-secondary institution. The degree of student involvement here is unprecedented. It gives you a great sense of belonging as opposed to alienation. Student participation in decisions on cutbacks, fee increases, alcohol at sports events and other important issues is essential. The University of Toronto has over 25,000 students and yet they never record attendance at football games of more than 200 people. Is that the way we want

Lyse Doucet

At a time when the quality and validity of post-secondary education is under question, university policies are challenged by curriculum re-evaluation, budgetary restraints, and a general re-examination of the directions which Queen's shall be taking. For students, the questions and the solutions are crucial, student input must be forthcoming. At Queen's I have been active in various levels of student government in Residence I have held positions as a vice-block and block chairperson, I have worked in the Politics Department Student Council as a representative and a member of the Faculty Board. In the A.M.S. I have been an A.S.U.S. member of Outer Council and have contributed to External Affairs as an O.F.S. and Q.S.A.C.U. liaison. It is imperative for student senators to be informed, and more importantly, to be concerned about our academic and social environment. I offer myself as a candidate for Student Senator Based upon my experience within the University and my interest and concern for the values which our education should be providing I judge that I can bring the necessary qualities to bear upon this position.

A quick glance in Who's Where will tell you that the Senate is the body responsible for the academic side of university policy formation. Sometimes this activity raises issues which provoke our interest. I'm talking about such things as SCAD and SCAPT. Now most students have at least some idea of what these sets of capital letters stand for, and that is good. What is not so good is that high visibility issues such as tenure and academic development tend to obscure the fact that the Senate is also concerned with the basic, day-to-day aspects of university life. scholarships and student aid, and grievances are just a few examples of these common areas of student concern which are dealt with in Senate.

Of sixty Senate seats, only 15 are held by students. The importance of these seats as avenues for student input, requires that those who occupy them can effectively and responsibly present students' views in Senate.

My experiences this year as a member of the ASUS executive, on the AMS Court Review Committee, as an AMS Constable and as a gael, along with being Artsci '80 President and a member of the Politics DSC, have enabled me to learn a good bit about the workings of this university. On February 7 and 8, let me put that knowledge to work for you.

I believe the functions of the A.M.S. Outer Council to be threefold: 1) Outer Council should act as a check on the actions of the A.M.S. Executive; 2) Outer Council should serve as a "sounding-board" for the Executive; and 3) Outer Council should work to publicize A.M.S. concerns amongst the student body.

Given the opportunity to serve as one of seven A.S.U.S. representatives on Outer Council I would be prepared to make the necessary commitment of both time and energy entailed, and would try to be both approachable and responsible.

Diana Coulter

As a second year student involved with the Queen's Journal, I've become well aware of the issues facing university members. I've followed issues such as the proposed housing bylaws and the AMS Court revision with interest and realize the importance of an open-minded approach to benefit both the Kingston and university community. As students at Queen's are facing a period of economic restraint to the detriment of their education, I feel it is their duty to become involved in university government to monitor any proposed changes. To be an effective member of the Outer Council, one must be well-informed and provide interest and enthusiasm for the position instead of becoming an indifferent rubber-stamp.

David Wray

In Outer Council this year a brief discussion arose when some members presented a motion that the Council abolish itself. Although the motion was doomed to failure it was supported by the argument that Outer Council is run by only a few select members. If elected to the position of one-year Outer Council Rep. I would attempt to become an effective voice at the proceedings. I have taken active steps toward becoming involved in the AMS and the university community in general. I have had experience on student councils and with club activities during my high school years.

Before reading this statement, think for a moment about the issues confronting Ontario universities and, in particular, Queen's. The first that probably comes to mind is cutbacks. Queen's and other universities are still confronted with the prospect of dwindling real dollar resources. Another issue you may have read about is tenure for faculty members. And another is about criticisms of the computer facilities at Queen's. What you may not know is that the Senate deals directly in these matters.

It is the Senate that reviews the main elements of the approved operating budget of the university in order to ascertain its consistency with the general needs of the university. The Senate also governs the procedures to be followed in the appointment, promotion, and tenure of faculty. Clearly then, the Senate has an important impact on the quality of education at Queen's.

If you are interested in maintaining the present high calibre of education here, elect a student Senator who is familiar with the issues. As Editor of the Journal this past year I have remained informed, and though no one has an inside track on the solutions to the problems facing Queen's, I feel that I have the background to adequately represent student interests.

John Rattray

I am a first year student of history and politics whose interest in becoming involved in student government has led me to run for an A.S.U.S. position on Outer Council. This body is only what the students who sit on it are willing to make it. This council has the capacity to initiate policy, to be an effective "watchdog" on Inner Council, and to be a forum for the expression of intelligent opinions. However, if Outer Council is to perform these functions its members must a) attend the meetings, b) prepare for the meetings, c) be accessible to the students. Rather than attempt to outline any of my personal views on policy issue in this limited space, I prefer to discuss with any interested individuals my views directly. I may

Cathy Lawrence

My name is Cathy Lawrence and I am a second year Politics major. I hope to become more involved in student politics at Queen's by joining the Outer Council next year.

I was a member of the Art's '81 executive my first year; and am currently on the WIC executive. In addition, I have been involved in other university activities such as the Queen's musical 'Applause', and the WIC Journal column.

As a gael during Orientation '78, I realize the severity of problems that have arisen and the need for improved relations with the city and police. Another important issue is the housing bylaw. If city council reduces the allowable number of residents in homes in the Sydenham and Ontario wards, many Queen's students will be forced to move. It is in the decisions of these issues and many more that the outer council plays a crucial role. I hope I can be of some contribution to the Outer Council.

Teams for ASUS Executive

Glenn Smith

ASUS President

Janet Emmett, VP

This year's A.S.U.S. Executive election provides Arts and Science students with the opportunity to choose an Executive team, a chance which has not been theirs' for a number of years. This directly indicates an increase in student awareness and involvement.

Our decision to run arises from our past experience in campus activities and our desire to do more about them. We have both been involved in ASUS Orientation, Janet as Treasurer and Glenn as Charity Day Director. A fundamental role of ASUS involves effective communication with the Faculty. We have experience gained in this area from representation on Department Student Councils, Undergraduate Studies Committees, to Academic Policy Committees and the Faculty Conference on Teaching and Learning.

Society autonomy is seen by us as essential to develop the potential of ASUS; it is, however, in times of financial constraint, necessary to maintain good relations with the Arts and Science Faculty, the other faculties and the AMS. The Lictor has an integral role as a forum for increasing student awareness, and we believe that expansion of the Lictor will provide a better medium for the interests of ASUS.

The perspective of Orientation Week will be effected by new liquor legislation. The main concern must be to give all first year students the opportunity to participate in all events. Innovation will be needed to achieve the basic ends of Orientation.

We encourage you to vote next week and to take advantage of this chance to improve ASUS for everyone. Thank you for your attention.

As experienced student representatives, we will have a broad range of issues to deal with. ASUS will become a decisive policy-making body. To further compliment this role and to facilitate greater communication, we will organize and host an inter-faculty caucus composed of society executives.

High standards of ASUS orientation will be maintained and the effects of changed provincial liquor laws will be lessened by our promotion of non-alcoholic events and by the organization of an "age of majority" card clinic on a Gael group basis. Furthermore, the traditional Suzy-Q Week will be retained in the fall.

Arts and Science students pay the smallest student interest fee on campus, and under our administration this would remain unchanged.

One of our major proposals is the publication of an Arts and Science course evaluation guide. This booklet would be based on faculty and student evaluations and would be valid for about three years. As a team well versed in student government, we request your support for FRIESEN and AMOS— "Go for the team with experience".

In any representative government it is important to have a desire to get involved. The energy that I have will manifest itself in this desire to become involved. Not many people seem to know or care what a one year rep to Outer Council is. I'm finding out what one is and I care. This caring not only makes me want to find out more but it also makes me want to tell you the students what I found. To represent, you the student, accurately and then inform you on the "issues" in an objective way is perhaps the single most important function of any individual in student government.

NOW, ENOUGH RHETORIC! WHY SHOULD YOU ELECT ME? To this end it seems reasonable to tell you who I am. Sociology is my major but please don't let that frighten you. I do not believe that sociologists should conquer the world. I have many varied interests. In fact I have found that there are sometimes too many big words used to express simple ideas in this area of study.

More to the topic at hand I feel I have the experience needed to carry out the position previously stated. Sometimes I have played guitar at coffee houses and I think that now I could move from an informal interaction of this type to a more formal one like student government. My last year at high school in Ottawa I was "head boy". I found out that most students aren't apathetic they're just uninformed. Lastly I know what it feels like to be given "power" by fellow students and realize how CRUCIAL it is not to abuse this "power".

If you are one of the few people who end up reading this, you may be interested to know that I, Rob Southcott, am a first year student at Queen's majoring in political science. You may also be interested to know that I'm a reporter for this marvellous newspaper that you're presently reading. If you're still reading this, I suppose that I should mention that I have covered a good number of Outer Council meetings for The Journal, and thus, I won't be horribly shocked at my first Outer Council meeting when it lasts until one in the morning. I know what being on Outer Council should involve, and that is to be well prepared for meetings, and to be willing to get involved with the discussions and functions of Outer Council.

In addition, I am currently a member of the committee which is investigating the restructuring of the AMS, and I have reported on two conferences of the Ontario Federation of Students.

I could ramble on about further attributes which I really don't have, but that would be futile. I simply believe that I have the knowledge of what it takes to be an aware member of Outer Council—not one of those who sees it as a fun time that is comparable to the Chess Club. If you agree with me, then vote for me as an A.S.U.S. Outer Council representative. If you don't vote for me, at least make that minimal effort to vote.

fees, cutbacks and the OFS. Rather than "storming the barricades" at Queen's Park, we must study and spread the facts, lobby the government for reasonable policies and accept some economic and demographic realities.

One of things which has perhaps hurt Outer Council in the past is a lack of commitment from some members. For the Council to do constructive things and make good decisions, members have to be interested, active, concerned, approachable and responsible. That's what I have in mind.

We form a team of diverse experience, we are prepared to face these issues.

The proposed re-zoning of the "student ghetto" must be stopped.
Greater utilization of STIK and Legal Aid can help student housing standards. The Queen's-Kingston relations will be bolstered through an orientation program sponsoring an upper year "Welcome Back" theme to fill the street party vacuum and positive public relations throughout the year. OFS must be critically assessed, it must "shape up" or we'll "ship out". Student's financial constraints need our attention. First, we'll pressure the government about educational funding. Second, fund interest will be channelled into an AMS student-aid program. Jeff's accredited financial background and understanding of the AMS budget well qualifies him.

We have attempted to talk to as many students as possible in the past few weeks on an individual basis, at meetings, and on door-to-door campaigns. We offer these concrete proposals to deal with your concerns.

O'Shaughnessy Carpenter, Gillman

We feel that it's time to bring the AMS back to the students. In order to represent the student body, we must know their views. We plan to set up booths periodically around campus and circulate surveys and questionnaires so that we will have a better idea of what students want.
Only through effective feedback can we give students an AMS that serves their needs.

Although we feel that tuition hikes are inevitable, we will strive (using such organizations as OFS) to limit increases, and demand that monies raised through increases be put towards programmes such as OSAP.

We feel that the QEA could be run for $2 instead of the present $3 if students are willing to give up some of the subsidies presently offered on concerts. This issue will be decided by the students on the upcoming referendum.

As we are paying one quarter of the total revenue of the Health Services, we will demand a say in the distribution of those funds. We will also demand a full annual audit - something that has yet to happen.

We need a strong voice but more importantly, we need a representative student government, a government which is informed on the issues and committed to keeping students in touch with these issues.
O'Shaughnessy, Carpenter, and Gillman will fulfil that need.

Corbett Burns, Lindsay

Over the past two weeks of the election campaign, few fundamental differences in policy or political ideology have emerged between the three executive teams. Though it is thought to be traditional for politicians to present a list of promises and platitudes during an election campaign, this is not the style of the Corbett-Lindsay-Burns team. We want the electorate to support us for our own merits as good representatives of student interests, and not for the list of goodies we might make available to you. The job of the AMS is to provide representation of your views and to operate services in the most efficient manner possible. This is the "promise" we make to you. Below is

Arson strikes at Elrond

Tom Mohr

Five cars were damaged, four severely, in a fire in the underground parking lot at Elrond College last Saturday evening. Arson has been confirmed in the incident, no injuries were reported.

The fire was noticed by Pablo Gonzalez, who entered the garage to find it rapidly filling with smoke. He set off the fire alarm, sending Elrond residents scurrying into the main foyer and out onto the street.

The Fire Department arrived on the scene with two trucks, and soon had the fire under control.

Erol Frik, in charge of security for the building, confirmed that the fire was deliberately set. The arsonists also vandalized the five cars, slashing seats, smashing a stereo cassette deck, scratching obscenities in the paint of one car, bending antennas and taking off gas caps. The fire was apparently ignited by gas siphoned out of two cars and poured over the surrounding area. Two cars were damaged beyond repair. Two other cars were damaged severely, while a fifth suffered a bent antenna and stolen gas cap.

"The damaged cars were not beside each other. They were all over the garage. There must have been at least two people involved," Frik said.

"I have a suspicion who it might be, but I have no positive evidence,"
he added.

The owners of the two destroyed cars, Grant Chrysler and Jim Peterson, work as projectionists at Odeon Theatre. They rent car space in the Elrond garage, and were working the night of the incident.

The police are investigating, but Frik is not optimistic that the culprits will be apprehended.

"They (the police) talked to the owners of the two burned cars, but they haven't shown too much interest in it at all. I don't see any chance that we can get these guys, unless they come back and we catch them in the act," he said.

The damage has been estimated at $5,000.

It was a tight squeeze, but 34 people managed to cram into this Datsun 310, just 9 short of the Canadian record.

Students rally at the auto races

John Baktis

Queen's witnessed the exciting thrills and spills of high speed car racing last Saturday afternoon in the MacIntosh-Cory parking lot.

The camera was rolling as over 100 people gathered to watch and participate in "The Datsun 310 University Championships" which will be aired February 24 on CTV's Wide World of Sports.

The rally, according to organizer and producer Dave Mitchell, has been touring Canadian universities since November. Eight universities ranging from UBC to Dalhousie were chosen as sights for the gruelling and competitive events.

"We've gone to eight universities and Queen's was the last," said Mitchell, "but it was also the best in terms of number of people participating, people helping us out, enthusiasm, and pre-organization,"
he added.

The rally consisted of 5 events which tested and often strained the individual's strength, speed, and driving ability. The first event, the car pull, pitted man (and two women) against machine. Grunts and groans prevailed as two teams of two, harnessed to their respective Datsun 310's were required to pull the cars a distance of about 20 yards. In this event sheer brute force proved to be the winning ingredient except when, as in one case, the parking brake was not released in the car.

The next event was a combination of the "310 shuffle" and the obstacle course rolled into one. Teams had to run from the starting line to a car, drive it through a set of pylons, then

A trip into another dimension

Julia Grunau

It was up, up, and away for Journal reporter Julia Grunau and photographer Ruth Wentzell last Saturday morning when they accompanied pilot Ray Skrebutenas and Leonard Force into the heavens for a look at Queen's.

"The hardest thing to get used to is that you are moving in three dimensions, not two as if you were driving a car. That's the thing to remember. But that's what makes it exciting," said Force.

Queen's from the air, in three dimensions, is the most distinctive part of Kingston. Elrond jumps out of the monotony of Princess Street. Victoria Hall and Stirling look like geometric signals to aliens in UFO's looking for a place to land. Force's quote runs through the mind like a streamer in the wind, as the Cessna 172 dips and glides, soars and slows, over the buildings that occupy so much of our time.

Force belongs to the Queen's Flying Club, as does our pilot, Skrebutenas. Ray has been flying for two licensed years, while Len has been flying "off and on" for eight. They love flying. Their love is infectious. The Flying Club gives them the opportunity to use the planes and facilities of Kingston Air Services with a small discount on plane rental time, and they take advantage of that when they can, sometimes taking beginners up for a minimal charge to get them hooked on flying. They don't have to do the hooking, though, the flight does it all by itself.

The Flying Club operates with about forty members, of which approximately half are pilots. The others are either trying to be or are just in for the occasional trip to Ottawa or Watertown, to learn more about flight, its intricacies, its joys. But there's a problem.

"The Club just started last February," says Len, "so not too many people know about us. The turnout is irregular for the meetings. And it's an expensive proposition — once you go into it, you go whole hog." An hour's rental of plane and instructor can amount to $30 or $40.

Club members are enthusiastic, however, and are always hoping for more money with which to fly. And they are proud of the Club's record so far — no accidents, no fatalities. New members are welcome. The Club meets every Monday night at the Phys Ed Centre.

AMS leases shortened

Staff

The AMS Housing Council is presently considering proposals for mandatory termination of leases on AMS houses after one or two years in an effort to cut down on abuses of the housing system.

The Housing Council acts as landlord for 35 university-owned houses. Under its present contract with the university, students may remain in a house so long as 50% of the residents tenants (people who signed the previous twelve month lease) sign the following lease. According to Housing Manager, Ken MacKenzie, this regulation has been unenforceable.

"Houses have not turned over in the past that should have. Students who are not returning to a house have been signing the lease anyway and it's extremely difficult for us to determine which students actually remain."

The new proposals being contemplated are designed to eliminate this problem. There will be either a mandatory 100% turnover of houses every year or a staggered system where half the houses turn over one year and the other half turn over the next. Finalization of the proposal ultimately adopted will be made by tomorrow.

MacKenzie went on to note that the new system will also allow more students to have access to AMS houses, and that this is the "main crux of the matter."

While Housing Council enters directly into a contract with the University and changes in the renewal policy do not have to be approved by AMS Outer Council, QSA Director, Sheila Murray, has indicated that she will ask Outer Council to support any decision made by the Housing Committee.

"By going to Council for approval students will have an input into the decision. It will not have been made unilaterally, and I don't think we will get any complaints," said Murray.

Saga botches benefit

Michael Allen

Amnesty International's "wine and cheese" benefit concert last Saturday night was marred when Saga Foods failed to supply the cheese because of what they claim to be a bureaucratic error.

In the beginning of January, Saga, whose contract with the University is exclusive of competition, offered to provide trays of cheese for the concert, billing A.I. directly at $1.45 per four ounce serving. But as the event's publicity director, Sue Byles, said, "This was a benefit night for charity and we couldn't afford that price."

The final compromise made between Byles and John Douglas, Saga's Assistant Food Services Director, only a week before the event, was to have Saga sell packages of crackers and cheese at the bar to those who wanted to purchase them themselves. This would have been at no cost to A.I.

But, as Saga's Food Services Director, Morris Haynes, said, "we botched it, and it was purely a misunderstanding" — because the cheese never arrived.

However, A.I.'s Sue Byles disagrees. "It almost appears as if they never intended to sell it after all. Haynes told me Saturday night that he was never clear about the date of the concert, but I started negotiating with him a month ago and I made sure he knew."

"He also said that he couldn't provide the cheese and crackers that night anyway because his shipment of supplies wasn't due to arrive until the following Tuesday. We've been made to look like fools at A.I. I spent weeks haggling and for it not to be there... I just couldn't believe it."

Binhammer leads election poll

The team of Binhammer-Morris-Beck leads the race in the upcoming AMS election, a Journal telephone survey has shown.

Of 100 students polled the Binhammer team had 25 supporters, the Crockett group had 12 and O'Shaughnessy's had 5. The remaining 58 students said that they planned to vote but as yet were undecided. A further 50 people said that they either did not know who is running or were not planning to vote.

The survey polled a random selection of students taken from the Who's Where. The students were asked if they knew who is running in the election race, and for whom they are intending to vote.

switch drivers and steer the car in reverse back through the obstacles to the starting point, get out of the car and run backwards to the starting line. The icy terrain was difficult to master as many teams ran over the pylons instead of going around them. One group illustrated utter apathy towards the rules and proceeded to bypass the pylons altogether the drive right through the ropes at the end of the course.

The highlight of the exhibition was the car stuff in which the main idea was to cram as many people in the Datsun as possible. The Eastern record set by Dalhousie is 36 but the Canadian record was set by U. of Calgary when they stuffed 43 people in the automobile. The Queen's group, composed mostly of women, managed a respectable 34, including several small children. This event attracted the most attention and the most interesting shouts of encouragement.

"How would you like to have sex in the back seat of a car with 38 other people?" asked Veg as he peered through his binoculars to obtain a "better" view. Chants of "group sex" and "we want an orgy" were also overhead. The one remark uttered by a girl who had taken part in the stuffing seemed to summarize the experience. "It was different."

The team of Mike Tilley and Bob Woyzbun proved to be the winner with a total time of 1.09.3. What was the reason for the success? "We went in fairly serious with a desire to win," said Woyzbun.

The national championship will be held in Toronto during March.

The World in Brief...

Sue MacKenzie

U.S. - A new era in Sino-U.S. relations began last Sunday when Chinese Vice Premier Deng Xiaoping arrived. This is the first official visit ever made by a communist Chinese leader. During his nine-day stay he will be meeting with President Jimmy Carter to discuss a broad range of international issues.

U.S. - Patricia Hearst was set free Thursday after President Carter commuted her prison sentence. Miss Hearst served 22 months of a seven year sentence. Deputy Attorney-General Benjamin Civiletti, in recommending that she be freed, stated that Miss Hearst "needs no further rehabilitation".

Canada - Defence Minister Barnett Danson announced that women will be given a new range of rights in the Canadian Armed Forces. Women will take part in such activities as search and rescue operations and the flying of transport planes. They will also serve in isolated posts and be permitted to enrol in military colleges.

U.S. - 16-year old Brenda Spencer, in an attempt to "live up the day" killed the principal and custodian of Cleveland Elementary School in San Diego. She also wounded a police officer and eight students. She quietly surrendered after barricading herself inside her family's home across from the school for 6½ hours.

Paris - Iran's Moslem opposition leader Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini departed from Paris for Tehran Thursday after 15 years in exile, with the aim of setting up an Islamic republic in his homeland. Tanks and thousands of troops demonstrated their strength in the streets of Tehran and Premier Bakhtiar stated that, "The government will not permit the reins of the country to be held by anyone except the central Government". Khomeini said that the government rule is illegal and refuses to talk to Premier Bakhtiar until he resigns. Khomeini is seeking a political solution but if one cannot be found he states that a holy war may ensue.

Canada - Chinese Ambassador Wang Dang sees several areas in trade between China and Canada in which prospects look promising. Farm machines, mining, communications, electricity and petrochemicals are all possibilities, he stated in an interview. Dang pointed out that a deficit would be unavoidable in trade with Canada.

Canada - A management team named by Metropolitan Toronto will attempt to reverse the worst deficit in the history of the O'Keefe Centre in Toronto. The deficit for 1978 was $792,754, in 1977 losses were calculated at $596,161. Metro asked for and received resignations of two top management officials of the O'Keefe general manager Thomas Burrows and controller Ivan Cody.

Rome - Italy's 36th Government since World War II fell Wednesday after the Communist Party withdrew its support from the Christian Democratic Government that has run the state since last March. Premier Giulio Andreotti submitted his resignation and President Sandro Pertini requested him to stay on to head a caretaker government. If a new government cannot be formed Mr. Pertini may have to call an election 2½ years ahead of schedule.

Inhumanity in Uganda

Tim Greenwood

Idi Amin, in his ruthless designs to crush all opposition, has transformed the Ugandan system of criminal justice, once considered the best in the developing world, into a "tool of human degradation." This was the passionate message delivered by Dr. Lytakome Kayiira, former superintendent of prisons under Amin and now a vocal opponent of his regime in a Friday night speech sponsored by Amnesty International.

Dr. Lytakome Kayiira.

Kayiira said that once Amin had gained power he used the public fear of "Condoism," a prevalent form of gangster robbery, to expand the powers of his regime. Amin gave the power of arrest to the military in '71 and there was a widespread tendency among this group to shoot suspects and others indiscriminately.

The indiscriminate shooting was challenged in one court case in which a magistrate ruled that in shooting a fleeing citizen, the officer in question had exceeded the "reasonable and necessary force" criterion for apprehending suspects. Amin immediately answered this challenge to his power with another decree. It gave a security officer the right to use "any force necessary to apprehend someone he has reason to believe has, or is about to commit a crime of condoism, if this person refuses or neglects to submit to arrest", Kayiira explained.

Amin recognized the judiciary as his opponent, Kayiira noted, and quickly acted to muffle their defiance. The Chief Justice, who continued to use the bench to speak out against the flagrant violations of human rights in the Amin regime, was abducted and never heard from again. "Amin made a mockery of the court system with judges and magistrates ordered to send people to prison even when there was no evidence," Kayiira said.

Finally, the administration of justice, Kayiira said, was removed from the jurisdiction of literate jurists and put into the hands of semi-literate and illiterate soldiers in military tribunals.

Regional detention centres were established to detain and dispose of opponents and in place of the literate professionals who had run the state prisons under Obote, Amin recruited his own men, Kayiira said. The head of the Public Safety Unit, a notorious killer, was put in charge of securing the manpower and he was particularly interested in hiring the illiterate asserting that "intelligent people can find employment elsewhere".

Kayiira would like to see Amin tried for his crimes before an impartial international body but, understandably, he has little faith in the UN. In a mockery of principles Uganda is still a member of the UN and is even a member of the Human Rights Commission.

The imposition of trade embargoes against Uganda would be a useful weapon, Kayiira asserts, for they would hit Amin and his military hardest, denying them the revenue that ensures their luxury and Amin's power. The peasants, for the main part, eke out a subsistence on the land and the embargo would be less of a burden on them, Kayiira said.

Kayiira feels that unearthing and publicizing the names of the companies dealing with Uganda would be a good way for Canadians to embarrass offending companies into withdrawing their trade.

Diamonds and toads

by Julia Grunau

Some day some flagrantly gorgeous girl is going to place her fingertip on her lover's lips to silence his murmured sweet nothings and she's going to find that she has just gouged out the insides of his nose for him.

Long nails are a hazard. Shaking hands with a long-nailed creature is courting nasty infections and cuts. Not to mention rabies. A simple touch with a long nail raises blood from protesting veins. The care of long nails turns formerly agreeable and friendly females into wildcats with their hands held up to their eyes. "Oh my God, I just broke a nail!", shrieked, is the aftermath of a chummy game of football, tennis, or anything short of footsie.

Long nails interfere with speedy and effective typing; they tangle themselves up between the keys. The click on the piano. They make guitar-playing impossible, because you can't chord with promontories at the end of your fingers that hold them two inches away from the neck of the instrument.

Girls who insist on grooming long nails every evening spend untold and foolish amounts of money on equipment. Not only that but they will never be any good at diapering babies or washing their hair properly. Nail polish has an irritating habit of cracking and falling off into food, even if you happen to give soup just one furtive stir.

Chinese mandarins used to grow their nails as long as they possibly could, and then have servants walking about beside them carrying their nails around. It was supposed to prove how rich and powerful they were, since only they could afford to

A "slick" slur on semites

The Editor

I would like to respond to a few misleading comments that Mrs. Tyseer Aboul Nasr inexplicably inserted in her letter printed in Tuesday's Journal. In the letter, supposedly dealing with OPEC nations and the price of oil, Mrs. Nasr merely took the opportunity to demonstrate her extreme anti-Semitism. She claimed that it is strange that it is considered "wrong for Iranians to establish Islamic rules in their own country, but right for Israelis to establish Judaism in other countries." For Mrs. Nasr's information, Israelis have never tried to establish Judaism in any other country whatsoever. In fact, to be an Israeli, one can be of any religion. Just ask any of the Vietnamese refugees that have made their homes in Israel. On the other hand, due to the concept of an Islamic Holy War, Arabs have attempted to establish their religion in various countries of Africa and Asia. Complete religious toleration in Israel contrasts to the tremendous persecution of Jews in Arab countries such as Syria and Kuwait.

Furthermore, Mrs. Nasr declared that Israel has more advanced weapons than the Arab nations, and "more in quantity" than all the Arab countries put together. This is an outright lie. Unlike the Arabs, who have a "carte blanche" to receive arms from France and the Soviet Union, Israel is limited to receiving arms from the United States which has been much less generous to Israel of late.

It is clear that the only purpose in Mrs. Nasr's letter was to express some of her hostility against Jews. She didn't even have the common sense to be discreet in her racism.

Philip Sherman

grow these things that absolutely prohibited any sort of (useful) menial work. Of course it is of no consequence that foot-binding was also popular at the same time, crippling delicate women while proving that they couldn't work in the fields.

If you still want to keep your nails, I have a test for you. Sit in the bath for a long time and then scratch yourself (this is not a test I made up, but one that was told to me by a peasant friend) all over. Then STARE at the crud you've collected under them. This will either make you decide to amputate the outer layer of skin, or cut off your nails so you can't see that any more. Good luck.

GRADUATE STUDENTS

Vote ☐ Yes for The Drug Insurance Plan on Wed., Feb 7 & Thurs., Feb 8

Coverage provided by the prescription drug plan includes:

- complete reimbursement for drugs and medicines dispensed by a pharmacist (excluding contraceptives)
- reimbursement for professional services
- ambulance services
- physiotherapy
- accidental death or dismemberment benefits

Certain benefits provided by this plan, especially the reimbursement for drugs and medicines, would be of interest to most students. The cost for this coverage would be a maximum of $7.00 per student per year (commencing Sept. 1, 1979) and the premiums would be paid by an increase in the G.S.S. fee. If this plan is to be implemented, it must be approved by a majority vote through the referendum and a minimum of 15% of the eligible votes (approx 1000 eligible voters) must be recorded.

TRUDEAU TO PLAY HIS ACE?

All thumbs - none of them green

I guess I must have a little MacKenzie King blood in me, because I had a vision the other day.

I was sitting in MacCorry Saturday afternoon pondering the events of the previous evening, when a plant started talking to me.

"Hey! Are you Fd Hore?" the plant inquired.

"Sorry," I replied, "You must want the graphics department. I do opinions."

"Oh, I suppose you'll do for now. You might be interested in what I have to say."

"O.K., but hurry up. I'm late for my squash game."

"Just listen. The Prime Minister is going to call a federal election next week."

"Really?" Why's that?" I inquired. "I thought that the Liberals were in sad straits and that the PCs were running high."

"In case you're interested," my green friend stated, "the Conservatives have got themselves into a bit of a mess. They're still having problems with Joe. It's hard to present a good image of him as the future Prime Minister when he happens to make comments like, 'You have a lot of rocks, here' while in Jordan, and 'Jerusalem is a very rich city' after seeing the treasures of a few museums. Even before his trip abroad, the PC's popularity began to slide. You know that they're only ahead by two points now, don't you?"

"I think I heard something about that," I lied. "Good boy! Anyway, I have more to say." It went on, "As if Joe's comedy abroad wasn't enough, the Conservatives are having problems defining their terms. David Crombie says that sovereignty-association is 'renewed federalism' and that he would negotiate with the PQ if the referendum favoured independence. Several other party members agree with him. Their leader though, after returning home with the new suit he bought in India, says that he would never negotiate with Rene Levesque."

"That's interesting, but I'm really late..."

"Sit down, there's more! The PCs are no longer absolutely clear on how to run the economy! Joe Clark wants to have a 'stimulative deficit' in order to reduce the government deficit in the future. Former Ontario Treasurer Darcy McKeough, however, says that he hopes that 'Mr. Clark and his advisors have been misquoted when they talk about the possibility or desirability of larger deficits.' That statement has got the PCs a little nervous. Finance critic Sinclair Stevens now says that the deficit will only last about three months, while Joe Clark stays in hiding and claims that he's 'too busy' to talk to reporters.

"Well, I don't know, but I'm late for my squash game. I'll see you later."

It is hard to be civil to some stranger on the phone who has just woke you out of a sound sleep—especially when their opening line is, "Hi, have you ever considered life insurance?" After spending most of the night on an essay, I am not up to considering life, let alone insurance at 9:30 in the morning.

I always feel sorry for the people that make those calls. It must be pretty horrible to have people being rude to you all day. But on the other hand, I really dislike those calls. I am in fourth year, so the insurance companies feel that I am ready for life insurance—how they propose I pay for it, I am not sure. Given the choice of paying rent or insurance premiums, I just feel this crazy compulsion to go with the rent. Just call me irresponsible, but I can't help it.

The insurance agents, of course, are using Who's Where to get phone numbers. Not only is that illegal, since Who's Where is copyrighted, it is immoral at 9:30am.

Another outfit that I enjoy hearing from at inopportune times is Filter Queen. Repressing the urge to yell, "Steve (my roommate), it's for you" when the girl on the line asks if the lady of the house is in, I usually listen to part of the spiel. I do not really want my choice of a free cutglass ashtray or a quasi-automatic spring-loaded fly swatter if it means having someone come and try and sell me a vacuum cleaner I do not need. But it is fun to hear the girl read out her speech and wonder how many times she has practiced it. However, once they get going, it is hard to get them to stop. I am always tempted to say, "sure, c'mon over tomorrow at 8:00 a.m." and then give them a friend's address, but I am told that they call you back to make sure you are serious.

What really makes having a phone fun, next to the monthly bill, is hearing from the outfit selling books or gift certificates to Kingston stores. For only $25, you get $250 worth of coupons for lots of stuff you really need—like certificates that entitle you to discount cholera vaccine and free tickets to the Mustang Drive-in's dawn-to-dusk porno extravaganza.

The lady that called me as I was making dinner was a little tough to stop. When I was finally able to get a word in edgewise, I asked her if there were any car repair coupons. She eagerly said that there were lots, at which point I was able to terminate the conversation by informing her that I can afford neither a car nor her coupons. I burned dinner.

That was almost as enjoyable as the kid that phoned me from the Globe and Mail to ask if I wanted to subscribe. Having to get up from a table full of dinner guests, I showed great restraint in explaining that I already received the Globe without any expletives having to be deleted.

It could be worse though, I suppose. I could be making those phone calls instead of receiving them. After all, if I am not mistaken, most of those telephone solicitors (especially insurance salesmen) are arts graduates.

Plugging into the Sun

By Paul Tinari

The Dept. of Mechanical Engineering at Queen's University has had a long history of involvement with alternate energy technology. Prof. Rush of the dept., has been one of the people working in the solar panel testing lab located on the roof of McLaughlin Hall.

There, many different types of devices for collecting and storing the radiant energy of the sun are tested, and their relative effectiveness compared. But it is clear that experimental testing is no substitute for actual observations of system performance in an inhabited domestic dwelling.

The golden opportunity for on-site testing arose when Prof. R. Erdahl of the Dept. of Mathematics announced that he was intending to install a solar assisted heating system in his newly bought home on the outskirts of Kingston. The system was to be installed as part of a renovation program which he was undertaking on the house.

For Prof. Rush, this was a perfect opportunity to build a domestic system from scratch, and also to perform on site data acquisition.

The house of interest is located at 88 Mowat St. in Portsmouth, about 1 mile west of Queen's campus. The work has been financed by National Research Council, by personal contributions from the owner, and by Imperial Oil Ltd.

In addition, Mr. Rush, who is a professional engineer who usually charges substantial amounts for his counselling time, has donated uncountable hours of his 'spare' time towards the project.

Before construction could begin, an in-depth examination had to be made of the various options open, and the relative costs of each option compared.

Domestic dwellings both heated and cooled by solar energy have been constructed in many parts of North America, and throughout the world. The obvious advantage of using the sun as an energy source is that sunshine is totally free.

However, the equipment needed to transform radiant solar energy in useable forms is far from free, in fact in almost all cases it can be dearly expensive. In addition, in the vast majority of cases, conventional heating must be provided, because the solar system may not provide the total energy needs of the house.

But, the construction of any type of domestic heating system which does not depend on fossil fuel can certainly be considered as an important asset for the future. There can be no doubt at this time, except to those who are both deaf and blind, that the costs of conventional fossil fuels will continue to increase with no apparent limit, and at the same time, their continued availability may even come into serious question. Witness the present situation in the oil producing country of Iran, and the consequences of the pattern of global oil consumptions.

In response to these fears in the industrialized nations of the world, several companies and other organizations have designed and manufactured various items such as collectors. The heat they absorb is conducted away by either a gas (commonly air) or by a liquid such as water. The liquid systems have the advantage of being able to supply space heating, cooling, and domestic hot water supply. Also the volume of liquid needed to carry a given amount of heat is much smaller than the amount of gas which would be required.

For a $40,000 home the buyer can expect to pay about $5,000 for the solar system at present prices. However, as more people decide to buy such systems, the initial costs are bound to come down, and the system will gradually pay for itself by savings in fossil fuel. Of course cost factors would become irrelevant if conventional fuels became unavailable.

solar panels, but in general public response has been poor.

This is certain to change, however, when the price of conventional energy gets high enough to justify the investment needed to break into the solar energy scene.

The key element of the solar heated home is the array of solar panels. On the other hand, in a gas system, there are no problems with leaks or freezing, and no corrosion of the system components. However, ductwork can be more expensive than pipes.

It has been found that if aluminum is used in a liquid system, severe corrosion can result unless the fluid is specially treated with anti-corrosive chemicals. Copper systems do not suffer from corrosion problems, but unfortunately copper is several times more expensive than aluminum.

There is no hiding the fact that initially the cost of a solar heated home will be greater than that for a conventionally heated structure. For a $40,000 home for example, the buyer could expect to pay about $5,000 more for the solar system at present prices.

But as more people decide to buy such systems the initial costs are bound to come down, and the systems will eventually pay for itself by savings in fossil fuel. It should be carefully kept in mind that cost factors would become irrelevant if conventional fuels became unavailable, an event which has already occurred in some parts of the industrialized world.

For many Canadians, passive solar heating is a much more feasible option. Windows facing north are eliminated, and those facing south are made as large as possible to catch the solar rays. With properly designed overhangs, the hot sun of the summertime can be kept out to aid in cooling, and the weaker winter sun allowed to flood into the house.

The same effect can be achieved by proper placement of deciduous trees, which is a step which can be taken by many homeowners with minimal expense. Furthermore addition of insulation, and the incorporation of double or even triple paned windows can save the homeowner substantial amounts in just one season.

Prof. Erdahl's house has a floor area of about 2,000 sq. ft. For this house, the typical heating costs for one year are $400, with $150 for hot water.

The solar heating system will supply at least 60% of the total heating load of the house. The collectors cost $15 per sq. ft., and the total collection surface is 320 sq. ft. The collectors are covered with double paned sealed glass.

The final value of the predominately wooden structure when construction is complete is expected to be $50,000.

The arrangement of the system has been, in my opinion, successfully integrated into the design of the house. The designers consider the system a success.

The mechanics of the operation are surprisingly simple. Fluid with a low freezing point is heated in the solar collectors. This fluid then circulates to a heat exchanger where the heat is given up to a water system which circulates entirely within the house.

The primary purpose of the system is to keep the house's hot water tank at its maximum temperature of 140 F.

Once this is achieved, any excess heat flux is diverted to the heat storage tank. This consists of an interlaced grid of copper pipes imbedded in paraffin wax.

A large amount of energy can be stored in the phase change of the wax. The whole tank is heavily insulated by several inches of foam. The wax tank is large enough to supply the house's heating needs for about a day and a half in the event of cloudy, cold weather.

When no heat is entering the system via the collectors, then the auxiliary heating system takes over as soon as the temperature of the hot water tank starts to drop. The heated water is used for the space heating of the house by pumping it through a forced draft heat exchange unit. During my visit I found the temperature of the house quite comfortable, though the air in the basement and first floor was a little damp.

One of the major problems which still has to be overcome is excessive heat loss from the back surface of the solar panels making the upstairs bedroom excessively hot. But the back surface has not yet been properly insulated, so this problem should not be too difficult to correct.

Solar energy supplies 60% of the heating needs of Prof. Erdahl's renovated house.

Last year at this time Prof. Erdahl's house was ready for the installation of solar collectors.

Professor Rush experiments with the collection of solar energy in lab.

A solid performance, a solid cast: Applause

Christiane Schull

Theatre is love; magic; fun. Isn't it? Applause shows us the real drama, the real theatre, the ruthlessness that takes place offstage, behind the scenes, in the dressing rooms, bars, living rooms and bedrooms in the actual world. There "you've entered the asylum... where actors are children playing hide and ego-seek... Welcome to the Theatre... you'll love it so... Welcome to the Theatre you FOOL!"

Applause opens with the thick "pear-shaped" tones of the master of ceremonies (Rob Campbell) introducing the hostess and everyone's favorite actress Margo Channing (Cathy Brouse) who, in turn, announces the winner of the best actress award - Eve Harrington (Debby Frehr). Eve sweeps out in a red chiffon gown with gold trim and revealing neckline thanking all those who made this night possible, especially Margo Channing. The inherent power, hate, bitterness and coy are apparent from the start as a taped recording of Margo's thoughts - "Damn it Eve, I'm not dead yet" - are simultaneously heard over Eve's thanks and insincere smiles.

The musical takes us back in time to a dressing room after one of Margo's great performances and the subsequent sequence of events; the ploys and "hopscotch from bed to bed", which enabled Eve, the "little prairie flower" and later the "four star bitch", to claim the limelight. Whether it be sweet and demure or "twitchy and bitchy", Debby Frehr carries her role strongly. Cathy Brouse is immediately likeable. She has substance and maintains a tremendous presence on stage.

Andrew MacBean as Duane Fox, Margo's vivacious, gay hairdresser and the master of witty asides, is the only one who immediately recognizes the lies in Eve's supposed innocence. He injects into every scene in which he appears a wry venomous sting, easily identified and thoroughly enjoyed by the audience.

The gay bar where Duane takes Margo and Eve is one of MacBean's tightest and most innovative choreographed scenes. Duane bounds into the bar with Margo and Eve in quick pursuit a group of male dancers writhing, jumping, moving with all the flexibility and sensuality their bodies can afford. The play's most effective set - a large, silver, foil star and sketches of Margo and Marilyn Monroe hang above a bar with a "disco" mirror ball suspended from the ceiling - sets the mood perfectly. The set designs, otherwise, were functional but had no special appeal. Shades of shocking blue and pea-green clashed and were detracting in their tawdriness.

The music was often painful to listen to because of the inevitable squawks and squeaks from clarinets and wrong notes from trumpets. Vocals were strong although often drowned out by the booming sounds of the orchestra.

A series of ingenious ploys reveal Eve to Margo as anything but naive, but her friends are still wooed by Eve and see her as "snow white" and Margo as the "wicked witch". Caught between Margo's ferocious jealousy and Eve's coyness, John MacFarlane as Bill Sampson, Margo's lover and director, serves as a foil for Margo's overbearing egotism. His performance was weak, though; he moved stiffly and was not sufficiently believable.

The audience's sympathies are aroused for Eve when, alone, backstage one night, she bitterly reveals "remember one halloween when you were nine...rouge and lipstick though you weren't allowed. Daddy said-take it off! You look like a WHORE! Damn you daddy! Look at your little girl now!" Debby Frehr in her role as Eve, is as powerful as she is disturbing. Frehr wrenches the audience and makes them feel the pain she feels, and though they may not forgive her, their hearts go out to her.

As Eve gains more public success Margo becomes increasingly defensive about her "own little place on top". It is not until she consoles husbandless Karen that she realizes there's something greater beyond the stage.

Applause proved a dynamic professional performance with its strong acting and MacBean's imaginative choreography, although it could have been improved with greater attention to set design and musical accompaniment.

Liona Boyd returns to a faithful Grant Hall audience

The "First Lady" of the guitar

Julia Grunau

Liona Boyd is not yet one of the greatest classical guitarists in the world, but that is entirely due to her youth. At twenty-eight, she has a technical ability that is amazing, but she has not been friends with the guitar long enough to be great. All she needs is time.

Nevertheless, her recital on Saturday night was as inviting an introduction to classical guitar as could be wished. First, her stage presence is enchanting, in a medieval-type pink gown, with her gold hair pulled back, and with her clear voice introducing many pieces to the audience, she made the audience her slaves. Second, her selection of material was wise. A transcription of the "Moonlight Sonata" was well done and familiar to everyone in the hall. A few pieces by relatively unknown composers (Erik Satie's Gymnopédie No. 1) were included because of their delightful melody and appeal. The programme concluded with the well-known Recuerdos de la Alhambra and Gran Jota by Francisco Tarrega, and Boyd had such control over the inflections and timbre of her instrument that, when she intended it, the audience burst out laughing in response to a marching beat.

Boyd's main asset is her speed. Her fingers flit over the fretboard like a hummingbird's wings. Her tremolo - the plucking of the strings with the left hand as well as the right - is superb. It is only in the harmonics that she needs real practice.

But she is an artist, and she is professional, and she delights in her instrument and it shows. After the performance, students flocked backstage to talk with the lady, and she listened to them, asking questions, signing autographs, being gracious to all her new admirers.

Liona and her inseparable guitar.

Record Reviews

M: Black Noise
reviewed by Brent Lavicoire lements of most of the late 60's progressive rock bands mingle on M's latest release, Black Noise. What sets them apart from the rest of the rock world, modern and past, is their sound. Try to imagine some of the finest moments from King Crimson, Yes, Syrinx and Emerson, Lake and Palmer and you'll come close to a definition of the FM sound. However, unlike some of their illustrious forerunners in the art of electronic rock, FM is not caught up in their own image, the music on Black Noise is without the pompous attitude of ELP, they should be just as enjoyable to a uninitiated electronic music listener as to a acid rock freak.

Cameron Hawkins (keyboards and vocals), Martin Deller (percussion and synthesizer) and Nash the Slash (violin, mandolin, vocals and other effects) blend their instruments and electronic effects with the skill of a well practised touring band. Instrumental highlights abound on the album and if you own a good set of earphones the price is worth the listening "experience" alone.

"Phasors on Stun" sets the spacey tone for the entire album, it's a real killer. On other tracks such as "Slaughter in the Robot Village" and "Aldebaran" a distinct theme emerges. Galactic wars and the search for self-dependence, themes already overworked, are not really given new interpretations but the instrumental inventiveness of these three magicians ensures an attentive audience for their tales.

It is very hard to describe the electronic sound of FM without the overuse, and misapplication, of comparisons. At times Black Noise sounds like the best of Jean-Luc Ponty; at times they resemble Pink Floyd. Let it suffice to say that FM may have recorded the greatest-ever electronic rock album with Black Noise.

The band also seems to have a good grip on their material; they don't play it straight-faced and there always seems to be room for some humour on Black Noise. Titles such as the aforementioned "Phasors on Stun" and "Dialing for Dharma" indicate a tongue-in-cheek philosophy. Watch for more from these guys. They're worth a close listening.

Bryan Ferry: The Bride Stripped Bare
reviewed by Bruce Stratton
In his days with Roxy Music, Brian Ferry's voice and compositions were splendidly complimented by the maniacal and high-spirited playing of the likes of Phil Manzanera, Edwin Lobson, and Paul Thompson. On The Bride Stripped Bare, Ferry's latest solo album, one finds Ferry fronting a sterile, and, one almost feels, intimidated, group of studio musicians. The resulting album is lukewarm, uneven, and ultimately unsatisfying.

Ferry's back-up band often sounds very weak. Waddy Wachtel is no substitute for Manzanera. Without the complex Roxy sound to support him, even Ferry's voice itself sounds somewhat weak.

Despite the inadequacies of Ferry's back-up band, however, The Bride Stripped Bare is not a complete disaster. Five of the ten songs on the album were penned by Ferry and they prove that he can still write. "Sign of the Times" and "Can't Let Go" could be compared not too adversely with "Editions of You" or "Both Ends Burning". "This Island Earth" is a fine example of Ferry at his most lethargic. If life is worth living even this fails to measure up to the

Those songs that appear on The Bride Stripped Bare which Ferry did not write suffer in comparison with those he composed himself. For some reason Ferry insists on covering songs that he cannot adequately do justice to. His version of J.J. Cale's "The Same Old Blues" is not worth a second listen. The only song which Ferry covers reasonably well is Al Green's "Take Me To The River" and even this fails to measure up to the Talking Heads' version.

In light of the fact that Roxy Music has recently regrouped and will release a new album in the near future, it is hard to imagine anyone buying "The Bride Stripped Bare". After all, why buy a Grenada when you can get a Mercedes for the same price a month from now?

FM is a better signal

Originally recorded by the CBC for their Saturday morning sci-fi radio program Johny Chase, FM's Black Noise album was released three months ago and has already sold 60,000 copies. In the intervening year before Black Noise was released as an album the band underwent a personnel change (Ben Mink from the Silver Tractors replaced Nash the Slash after he left to pursue a solo career) and recorded a direct-disc album. With Head Room (the direct-disc recording) selling like hotcakes in downtown Toronto CBC decided to release the much talked about but never heard Black Noise album.

Since last November, FM have gained and deserved a lot of attention.

Their genre is electronic rock and their skill hasn't been equalled for a number of years. FM presents a highly imaginative format depending on the sophisticated modulation of acoustic instruments, percussion and violin, combined with the pure electronics of the synthesizer world.

The backgrounds of this trio range from classical to jazz but their final product is unadulterated rock.

This should be the best concert of the year at Queen's. Don't miss them and Cano this Wednesday.

Martin Deller, Cameron Hawkins and Ben Mink of FM.

Interview with Martin Deller

Brent Lavicoire

How has Ben Mink been able to fill the shoes of Nash the Slash. Has his influence been beneficial?

His influence is good. I don't think it's changing us radically. I think essentially the new music is along very similar lines to Black Noise in style.

You've said you aim for a more "intelligent audience". Is this why you stay clear of the bar circuit?

Our audience tends to be a listening audience rather than the heavy rock and roll beer drinking crowd that might go to a blues, boogie or that kind of show. That's probably because of some of the spaceiness and some of the intricate passages that do require you to listen. We set ourselves up to work in concert situations by virtue of the fact that the music we play needs that kind of quietness; you're there to listen to it and not to buy beer and get drunk and those kinds of things that a bar is set up to be. We knew right away that what we wanted to do was to work on an international level and we approached our music right from the start from that point of view. That's what we're doing and fortunately, it seems to be taking on and the audience is there. We've got a long time to go and this is a good beginning. We'll continue to progress from here.

What are some of the goals FM has set for itself?

Our main goal is to pay the rent. When it comes right down to it you've got to put food on the table and clothes on your back so you can only go so far out. We're lucky to have a good manager who understands our feelings about the business. From a Canadian standpoint it's very difficult to make it without the large U.S. support. Or, the other way is to work a lot around the local area but that kind of thing can be very hard on your work. So, understanding this, we said, OK let's look at film work, let's look at radio work, let's look at anything besides going out there and slogging around the bars and when we can afford to do it we'll do a concert.

Cano: une explosion de sons

Denise Gaucher et Suzanne Buchanan

Cano, un groupe Franco-Ontarien de Sudbury sera à Queen's avec FM demain soir à Grant Hall. Cano a été fondé principalement par André Paiement qui, en 1970, a établi la Coopérative des Artistes du Nouvel Ontario (CANO), un amalgame d'environ 65 artisans dédiés à pratiquer leurs métiers et de maintenir leur culture. C'est de cette coopérative que le groupe Cano est né. En 1975, ils ont donné leur premier concert, et peu après, ils ont enregistré leur premier album.

Depuis ce temps-là, le groupe a subi beaucoup de vicissitudes. En Janvier 1978 André Paiement s'est suicidé et il était question que le groupe subsisterait sans l'inspiration de leur chef. Mais le groupe a subi ce choc et s'est réorganisé. Le groupe comprend présentement sept membres aux talents variés. Ils combinent des chansons traditionnelles, du jazz et du rock avec de la musique classique. Le résultat est une explosion de sons multicolores qui crée une disposition chaude et qui envahit le spectateur.

Le concert sera à vingt heures demain soir à Grant Hall. Il sera présenté par la QEA, AMS Inc., 96 CKWS et le Comité Queen's-Laval Twin University.

There'll never be another Vice President like Richard.

Never.

The President made that promise to himself last Thursday afternoon, after Richard blew an important new-business presentation.

Richard isn't incompetent. The villain is his lunches, or rather the too-many drinks he often has at lunch. Come afternoon, he's just not as sharp as he was in the morning.

Richard is playing dice with his health. His old-fashioned business style is also sabotaging his career.

Today, with competition so rough and stakes so high, even the most generous company can't be patient for long with an employee whose effectiveness ends at noon.

If you're a friend, do Richard a favour by reminding him of the good sense of moderation.

You can bet the man eyeing his job won't help him.

Vball men grab top spot

Dave Todd

On Friday evening, before a full house in the Ross Gym, the men's Volleyball team defeated York in a best of five match. As a result of Friday's play Queen's clinched first place in the OUAA east which means that the OUAA finals will be held at Queen's the weekend of February 23-24.

The winner of the four team OUAA final advances to the six team CIAU national tournament in Hamilton on March 3-4. In the OUAA final it is likely Queen's opponents will be Guelph, Western and York. Queen's has beaten all three of these universities this year. Last year Guelph nudged Queen's out for the OUAA title and went on to finish third in the nation.

In the first game of the match, Queen's quickly established their fast, hard-hitting spiking game which enabled the Gaels to hand York a 15-8 loss. York was able to match Queen's offense with its own display of spiking allowing the Yeomen to take the second game 15-12.

Fortunately, an effective blocking strategy by Queen's thwarted York in the remaining two games. The York spikers found it hard to hit over Queen's defense and the Gaels won the third game 15-11. The fourth and final game saw a demoralized York squad lose 15-1.

On Saturday afternoon, the Gaels again faced York in a second best of five match. In the first game Queen's was down 10-2 but rallied in an exciting game to win 16-14. The second game saw Queen's continuing their dominating style of play and the Gaels defeated the Yeomen 15-9. In the third game York was outclassed again 15-9 and Queen's swept the match in three games straight. This leaves Queen's with a perfect 9 wins and 0 losses of the season.

Next Saturday and Sunday the VBall team hosts U. of Toronto.

Vball Gaels blocking strategy proved successful against York last weekend as Queen's clinched top spot in the OUAA east.

Waring leaps to record

Lee McGregor and Laurin MacWilliam

The men's and women's Track and Field team travelled to New York State this Saturday to compete at the University of Cortland. Despite having experienced some heavy competition at the Maple Leaf Star Games the day before, the team excelled, producing many fine performances.

The outstanding performance of the day was a new Queen's record and meet record in the high jump by Steve Waring, with a winning jump of 6'7".

Leading the women's field was Anne Webster with a double win in the mile and the 600 yd. 5:08.1 and 1:31.9, respectively. In the women's 2 mile, Queen's women made a clean sweep with Anne MacMillan, Vicky Gibbons, and Cathy Clark finishing first, second and third.

In the men's sprints Jeff Storwick won the 60 yd. dash in a time of 6.5 sec. Graham Boyle was third at 6.6 sec. In the 60 high hurdles, Jim Wilson and "Pre" - Rookie Mike Judge won the 600 yd. dash in 1:17.6 and placed second in 1:18.4, respectively.

Laurin MacWilliam streaked to a second place finish in the women's 60 yard high hurdles, plus a fourth place finish in the 60 yd. dash.

Heather Mitchell, Debbie Pettigrew and Laura Burns dominated the 880 yard by placing second, third and fourth. Karen Rahn continued her string of fine performances by finishing second in the women's shot put.

Veteran distance runner, but rookie long jumper, Anne Webster leaped to a third place finish.

In the triple jump Peter Becke and Graham Boyle exhibited fine form by jumping to second and fourth place. Rob Miller ran an excellent 440 to capture a second place in the pole vault, Ted Jackson vaulted a personal best of 13' to capture second place. Dan Rocheleau successfully demonstrated a dazzling kick at the end of his 880 to finish fourth.

To finish off the meet, Queen's dominated the relays by winning the men's mile relay (Rob Miller, Jeff Storwick, Jim Wilson, Charlie Hitchon), the women's mile relay (Heather Mitchell, Sue Sangster, Laurin MacWilliam, Anne Webster) and the two mile relay (Cathy Clark, Anne MacWilliam, Debbie Pettigrew, Vickie Gibbons) by wide margins.

Hockey Gals undefeated

Staff

The playoffs are only two weekends away, and the hockey Gals are sitting comfortable in first place in the OWIAA. The two contenders for second place, York and Toronto, were both at Queen's over the weekend for their last encounters with the Gals before the playoffs.

On Friday night Queen's faced Toronto in a fast-skating, aggressive match in which the Gals pulled off a 3-1 victory. They were a little slow getting started, not scoring until late in the first period (by Queen's Anne Symes). Toronto entered the game at the beginning of the second period with a quick goal, but Queen's Suzanne Jaccett retaliated half a minute later with the go-ahead shot. Janean Sergeant notched the Gals' final point midway through the third period. By that time, Queen's was clearly dominating play, inspired by the presence of the Queen's Band and CFRC broadcasters. Toronto is now in second place and will be badly wanting to defeat the Gals at the playoffs in York.

Before last weekend, York held second place in the OWIAA. However, the Gals' 6-0 romp on Saturday pushed them back to third. Queen's was expecting a tough match from York but was rather surprised by their easy victory. The York girls exhibited none of the hockey skills that originally placed them second in the standings. Rather, they seemed to have given in before play started. The Gals easily outplayed and outshot them 33-7. Kim Ferguson led the scoring with a hat trick while Janean Sergeant picked up two goals and Cathy Eberts connected for one. Sue Reynolds was the goalie with the shutout. She and her defense played well in both Gals whipped York and Toronto this weekend to remain undefeated.

Friday's and Saturday's games, game left: this Sunday at 2:30 p.m. in keeping the attacking players off the Jock Hartly Arena. They hope to complete their season with an undefeated record.

The Gals have only one season defeated record.

Upstart Gaels tie Concordia

Chris Cuthbert
Lurking behind a 2-8-4 regular season record is a pretty fair hockey squad: the Queen's Golden Gaels.

The true potential of the club was revealed Saturday evening at Jock Hartly Arena when the Gaels skated to a 4-4 draw with the nationally ranked Concordia Stingers.

The enigmatic Gaels, who seem to always play at the level of their opposition, matched the Stingers hit for hit, shot for shot, in a well-played wide open hockey game.

That's quite a feat considering the Stingers have lost only once this season in the QUAA and have recorded lopsided wins of 10-1 and 13-3 over the Ottawa Gee Gees, a team the Gaels did not beat in four attempts this year.

Mike Conway and Paul Stohart led the Gaels with Conway playing a powerful game on the Gaels' blueline and Stohart scoring twice and chipping in one assist.

The secret to the Gaels' performance was Conway's puck carrying heroics. "Mike was really turning it up the ice tonight," said coach Fred O'Donnell. "When he's moving the puck out like that it hampers the opposition's forechecking and we don't get bottled up in our own end."

Stohart, who is in a dogfight for the QUAA eastern division scoring title, was the Gaels' main offensive threat. Four minutes after setting up Kevin Treacy for the Gaels' first goal, Stohart was sent in alone to beat Concordia goalie Al Smith with a nifty deke.

Midway through the final frame, Stohart scored the Gaels' final marker with a blast from the slot which beat Smith high on the glove side.

Gary Brandt, playing on the ever improving third line, scored the other Gaels' tally on the power play in the second period.

The Stingers were paced by "The Kingston Connection", a line comprised of Kevin Sands, Kim Elliot and Steve Young, all of whom played junior level hockey in the area.

The line amassed 9 scoring points in the match with Young and Elliot scoring in the first period and Sands counting again in the third. Sands, who had a three assist night, set up Gerry Applebee for the tying goal at 12:42 of the final segment.

The Gaels' goaltending duties were split between Barry Ashby and Dan Galbraith. Galbraith was forced to leave the ice for twenty minutes when he was felled by a rising Michel Blais slap shot which caught him flush on the face mask. Galbraith returned, however, to finish the Hard work resulted in a 4-4 tie.

The Stingers outshot the Gaels 28-22 in the match.

The Gaels' next game is Tuesday evening when they travel crosstown to face the RMC Redmen. The Gaels defeated RMC 5-1 in the only other meeting between the two teams this season.

Bball Gaels win and lose

Jack Aubrey
If coach Tom Frood had his way in changing the rules of basketball he would arrange it so that only the last 20 minutes would count, as his team outscored their opponents 91-65 in the second half this past weekend.

Friday night, Frood saw his team chip away at a twenty point deficit only to come up 6 points short of victory, 80-74. The next morning it took the Gaels one half of play to get untracked against the Ryerson Rams before recording a 72-66 victory

In Toronto, the Gaels started quickly but then suddenly could not find the basket and fell behind as Toronto's running game worked at peak efficiency. Few would give the Gaels a chance in the second half after watching them stumble in the first segment.

Down 44-24, the Gaels started their long climb back into the game with a tenacious zone defence and a fast break of their own. Suddenly with 9 minutes left the score was 58-51 for the pressured Blues. The Golden Gaels, led by Rick Varsava and his deadly baseline shot, kept whittling the lead away and with 90 seconds left they trailed 74-70. The teams traded 2 baskets each in the last minute but the Gaels ran out of time in their strong comeback bid.

Rick Varsava ended up with 21 points with Mike Kirby and Phil Moore hooping 12 and 11 points respectively.

The high noon shoot out in the Ryerson gym the following day proved to be another exciting, fast paced match. Losing 37-31 Queen's dominated the last 20 minutes with a well balanced attack with the starting five in double figures. Mark Gagnon was tops for Queen's with 15 points. Tuesday night the Gaels host the second place Carleton Ravens at 8:15 in the Bartlett Gym.

Carleton coach attacked

Tim Turnbull

Carleton football coach Bryan Kealey has come under attack from his own players who claim that he is "incompetent" and makes "fatal errors in game situations."

In an anonymous letter to the Charlton, Carleton's student newspaper, veteran players accused Kealey of poor leadership and inadequate coaching. While the letter asserted that there was "nothing personal" in their criticism, the players said they had no respect for Kealey.

Kealey had the opportunity to defend himself, stating that it felt "like getting hit over the head with a hammer." He did not criticize the players in return, but feared that such a controversy could have an adverse effect on Carleton's football program and his leadership in particular.

A retraction was printed in the following issue, as players expressed their confidence and support for Kealey at a team meeting. This genuine however. It is highly doubtful that the situation has been remedied to any extent.

Carleton's football program has been steadily improving and next year's team could challenge the Gaels for the division championship. The recent outburst of dissension could severely damage team morale and hinder future success.

Squash Gals win at Waterloo

Sandy Koerner

Queen's squash gals turned out yet another tremendous performance as they captured first place at the University of Waterloo Eastern OWIAA Squash Invitational this past weekend.

Jane Forbes-Roberts, Claire Smith, Sandy Koerner, Sandra Smith and Cathy Johnston won all but one match throughout the tournament earning Queen's four medals and another victory. This marks Cathy Johnston's second consecutive win as a rookie.

Again special mention to Sandra who played 4th seed this tournament and still won every game (should she play third next?) This is not to forget our numbers one, two and three who consistently put out strong performances which rank them each in first place of their respective divisions.

The OWIAA finals will be held in Peterborough in 3 weeks - look out Toronto, McMaster, Waterloo, York and Wilfrid Laurier - Queen's squash is number one.

Swimmers whip Guelph

Ken Davies

The men's swim team capped off their undefeated season by crushing Guelph 78-34 last Friday night.

The meet featured three record breaking performances by Queen's swimmers and several down to the wire finishes. George Bovell set new standards while winning both the 50 and 100 yard freestyle events in 23.0 and 50.01 seconds respectively. The 400 yard freestyle relay team of Bovell, Rick Cockfield, Tim Dennis and John Lane broke their week old mark by three seconds with a time of 3:21.72.

The medley relay team of Andy Hasagawa, Jim Tasker, Lane and Drew Fagan opened the meet with a surprise victory over the strong Guelph team. Not to be outdone, Zero McLure posted his first victory over in the 800 freestyle followed closely by teammate Joe Schnitker. Rookie standout Jack Raligh and Captain Dennis each captured a pair of races while Tasker won his first race of the season in the 200 breaststroke. Bubbles Lawrynuik grabbed first place in the 100 fly with Giles LeRiche and Chris Leuchter close behind and rookie Doug McIntosh was third in the breaststroke.

Queen's divers had a field day, especially John Taliano who captured two thirds with his vastly improved performance. Glen Orton won the 3m event and Mark Critchley was second in the one metre. Queen's travels to Toronto in two weeks to compete in the QUAA championships with the hope of finishing third behind the U of T and Waterloo powerhouses.

Epee fencers qualify for finals

The men's fencing team travelled to Toronto last weekend to compete in the QUAA East Sectional semi-finals. The purpose of the meet was to select the top two teams and top six individuals in each weapon.

The highlight of the meet was the 7-2 thrashing of the reigning QUAA champion U of T Blues by the epee team of Scott Scheuermann, Gork Kubaneck and Gregor Smith. This was enough to eliminate U of T and the Queen's team appears to have an excellent chance of taking the epee crown at the finals this weekend at Carleton.

In the individual competition Gordon Kubaneck and Gregor Smith both qualified with strong performances.

Brother, can you spare a dime?

"The Weekend Poll", conducted by Weekend Magazine, this week claimed that "Sixty-eight percent of Canadians believe that the unemployed don't want to work." Something is desperately wrong here.

As Cy Gonick, a University of Manitoba Professor, notes in the accompanying article "objectively speaking, the unemployed cannot be blamed for unemployment: the number of job vacancies is about one for every twenty people who are unemployed." Gonick reasons that the public attitude is probably the cumulative effect of government and media propaganda which is trying to shift the burden of blame for our dismal economic condition on to the unemployed themselves. The resulting fairy tales defy the stark and depressing reality that there are simply not enough jobs for all those who are ready and willing to work—the great majority of the unemployed.

Sure, there are some "parasites" who are content to ride the welfare wagon that UIC and other programs provide. We all know of such people. But these drones are surely a tiny minority relative to the "industrial reserve army" of all currently unemployed people in Canada. That these people do choose to be unemployed is somewhat unfortunate—for the society which must provide for them, even more so for themselves, and especially for the truly involuntarily unemployed who suffer from the social malice which is too indiscriminately aimed at all unemployed. It is hardly fair. Something about tarring all with the same brush comes to mind here.

Without discussing the cause of unemployment on the general or individual level, the simple truth remains that if a job is offered which has tolerable working conditions and a reasonable, living wage, the job will be filled. People generally don't want

(or choose) to be unemployed—certainly not voluntarily, or for any extended period of time. So let us not abuse the less fortunate—simply being unemployed is already too much suffering for most, without heaping on the stigmas which are all too readily applied. All they want is a fair break—a chance to live a respectable life where they can provide for themselves, and contribute to the social product.

We should all have the awareness to realize that some people in our society, especially now in a "recessed" economy, will inevitably become involuntarily unemployed, and we should then have the compassion to appreciate the personal tragedy and social waste which this entails. With one vacancy for every twenty unemployed, it is clear that most of the unemployed probably do wish to work. If jobs are not there, the least we can do is understand the situation—scapegoats don't do anyone any good.

Saga of wine and bread

Saga Foods has a stranglehold on student activities at this university, and it is the university administration that is to blame. Two years ago, students wishing to hold an event were able to buy the liquor they were to sell, and the food they were to provide, on their own if they so desired. Under the existing contract between Saga and the university, Saga has exclusive rights to the provision of both liquor and food at all events held on campus.

This arrangement was made in order to eliminate the alleged inefficiencies of the old system, which were causing the Food Service Department to run at a loss. But according to John Koopman, AMS Vice President (Operations), the department ran at a loss last year and is expected to do so this year as well.

Saga's monopoly is to be criticized, not because it is a monopoly, but because it has led to a number of specific hassles for event convenors that could easily have been avoided had Saga not been in exclusive charge of providing food and liquor services. The most recent example of this occurred at the Amnesty International benefit concert last weekend. The organizers, intent on serving wine and cheese to the concert-goers, found that they had to do so through Saga. Arrangements were made, but when the wine arrived, there was no cheese.

Saga's role on campus has become too large for an external organization. The blame clearly lies not with the company, for it is in the business of making profits, but with the university administration, which has substituted student initiative for external bureaucracy with all the problems that presents to the student event convenor. The time has come to pull in the reins.

AMS Court lays fines on mug and chair thieves

Julia Grunau

A student was fined $10 for eating a pub mug last December in one of four cases heard at a meeting of the AMS Court last Wednesday night.

Brett Code, accused of deliberately breaking two mugs, was let off the first charge due to insufficient evidence but was forced to pay the standard fine for the other after an hour's deliberation on the part of the presiding three-person panel of Chief Justice Sandy McIntyre, Greg Radwan, and Joanna Robertson.

According to Eric Cameron, Manager of the Underground Pub, the Court and resulted in force

Code, "proceeded to chew the glass from top to bottom, spitting the pieces out at my feet" after being called up to explain another broken glass at his table. "It was quite an impressive thing to do," he added.

Code was given a stern lecture by the Chief Justice. "Such an action is juvenile, reprehensible—a $10 fine is grossly inadequate," while Justice Radwan pointed out that "you (Code) deserve far worse." The case set a precedent in that the summons served up by the AMS was upheld by the Court and resulted in force payment of the fine. The three other cases resulted in slight fines and bonds valued up to $50 to be refunded on April 6 if no further run-ins with the Court arise.

The case of the stolen pub chair involving two male MBA students (who plead guilty) resulted in a suspension of pub privileges until March 12. Engineer Jim Currie's ice cube-throwing in the pub left him similarly without admission until that date, along with a $30 bond, and Wesley Moul's brief theft of seven bottles of liquor, along with a guilty plea, made for a $25 fine and $50 bond.

Chief Prosecutor Mark Baker seems satisfied with the Court. "I've heard there's a review going on," he said. "As the Court's working tonight I don't think it needs much review. But I'd like to know its jurisdiction. And if things go right, we can have a Court Day the first Wednesday of every month."

When questioned about his approach to the Code case, Baker smiled. "We're charging him with breaking the glass," he said. "There's nothing wrong with eating it."

They ain't got mountain dew on tap but some folk sure do get into some totable "moonshine" at the Pub these days

Students may lose their grants

Michael Allen

Fifty Queen's students who have yet to pick up their Ontario government grant cheques at the Student Awards Office will be disappointed if they have not done so by Friday, 16 February, because the Ministry of Colleges and Universities, this year as in previous years, wants them to be returned.

In order to balance their own books, the Ministry has requested that unclaimed grant cheques be sent back after the deadline in time to meet their 1st March fiscal year end. The Awards Office has already mailed two warnings directly to the students, (and a third to their permanent address) who risk losing their cheques and who would have to face six weeks wait before they could be reissued in the Ministry's new financial year.

"In the past this has been a problem for some students," said Bob Merrifield, the Student Awards Officer on campus, "because they have been entitled to receive their grants, but they have had to face a time delay if their cheques were sent back and then had to be issued again."

While this deadline applies to grant recipients whose cheques have been already received by the Awards Office, it does not affect those whose assistance applications are currently under review or those whose loan certificates are still unclaimed.

Students protest Lane's exploitation of tragedy

Rob Southcott

The decision by the AMS to sponsor a lecture by Mark Lane, a former attorney to the late Reverend Jim Jones, next Monday evening, has met with some opposition from students.

Lane, who has been on a tour of various universities, is to speak on "The Horror of Jonestown", the cult settlement in Guyana where, under the leadership of Jones, over 900 people committed suicide. For his lecture, Lane will receive $2,000 in American funds from the AMS Speaker's Committee, who will also have to pay an additional 15% of this sum to the Canadian government for having an American speak in Canada.

Three students, John Ronson, Paul Steep, and Jamie Robertson, intend to set up an information picket outside of the lecture. "We don't want to interfere with anyone who wants to go to the lecture, we just want to show that we dislike the idea of the AMS providing a legitimate platform in an academic environment for someone to sensationalize a tragic event," stated Steep. He feels that Lane is profiting from "the misfortune of others."

AMS Education Commissioner Vicki Steele stated that she and the Speaker's Committee had done a lot of thinking about having Lane come to Queen's. "I had told Inner Council, and no one was upset, and when I announced it at the last Outer Council meeting, there were no major beefs," said Steele. She saw no reason for not bringing Lane to speak, as the opposition seems to be to the man himself, rather than the topic of his speech. She also stated that according to reports from other universities, Lane's lecture is not just a sensationalisation of Jonestown, but had met with positive response elsewhere.

Stricter curriculum advised for BA students

Kim Fennell

The Faculty of Arts and Science may be headed for some major changes in its curriculum. Recommendations going before the Faculty Board this Friday will have the effect of increasing the basic requirements for a Bachelor of Arts and Bachelor of Science degree.

In its report, the Steering Committee of the Conference of Teaching and Learning made the following recommendations. The first is that Ontario students admitted into their first year of the Faculty will be required to have Year 5 English. Students from outside the province will have to offer a credit equivalent to Ontario Year 5 English or else pass a test in English competency.

A second recommendation would make it necessary for all Arts and Science students to have at least one credit in each of the three principal areas of study in the Faculty (i.e. Social Sciences, in Fine Arts/Humanities/Languages and in Natural Sciences).

Also suggested is that the ability to analyse and synthesize be enhanced by such methods as the requirements of a thesis by all fourth year students in Honours B.A. and Honours B.Sc. The committee also recommends oral presentation of theses and term papers.

Ross Bartlett, ASUS President, feels there is a good chance these recommendations will be accepted on Friday. Once passed, the proposals would be referred to the Faculty Curriculum Committee and the Committee of Departments for further study.

The Year 5 English requirement would have to be delayed for 2-3 years in order to give fair warning to senior High School students. It is unlikely that any of the other recommendations could be implemented by September.

Arts and Science Associate Dean, David McLay, pointed out that Year 5 English in Ontario used to be too vague. "But as of 1977 there has been a curriculum guide and Ontario is returning to the English of a decade ago," McLay added. "We hope it will bring up the level of English competency. Presently, 1 in 10 first year students is deficient in writing skills. The new requirement won't have a big effect but it will place a new emphasis on writing ability."

Considering oral presentation recommendation, Bartlett claimed it was a good idea because, "If you can't communicate your knowledge to others, then your work is not going to be of value to anyone but yourself and a few others who can understand the technical language of your written report."

Hope for cancer at KGH

Doug Ronson

The KGH Cancer Ward is currently developing a new technique for killing cancerous tumours, according to Research Associate J.C. Kennedy of Queen's Faculty of Medicine. He describes the results of the experiments so far as "encouraging".

If Kennedy's experiments are successful the method will be first choice for certain types of cancer and may also cure types of the disease where traditional methods are currently failing.

The process involves the injection of a drug into the bloodstream. The drug concentrates around cancerous tissue and makes it very sensitive to light. A bright light of red wavelength is then shone upon the cancerous area which causes a chemical reaction to occur, killing the cancerous cells. The body discharges the dead chimer.

Similar experiments have been performed by Dr. T.J. Dougherty in Buffalo, which have so far been quite successful. Of 40 patients treated, 85% have had their chimer eliminated and have had no return of the cancerous cells.

At Queen's, only four patients have been treated so far. Kennedy describes the results as "so far so good" but notes that they have not yet monitored the patients for a long enough period.

Presently there are a few technical problems but no biological difficulties with the process.

Househunting hints from STIK

Rick Emmerson

In the midst of the rush for housing, Student Tenants in Kingston (STIK) has published a handbook providing valuable insights into the rights and obligations of tenants, and offers tips on successful house hunting. This Student Tenant Handbook will be available Monday in the Housing, AMS and Legal Aid offices.

STIK has been holding meetings for the last two weeks and will continue to do so after reading week pending further notice.

Ms. Mahoney, AMS researcher, told the Journal that "Since STIK meetings have begun, and the Journal has provided coverage of the pitfalls of renting in Kingston, STIK has noticed a decrease in calls requesting information or registering complaints." She added, "It is too soon to say whether this is because students are looking out for their own rights, or if this is merely a lull before the storm."

Ms. Mahoney is available for consultation daily from 9:00 to 5:00 in the AMS office.

Africa and Arabia - sleeping volcanoes

Deb MacLeod

Speaking forcefully at Grant Hall Monday night, Lord Caradon made a call for urgent action to solve the plight in the Middle East and Southern Africa before both areas erupt into war.

The Middle East danger "is that Israel... may not seek a peace of reconciliation but will make the dreadful mistake of relying for its survival on military intimidation of its neighbors."

Lord Caradon expressed optimism in the potential role of Jordan and the "straight and steady leadership of King Hussein."

The present danger of a Middle East war has been diminished by initiative taken by president Anwar Sadat of Egypt.

"The Palestinians," said Lord Caradon, "speak to a cause which is clear and positive." It is their domination and suppression which will lead to a devastating conflict, "an area of bitter and bloody confrontation not only between Israelis and Arabs but between the super powers too, with the U.S. arming and supporting Israel and the Soviet Union arming and supporting the Arabs."

Turning to the danger in Southern Africa, Lord Caradon spoke of the need to end regimes of racial suppression.

The lack of free elections, South African support of the Rhodesian regime and policies of apartheid have, "created conditions which will bring all Africa to the precipice of a race war."

This in turn will be compounded by a confrontation between "the Western powers supporting the white minorities and the Soviet Union and China supporting the black majorities." Repercussions of this race war will be world divisive.

"The world has not yet woken up to realize the overwhelming dangers of Arabia and Africa," said Lord Caradon, stressing the magnitude of these dangers. "They are already upon us."

Lord Caradon, while underlining the immediacy of these dangers, spoke in optimistic terms of resolution. Through his personal concern for these areas, he made a call for "determined international action."

"I believe in the effectiveness of international action," he said, and cited the use of the United Nations as an effective and available instrument. He added, "what has been lacking is the will to use it."

Lord Caradon spoke with hope on the role of the U.S.S.R. describing joint action among the East and West for a Middle East resolution in 1967 he said that this "makes it possible to hope and expect that international agreement will indeed be attainable."

There is now support to add to the 1967 resolution that would, through its terms "provide for an end of all violence."

On a rather innovative suggestion, Lord Caradon said that members of the European Economic Community could possibly initiate action in the Middle East.

Continuing, he suggested, "that the Commonwealth might come together to take a joint initiative in the United Nations. The strength of the Commonwealth is of course that it includes people of all races."

Hassles over mug fines

Diana Coulter

The recent implementation of fines for mug thefts from the Queen's pubs has led to one confusing incident.

On November 17, 1978, two first year students, who wish to remain nameless, were apprehended for the attempted theft of two Underground Pub beer mugs. Although the students were apprehended before leaving the premises, one suspect's name was taken by the AMS constable on duty. However, they heard nothing more.

Last week, the student in question received an AMS court summons. The student "had figured the whole thing had been forgotten by now." The summons was sent three months after the suspected theft, and a month after the $10 fine for theft or breakage of mugs at the Pub was passed. The summons demanded that he pay the $20.00 fine or appear in court to protest the charge. However, the date, time and place of the hearing were not filled out in the space allotted on the summons.

Mark Baker, a third year Law student and Prosecutor for the AMS Court, was finally reached by the accused student and the date for the hearing was clarified.

The faulty summons was further confused by the discovery that it had been sent to the student who was not caught in possession of the mugs. The accused student said "I gave my name to keep my girlfriend out of trouble."

Faced with all these slip-ups, Baker informed the student that, "to facilitate a settlement" out of court because he "couldn't withdraw the charges" he would "lower the fine to $10.00."

Help at Legal Aid was sought by the accused students but "no one seemed too interested." They took up a collection amongst their friends and paid the reduced fine.

The principle behind the fine system, according to the Baker, is "to avoid the hassle" of going to court.

The First Minister's Conference

Colin Brown

Tuesday's final session of the First Minister's Constitutional Conference provided its observers with some interesting political and personal contrasts.

Seated around the circular table were Prime Minister Trudeau and the ten provincial premiers. Mr. Trudeau naturally occupied centre stage, flanked on either side by Premiers Davis of Ontario and Levesque of Quebec.

Alberta's Peter Lougheed sat directly across the table from the Prime Minister. Each man had a particular stake in the conference. Trudeau must call an election within three months, so it was imperative for the Prime Minister to assume command of the situation and emerge with a positive or negative reaction from the meetings, to take to the electorate as a campaign issue. Ontario's Bill Davis wishes to enhance his image as a national figure. Rene Levesque is under increasing pressure to hold his promised referendum on Quebec's future in Confederation. Though few suggested he would go as far as to "sabotage" the conference as he did to the Economic Summit one year ago, it was clear his objective was to demonstrate how Quebec does not belong in Canada's constitutional framework. Peter Lougheed, too, is under pressure. He is expected to call a provincial election within a matter of days and needs to reinforce his reputation as tough bargainer on rights for Alberta oil.

To varying degrees, each man came away with what he needed. Pierre Trudeau was an efficient and respected chairman of the conference, and performed convincingly before the television cameras. His image as Canada's national leader has been substantially reinforced and coupled with the most recent Gallup Poll results which put him a scant one percentage point behind Joe Clark, many feel the Liberals may well be starting their final pre-election momentum.

Bill Davis emerged as a national figure as well. He is the coolest and most experienced of the premiers, and this was apparent in his casual pipe-smoking deportment and occasional friendly wisecracking which often helped break stalemates of boredom or tension during Tuesday's sessions. His move to patriate the constitution is a significant one for future discussion, for until this conference only Prime Minister Trudeau had urged action on the issue. In fact, many observers felt that Davis' move will prove very useful to Trudeau, who can now safely campaign on patriation as an issue.

The fact that Canada's leaders were unable to reach immediate solutions to constitutional entanglements was Rene Levesque's strongest gain, but it should be pointed out that no-one, including the Prime Minister, predicted that the conference would be a roaring success. Many felt that there was a marked change in Levesque's colleague's attitude towards his presence, illustrated by Trudeau and Justice Minister Marc Lalonde's confrontation with the Quebec premier Tuesday morning on the issue of communications. The premiers did not hesitate to take swipes at Levesque as well. After one of the Quebec premier's pointed comments on the futility of the patriation debate, Bill Davis launched out a verbal attack which sailed across the desk of a bemused Trudeau and landed squarely on his opponent, doing sufficient damage to silence him for the remainder of the evening. Many feel that this was the first federal-provincial conference where Levesque was not the star, but rather a troublesome nuisance.

Though Peter Lougheed did back Bill Davis' call for patriation and several other minor proposals, on the issue of natural resources he could not have been more inflexible. He resisted any suggestions by Energy Minister Alastair Gillespie to modify the distribution of Alberta oil resources, calling the federal proposals "most distressing." At the close of the resources debate, he seemed to sum up his province's position by snapping at Trudeau, "If your attitude remains in this position, you can expect to see very little oil, and a lot of Albertans buying their new cars in Montana."

An exercise in self-interest

Drew Fago

Federal-provincial conferences have a history of being little more than exercises in futility. The complete process of seating eleven government leaders around a table and expecting them to reach agreement on the most fundamental of national issues is clearly next to impossible. The conference on the constitution, completed last Tuesday in Ottawa, was no exception.

Discussions on the patriation of the constitution have been proceeding on an intermittent basis since 1927. Throughout, the major and unmovable barrier to success has been an unwillingness to sacrifice self-interest for the good of the nation as a whole; in effect, to relieve provincial or regional concerns in order to reach national consensus.

This unwillingness to compromise private interests was in evidence throughout the conference. For fear of being portrayed as a weak and indecisive leader, each Premier is restrained from making conciliatory gestures. Rather than making fundamental compromises the leaders preferred to stand pat, able to portray themselves as the major protectors of their provinces' interests.

The bottom line, then, is that all the participants are tellingly yoked by political concerns. Examples abound of this problem; while Premier Lougheed zealously protects his ever-growing Heritage Fund, public sentiment in Alberta ensures that no compromise on his part can be made in reaching agreement on the writing of a resources clause in the constitution. Sterling Lyon of Manitoba proved to be the most implacable of leaders, opposing Trudeau's entrenchment of official minority language rights in deference to the anti-French sentiment still swirling throughout his province. Premier Levesque refused to compromise during discussions concerning jurisdiction over communications, insisting that the Quebec government become a complete master of broadcasting inside the province. Never mind that Ottawa would have an interest in pointing the communications field toward the development of a Canadian identity. In effect, all Premiers wallowed in their own limited interests, unable or unwilling to make the hard, often unpopular compromises necessary to reach agreement. As such, the conference ended with full consensus on just two of the fourteen contentious issues.

These conferences provide a capsule view of the transformation that has taken place in the sentiment of the nation during the past fifteen years. Whereas a spirit of cooperation was predominant during the 1960's, fed by a national pride that climaxed with Expo '67, today we are left without any feeling of national purpose. The cynicism that has crept into the politics of this country is evidenced by the zealotry with which each government leader pursues his own selfish goals. No longer does there seem any concern for speaking of a national will; at times it was as if eleven nations were sitting at the bargaining table rather than eleven governments, each joined together by a common good.

Much of the blame for this transformation in attitudes must lie with Prime Minister Trudeau. While he has performed throughout his term as an able leader he has never been able to reduce the gap between provincial demands without using the heavy hand of federal power, which tends to elicit little response but a growing tendency towards provincial intransigence. In a situation such as this conference, where unanimity must be reached by eleven governments, what is needed is a mediator and a leader with the personal attributes necessary to induce competing politicians to compromise. Pearson had this gift, Trudeau does not.

Eight years ago, the only province that dissented on reaching agreement on a new constitution and its patriation was Quebec. Consensus in the Victoria Charter was reached on a bill of rights, a declaration of language rights and on an amending formula. On Tuesday, the governments reached accord on none of those fundamental issues. Obviously the barriers that lie ahead dwarf the progress that has been made thus far. As Premier Hatfield asked during the last day of proceedings "Does anyone have any gin?"

Kayiira condemns Amin's rule of terror

Tim Greenwood

The following is an interview with Dr Lutakome Kayiira, former superintendent of prisons under Idi Amin, who visited Queen's last Friday and delivered a speech denouncing the Amin regime.

Q: Did you know Amin on a personal level?

A: I knew Amin personally from 1960 onwards. My association with him at first was through boxing. As a boxer myself we used to have training together within the Ugandan team. And then afterwards, when I joined prisons I was an officer and we used to socialize and he was then kind of helpful with the boxing team from the army, and I was in charge of the boxing team in the prisons and we used to associate quite often. But I knew Amin personally then as a man and I did not believe Amin could be head of a state of any country. I didn't think he had the intelligence or preparation or leadership qualities that are necessary. So when I heard of the takeover I thought immediately it would have to be somebody else and not Amin, because Amin could not be a leader. But when I finally heard that he had declared himself the president I knew things were going to be terrible.

Q: Did you think he had the potential to be as barbarous as he was?

A: Yes in a way I did. One thing he was ruthless and he was a man who did not go by tradition and convention. He wanted to take shortcuts in his dealings with anything, and I knew. But I did not believe that he could do it to a whole country.

Q: Does all this violence occur under the guiding hand of Amin or has he lost control of his army?

A: Well I think both of those are true. Some people are killed because Amin orders directly that they should be killed. Others are killed because soldiers have taken the law into their own hands and with Amin's approval. Amin brought about the breakdown of law and order by directly rewarding people who are violating the law, his soldiers. Mainly he was buying loyalty from these people. You have to look at the type of officers he's got in the army. Before his regime the army was composed of very intelligent and well educated officers. When he got in power he replaced these officers by killing them, or by just forcing them out of the country. He feared them mainly because they were more intelligent than he was and also because they were educated and he wasn't. So he had that inferiority complex which necessitated his getting rid of them.

In their place he promoted privates who really "didn't know what it was about," but he needed people like those because they wouldn't challenge him. He was the Boss and they all owed their loyalty to him. He even went to the extreme of getting people from prison, common criminals, and made them colonels and generals.

Q: How secure did you yourself feel while you were in Uganda?

A: Everybody who has had any education at all is really fearful of his security. People have developed mechanisms of survival. Some have even lost their close relatives and they are still in the government. They are scared to say anything and they just carry on the normal duties of government, whatever could be called government, because even the government itself is in a shambles. There is one man's rule.

People are there, some for just survival others have made a lot of gains from the chaos that goes on, financial and other. So people are staying there for a lot of reasons. Each person who is there, even his (Amin's) closest of friends are fearful of the situation because it's a question of if someone says anything wrong against you to Amin, you are dead.

So you really hope for the best. In order to understand why people are still in Amin's government we have to understand the social situation, the culture. We are an extended family-type of society where we have relatives all round, we are so close to each other. Now it is so easy for me to walk out and leave but then what about all my relatives. It was a decision that I had to make that was very agonizing, to leave Uganda, when I did and also to come here and to decide to speak out against Amin. He takes it out on the people you leave behind. He has said it publicly, that for those people who speak out, they are jeopardizing the lives of their relatives and he has carried through these threats.

My brother was killed just because of that. But now I'm left with my father who is an old man and my mother, very old. There are a lot of Ugandans here who cannot dare speak out against Amin just because of that.

A return to basics

The Editor,

In 1972, the Social Science Complex was named in honour of two outstanding Principals of Queen's University, Dr. W.A. Mackintosh and Dr. J.A. Corry.

As time goes on the reasons why buildings are named are frequently lost sight of, and students who did not have any association with the former Principals do not realize the disrespect, nor do they intend any disrespect, when they refer to the Social Science Complex as "Mac-Corry Hall". I doubt if a great deal can be done to dissuade students from using this nick-name, but it might be helpful if some publicity could be given to the reasons for naming the building and the desirability of using the full name. As a step in this direction, it would be desirable if all official University and student publications, when referring to the building, would use its proper name, which is "Mackintosh-Corry Hall".

Continuing the liquor debate

The Editor,

It never ceases to amaze me that any rebuttals or opposing opinions sparked by earlier letters are always written from a very patronizing and often rude point of view. S. Lorimer has been no exception to the rule.

The letter he (or she) wrote defending sobriety at football games presented a valid, rational position; an opinion worth printing. Unfortunately, the writer had to follow up with a ridicule of my alternatives, which were originally written in a humorous vein. I will take Lorimer's two complaints about my letter and attempt to rationalize my stand.

First, by not admitting the "very drunk" and allowing those who could potentially reach that stage, into the football games I am not saying that all the problems of disturbances will be solved. Similarly, very drunk people are not to be admitted to any pubs and yet perfectly sober people

Grunauisms: not for everyone

The Editor,

As I pondered over last Tuesday's Journal, I was very dismayed to find yet another of Julia Grunau's irrelevant and misinformed music reviews. Her assignment this time happened to be the Liona Boyd Concert of last Saturday night but that makes little difference seeing that all her reviews tend to be no more than a string of "Grunauisms".

First, of all, we get the essential fashion run-down - "a Medieval-type (sic) pink gown, with her gold hair pulled back". Throughout the review we are assaulted with such astute observations as, "she made the audience her slaves", and (my favourite), "her fingers flit over the fret board like a hummingbird's wings".

All this information is rather trivial and quite harmless Miss Grunau's most serious fault is her almost complete lack of musical knowledge. To call Eric Satie a "relatively unknown composer" is an outrage. Satie was perhaps the greatest influence on musical thinking in the years after World War I. She also tells us that "Liona Boyd is not yet one of the greatest classical guitarists". This may be true, but her reason for making this statement is incredibly naive. She seems to think that Liona Boyd's lack of greatness is "entirely due to her age". Age has nothing to do with greatness, Mozart was a great pianist at the age of seven.

After reading this review, (and all of her others), I find that I have no idea of what the concert was actually like and I have been misinformed on a number of important points. Might I suggest that in the future Miss Grunau be assigned to fashion shows.

entering bars all have the potential to be inebriated before the night ends and yet drinking is not banned in pubs. The people packing their wineskins are "their own liquor control board" and the mere possession of the booze does not necessarily make the guilty party a drunkard.

Secondly, I had suggested an increase in constables to try to curb trouble and Lorimer contends that a sober constable will not want to break up a brawl. Speaking personally as a former senior constable, I have broken up or helped break up several "drunken brawls" without a moment's hesitation and if any of my fellow constables were not prepared to do the same, then they were not suited for the job.

Also, Lorimer implied that the constable's salary was not worth stepping into a brawl for, but I was more than grateful for the money, as are, I am sure, the current students employed in the system.

In conclusion, my original letter was not a blatant defence of booze at the games, but an attempted humorous look at the situation and a partial lament for the way events had concluded. In future, it would be nice to see some positive validation for someone's thoughts and opinions, rather than simply a shooting down of alternate ideas.

A change of address

Richard Tow

"262 Wellington" has appeared in Golden Words for the past year and a half with a more or less indifferent attitude on the part of the artist toward the material printed in the rest of the paper. The obsession with sex evident in the articles was completely harmless. I at first believed that their recent satire of Sweven was to be equally harmless. My cartoon, which lampooned my own field of art study could therefore have been seen as appropriate to the theme of the issue. However, I unfortunately failed to review all the material in the magazine before I submitted my strip, and created the impression that I supported the position held by the editors of GW. I must make it clear that I do not. The feel that Sweven should not even exist, that its presence has no "value and necessity". Their timing, in bringing "Swever" out on the day of the Sweven referendum, is deplorable. They may have influenced the votes of people who have never read the magazine.

Sweven, like the Fine Arts that it represents, should exist for the simple fact that it is a release from conformity. I cannot condone the belief of the editors of Golden Words that artists are nothing more than "parasites on society, feeding off their more productive neighbours". Therefore I feel it necessary to transfer "262" to the Queen's Journal for Sweven's sake, if not for my own.

Anarchy in the UK

by Gil Gross

"If lives are lost, then that's the way it must be" Was this Ayatollah Khomeini discussing his attempts to overthrow the Iranian government? Or was it Idi Amin speaking about the state of democracy in Uganda? Or, more likely, is it a quote from Hitler's Mein Kampf?

It is none of these. But the question was loaded, because "none of these" was not offered as a choice, and few would have guessed the correct answer anyway. Today's Quote of the Week comes to us from a source much closer to home, geographically, politically, and culturally. Those compassionate pearls of wisdom originated from the mouth of Bill Dunn, who is an officer in Britain's striking ambulance drivers union.

Words like those have been flowing rather easily in Great Britain recently, as union after union has threatened, or carried out strike action in what is rapidly becoming a showdown between the powerful labour movement and, ironically, the Labour government, headed by James Callaghan. The situation has caused corpses to be left unburied and sick or injured people to be, in some cases, denied access to emergency treatment. The strikes have engulfed both the public and private sectors and include such diverse groups as teachers and auto workers. In fact, few sectors of British life have not been affected.

Obviously, these people must have some justifiable complaint. They represent the country's lowest-paid groups and many of them earn as little as $100 a week. Callaghan's government has imposed a ceiling of 5% on wage hikes, while many workers are demanding increases of 40% or more. Their increases still lag behind the inflation rate, which currently stands at 8%.

Nevertheless, no matter how underpaid the unionists are, nobody in a civilized society has the right to jeopardize lives unnecessarily. The attitude of Britain's trade unions reflects the cold-blooded, dog-eat-dog mentality which has become an integral part of many of our materialistic societies. Certainly, the workers deserve to live decently, but they must realize that their own performance greatly influences the nation's ability to pay them. The callous, unthinking actions of Britain's unions serve only to cripple the economy and are, therefore,

A case of conflicting customs

The Editor,

I certainly do not wish to exacerbate the already existing paranoia of the gentleman who wrote regarding his experience with "Canadian" Customs on re-entry to the United States, but, the truth is that he was interrogated by his own countrymen.

On entering Canada, one passes through Canadian Customs, and, on entering the United States, one reports to U.S. Customs.

Mr. Francois was obviously well-treated by Canada Customs to have been so unprepared for the questions he met with on his way home.

ultimately self-defeating.

The irresponsible behavior of the workers has prompted a tremendous backlash among members of the harassed British public. A poll taken last week shows the opposition Conservatives 19 percentage points ahead of Labour and an election is fast approaching. Opposition Leader Margaret Thatcher has promised to deal firmly with the strikers. Incidents such as one where a doctor refused to treat trade union members serves to demonstrate the public's anger and disgust.

Perhaps Canadian unions, which have generally been behaving during the past few years, will learn a lesson from the British experience. Let's hope that our labour leaders are more mature and calculating than Bill Dunn. Unfortunately, Great Britain is not Iran or Nazi Germany and its proximity to us, geographically, and historically, serves to make such a hope very tenuous indeed.

Ottawa and the sweet smell of media success

by Dave Fagan

Ottawa is a wonderful city if you're the type who obtains a great charge from snowshoeing or snowmobiling to work. How the city employees periodically manage to keep the roads somewhat clear while the snow is piled to a height twice that of your car is a feat for which I cannot find explanation. Somehow, it always seems that a strong gust of wind should be sufficient to imbed all autos in a quagmire of ice and brownish snow. However, Ottawa residents seem quite content to endure the permafrost conditions that exist for much of the year.

And why not? Everyone works in the public service. Withstanding the latest "grab-for-votes-with-a-neo-right-approach" of the Liberal government, public employees seem to do quite well for themselves.

Preaching a philosophy of profit

The Editor,

"The Horror of Jonestown," by Mark Lane. A sensational headline in the National Enquirer? No folks, this is the title of a talk to be given at Queen's University, supposedly an academic community.

From the man who brought you his fantastic (and very lucrative) tales on the assassination of President Kennedy, we now get the inside scoop on Jonestown. Mind you, this is for a price - and a very steep one at that. Our esteemed A.M.S. Speaker's Bureau has deigned to bestow his presence upon us for a mere pittance - $3000.

The story of Jonestown does not need to be recounted in this way. It certainly will gain nothing in the retelling by a man whose only motive is self-aggrandizement and greed.

Even if one finds Mr. Lane's ingenious conspiracy theories compelling, one can easily question his ethical and moral standards in commercializing a tragic situation. Mr. Lane is currently facing lawsuits and disbarment proceedings because of his role in the whole affair, claims have been made that he failed to warn Congressman Leo Ryan and four others that death awaited them.

at the Peoples Temple religious commune. The propriety and legality of Mr. Lane's behavior at the time he represented the Temple remain to be decided in the courts, but a number of questions remain to be resolved.

Why, then, is Queen's University providing Mr. Lane with a platform and giving him the air of legitimacy associated with it? Why is $3000 being spent to lure Mr. Lane here - money which could be better spent on more respectable speakers, or given to the families of the Jonestown victims?

If you agree with our sentiments, please give Mr. Lane the only audience he deserves this Monday night - himself.

Downtown Ottawa after another morning snowstorm?

There's nothing like the view of dozens of seven-piece suited walking to Parliament Hill to put in another five hour day. With their strutting walks (I'm convinced that everyone starches their shorts) and their self-important manner, it's enough to convince a soon-to-be university graduate that laetile distribution would be a more reputable means of earning a living.

I should explain at this time that my passing interest in Ottawa arises from the two days that I spent at the First Ministers' Conference earlier this week. For me it was an entirely new experience. However, there's something about becoming caught in a sea of reporters converging on Davis or Lougheed and smelling the underarms of Douglas Fisher or being breathed upon by Knowlton Nash or Lloyd Robertson that brings you back down to earth.

Being in such distinguishing company has the tendency to turn you into a bumbling idiot. I managed to spill coffee on my notes while lending a pen to a former Premier of Nova Scotia, but that was quite insignificant compared to the floor show performed by my travelling companion. He tripped getting out of his seat during Tuesday's extravaganza leading everyone in the hall to emerge from their concentration to wonder why anyone as gifted in the art of imitating Gerald Ford should be wasting his time in Ottawa.

The most difficult act in such circumstances is undoubtedly the simple step of making conversation with any of the journalists whom you've been admiring for years. While you push yourself to move forward and start a discussion, the hesitancy remains, knowing fully that any intelligent comment will probably remain elusive, leaving you babbling, stammering or worse yet without anything at all to say.

However, on Tuesday I summoned my courage and sat down with Pat Nagle, a writer for the Vancouver Sun. Learning that he had taught at Carleton, to which I plan to apply for graduate school, I had an immensely enjoyable and beneficial conversation. So, concluding that my insecurity had diffused and brimming with confidence, I jaunted up to another employee of the Vancouver Sun, Alan Fotheringham. "Alan," I said, "is the Sun still out on strike?" He nodded. "Any chance for a settlement?" He performed a quasi-shake of the head and then gazed at me with what seemed like a clear intention to stick his earphone up my nose. So much for socializing with the high and mighty.

Dear Joe,
Whoops!

Just finished reading the latest Gallup poll results and all I can say is well, here we go again. Once more that smooth-tongued rascal who sits across the floor from you has outsmarted you at your own game - the politics of procrastination. Yes, it was only a matter of time before the media got bored toying with the idea of you as Prime Minister. Let's face it, nobody can survive in a political vacuum that long. Somewhere there's gotta be a leak.

But let's not talk about the leaks, because we've all heard about them more than enough.

You know this has all happened before, and for basically the same reasons. Nearing a campaign, the opposition P.C.s get scared they'll blow their lead and decide to clam up. After a month or two of this starvation tactic which lays siege to the television screens, newspapers and wire services of this country, people begin to think if all they are hearing is bad news from one side, there must be good news from the other. The polls improve, and so do the spirits of the muzzled members of the opposition.

But then people start to get a little bit cocky. Drunk with power (here meaning ten percentage points) they come out for some air and end up running around all over the world inspecting this and that and saying all sorts of things which are welcomed by the hungry media. But feeding these guys is like feeding the lions. If you don't watch out, they'll take your whole arm.

Well, at least you didn't fall off an elephant. But that's just the surface of the problem. The fact that you have nice little old ladies who have always been "party faithful" writing into newspapers telling you to "put up or shut up" is small potatoes compared to your worst enemy which, no matter who you read, is not yourself. You've got the Liberal Party of Canada to deal with.

These guys are even hungrier than the ones who want just your arms. The Liberals want to consume you, Joe, and they won't even bother to spit up the bones. They've crept up to one point off dead even in the Gallup Poll (taken before the elephants, remember) and they have some new-found momentum from the Constitutional Conference to boot. In fact, it is not absurd to assume that given the two week lag in polling, they're already five points past you and pulling away fast.

What can you do to prevent facing the public in a few week's time with your pants down facing windward? Simple. Start the campaign now. You heard me, beat them at their own game. Forget all that meticulous planning for the campaign and hit them with everything you've got. By doing that you'll be using an old Liberal trick from the last federal election - giving the media so much copy that they don't know what to do with it all. Give them facts and issues, and give them now before the enemy is out of sight. Force the election.

Remember, they guys aren't used to blowing big leads, and that's just what they'll have unless somebody up there does some scrambling.

Dig, man, dig!
Sincerely yours, etc. etc.

Into the wrong pockets

The Editor:

Once again we have been informed that there will be another tuition fee hike next year. We have been told that we still bear only a small fraction of the actual costs of our educations, and so in this time of financial constraint, we must all dig a little deeper in supposedly bottomless pockets.

To many this would not seem so bad if it could be believed that our poor, battered provincial government really could no longer pay its bills, despite the income it receives from some of the most heavily taxed citizens in Canada. Year after year we are told that more cuts in services are required and that remaining in university will cost each one of us more.

Now I ask, is there really a serious shortage of funds in the Provincial treasury? I for one had serious doubts when it was revealed that this same poverty stricken government has been subsidizing the pulp and paper industry in Ontario to the tune of 100 million a year. But what is really upsetting about this is that this same industry recorded record profits for the year 1977-78 and is expected to do even better this year.

We are asked to sit and watch in silence while our government representatives in Toronto vote themselves generous pay increases which ensure that they escape the ravages of inflation. The Minister of Colleges and Universities has justified her actions by stating that "universities are exclusive hideaways of the rich." No attempt has been made to realize that education is the key to future advancement in today's society and to raise the fee of access can only succeed in assuring general inaccessibility.

The only conclusion to be reached is that there is in fact no shortage of funds. It is just that much of it is going into the wrong pockets. Perhaps the government is forgetting that today's apathetic student, who dutifully pays his fees, is tomorrow's angry taxpayer who is all too willing to express his displeasure at the polls.

Not in retreat

The Editor:

I am writing with reference to the article entitled "Commerce House final" in the Feb 2nd Journal. In it, Newman House is described as a retreat for university chaplains. This is incorrect.

Newman House is owned and operated by St. Thomas More Parish, the Roman Catholic Parish serving the facility, students, and staff on Queen's University. It serves as a centre for weekday masses, community suppers, meetings and many other activities.

In the summer of 1977 our parish moved from 164 University Avenue to 192 Frontenac St. because of uncertainties concerning how much longer the university would rent the building to us. So, Newman House is alive and well and living at 192 Frontenac St. near the corner of Union St. The House is open daily and anyone is welcome to drop in for a coffee or a quiet spot to spend some time.

Jim Deacon

St. Thomas More Parish Council.
P.S. If any university Chaplains want to retreat to Newman House, we would welcome them.

Mark Lane at Queen's: Profiting from tragedy?

The Horror of Jonestown

Tom Mohr Colin Brown

In a pool of blood lay Jim Jones, the pitiable megalomaniac who led 900 followers to their deaths, the man who saw in himself a spiritual eminence rivalling, then ultimately surpassing, the God he had once dedicated his life to serve. That was in Jonestown, Guyana, last November, a macabre testimony to the frailties of humanity.

Why? What blind passion drove 900 People's Temple faithfuls to such an irrevocable surrender? Knowing at the sensibilities of rational men, the questions, so pertinent, must fall unanswered.

Next Monday, Rev. Jim Jones' former attorney, Mark Lane, will speak in Grant Hall on The Horror of Jonestown. His motives in doing so are highly suspect. A New York Times article appearing Feb. 4 leads off, "Last September, Mark Lane was proclaiming Jonestown as a socialist paradise and professing that he had found a conspiracy within the United States Government to destroy the People's Temple and its founder, the Rev. Jim Jones. By December, he was calling Jonestown a horror and Mr. Jones a paranoid murderer, insisting he had suspected as much all along."

Mr. Lane is being paid a bit under $3,000, by the AMS Speakers Committee for his lecture, which will seek to establish that a conspiracy exists within the People's Temple to avenge the death of Jim Jones by killing defectors and public officials.

Conspiracies are not new to Mr. Lane. He saw them in the J.F. Kennedy assassinations, again with the FBI at Wounded Knee, again with alleged CIA interference in the People's Temple, now within the Temple itself. There comes a point when one must question Mr. Lane's Want to know why people get so upset with Mark Lane everywhere he goes?

The majority of the reason lies with Lane himself - he is a brash, outspoken, uncompromising individual who tends to plunge headlong into the stickiest and most sensitive issues he can find. The remaining reason can be found in the people he comes in contact with - just like the people on this page who oppose him for one reason or another. He ruffles feathers. Mark Lane is an extremely complex individual who defies classification. Once you've met Mark Lane, you can be sure that you will never meet another like him.

From his beginnings as an ambitious young lawyer defending the poverty-stricken inhabitants of New York to the most recent tragedy at Jonestown, he has been a man who "doesn't like to see people get pushed around." His sensitivities are particularly acute dealing with the shadier side of U.S. Government activities. His mistrust of the F.B.I. and C.I.A. was bred during his then maverick crusade against the "air-tight" findings of the Warren Commission's investigation into the assassination of John F. Kennedy during the mid sixties, which led him to other causes like Wounded Knee, the defense of James Earl Ray, and finally, Jonestown. His writings and appearances dealing with these issues are well known, as is his reputation as a somewhat shifty operator. He is a master at the turning of a phrase or milking a single event for every ounce of its emotional impact.

Why?

Point

intentions. Is he not simply exploiting a heart-wrenching international tragedy toward narrow, avaricious ends? His past and present actions reflect no magnanimity of purpose. It may be interesting to note that his present swing through some of Ontario's universities will reap him an estimated $12,000.

Mr. Lane is presently facing possible disbarment in New York State; it is alleged that he knew of the danger Congressman Ryan was in before Ryan made the trip to Jonestown. Without casting prior judgement on Mr. Lane on this specific point, it may nonetheless be held that his overnight transformation from People's Temple advocate to its most prominent critic leaves his sincerity in doubt.

The AMS Speakers Committee is to be roundly criticized, not for bringing this man before us to speak his mind, but for paying almost $3,000. to do it. It is one thing to cover the lecturer's expenses; quite another to cross his palms with silver.

Mark Lane is America's rebel without a cause. He has clung to any anti-establishment movement or cult that has happened by. He has gotten away with it up to now, because his ranting and railing, while considered rather obnoxious by some, has not utterly offended people's sensibilities. But this time, Mr. Lane has crossed a hazy line. He has prostituted the emotions of those who cried when the horror of Jonestown was revealed.

Three months later, the shock has not worn off. To one, this presents an opportunity: for publicity, profit, advantage. The carpetbagger has come to hawk his wares. He deserves our ears as little as he deserves our patronage.

Counterpoint

Because if you were tackling the entire U.S. judicial system in 1965, calling some of the country's most eminent law enforcement officials, politicians and justices bald-faced liars you found out the only way to survive the telephone tapings, surveillance and murder threats was to make as much noise as you possibly could first and worry about double-checking your sources later. It is the nature of Lane's self-chosen profession which requires him to be loud and shifty, for his publicity has always been his only defense. From the elements of society he attacks.

Lecture tours around the continent are the way he manages to keep food on the table, for he often receives next to nothing for his legal services, wherever they may be required.

Now, some people at Queen's University seem a little upset that the University is paying student's money to finance his lecture. Phooey. The last time he visited Queen's it was our money which paid as well, and frankly everybody was so busy raving about the event that it didn't seem to matter. But Jonestown is a little more ugly than having an American President getting his head blown off on a sunny day in Texas. Well, if it upsets some people so much perhaps they shouldn't bother picking up a newspaper in the morning, and then they could pretend that Jonestown just didn't happen in the first place. And if they feel that hosting Mark Lane is not part of the "educational" mandate of this University, then perhaps they should stay clean away from frightening places like Queen's as well. The A.M.S. has given us a unique opportunity to meet a unique man. Whether he is good or bad, you must be the judge.

Watts on Canadian unity

Dave Duff and Gil Gross

A little more than two weeks ago, the Task Force on Canadian Unity, released its report, entitled A Future Together.

While talking with Principal Watts, who served on the Task Force one cannot help but recognize the tremendous concern he has for the future of the country as well as his vast knowledge of the present debate on National Unity. The following are excerpts from our interview with him.

Q: Why did you join the Task Force, considering the credibility problems that it was facing at the time?

By the time I joined in February, the announcements of the Task Force had made it clear that it was going to be an independent body and not just a front for the Trudeau Government.

The reason I joined really came down to this: I'm a Canadian concerned about the future of the country and I really really felt that I couldn't live with my own conscience if I hadn't made the effort.

Q: The Prime Minister recently remarked that the Task Force was "dead wrong" on language policy. How serious are the differences and how do you expect the government to react to the recommendations as a whole?

On the whole, when we met with Mr. Trudeau, and when he spoke in the House of Commons, he was very commending of the report. The specific issue which Mr. Trudeau has raised, and it is a legitimate issue, is one of the issues that we really anguished over...each one of us individually.

At the provincial level, we said that language rights were more likely to be improved and respected if it was achieved by evolution within the provinces, rather than by the federal government imposing it on them.

Everywhere we went in Canada, we kept hearing people saying, "For God's sake, stop cramming French down our throats."

I would like to emphasize, though, that we do say that when the provinces agree, the rights of minorities should be entrenched in the Constitution. In other words, we're not opposed to entrenching rights in the Constitution. What we're saying is, "Do it by agreement, not by bludgeoning."

Q: Do you foresee the Task Force Report being used by the Opposition parties to criticize Mr. Trudeau's policies?

I worry, frankly, and hope and pray that the report doesn't become a 'football'. That is, I worry if different parties take different parts out of it and say, "See, you were wrong; the Task Force said this..." And it is a worry because a federal election is coming down the road.

On the other hand, we couldn't wait and wait and wait until an election is called. Also, we thought it was important to get the report out well before the referendum in Quebec, so that there would be a credible federalist alternative for French-speaking Quebecers to look at.

Sure, there's hay there for the Conservatives if they want to use it in a narrow way. But I think the unity of the country is far too important, and I hope that it doesn't just become used as an election issue.

At the moment it is not being used in a partisan way. I would just hate to see the country "go down the tube" as a result of National Unity being exploited for short-term political use. That would be tragic.

Q: Is Bill C-60 not a "credible federalist alternative"?

Within Quebec? Not at all. It doesn't deal with the fundamental issue, which is the distribution of powers between the federal government and the provinces.

"Canada has the symptoms that have preceded disintegration of other countries"

When you say Bill C-60, I don't mean that the whole Bill is not credible, but that the fundamental issue, which is, "what are federal and provincial powers?", is just left for the future. That doesn't give a Quebecer who wants to be a federalist any idea of what the relative roles of the federal and provincial governments are going to be.

The nature of the central institutions you create or revise or reform must surely be related to the powers that they're going to perform. Similarly, the powers you assign to each level of government surely is related to the nature and structure of these institutions.

So, ideally, I think that you have to relate distribution of powers to central institutions.

Q: What is your reaction to Mr. Levesque's statement that the report will merely "whet the appetite" of Quebecers?

I don't take very seriously what I think on his part is simply rhetoric to try to scare people from accepting proposals that might be a real counterweight to Sovereignty-Association.

Our view is that unity and centralization are not the same thing.

Some decentralization does not necessarily mean disunity. Indeed, if you recognize regional aspirations and diversity, you may reduce the tensions.

Q: When Rene Levesque has been questioned as to what his concept of Sovereignty-Association is, he has mentioned, among other things, economic union, common currency and customs union. Is this not somewhat parallel to your recommendations?

There's a basic difference. The major view that he has of economic association is of two units in which Canada and Quebec would have to unanimously agree on economic policy. In other words, if there's no agreement, there's no action.

Furthermore, we think that one of Attitudes are the fundamental thing, but the institutions channel, mould, and direct attitudes. Therefore we think that certain institutions should be restructured to direct attitudes towards a greater appreciation of diversity and towards a seeking of accommodation rather than a seeking of confrontation.

I would not be expecting the Government to adopt everything in the report. We don't feel that we're the last word on the subject. We feel that we're a stepping stone in the Canadian debate.

As to timing, I couldn't give a blueprint of months. The Federal-Provincial Conference, ...the timing of a federal election...and the fluidity of the situation make predictions hard to make. My view is that we have to start making some real progress on this very soon.

Q: What future do you see for the country if your recommendations are completely ignored?

That depends on "how" they are ignored. If nothing is done, I would be very worried. I have studied, in my own writings, the disintegration of federal systems.

We have the symptoms that have preceded the disintegration of other countries. I don't want to be misinterpreted as saying that we're on the verge of disintegration or civil war tomorrow, but some of the symptoms are there, and worryingly there, and becoming clearer month by month, year by year.

Therefore, if nothing were done, I'd be very seriously worried.

Q: What do you plan your own personal role to be from here on in as far as the National Unity debate goes?

The first thing, of course, is to spend my full time back at Queen's. I was told when I joined that it would only take three days every two weeks. In fact, it took a lot more of my time.

That doesn't mean, however, that one goes totally silent on the issues of Canadian Unity. I'm sure that as the public and others read the report, they'll ask members of the Task Force to come and talk to them to explain what we had to say, but I don't foresee for myself any active promotional role.

Q: Do you feel that the $3.7 million cost of the Task Force has been completely justified?

I would say that if the report helps to keep Canada united, $3.7 million is an awfully small amount. One new destroyer for the Canadian navy must cost ten times that amount - I'm not absolutely sure what the actual cost is. What's the point on spending all this money on military machinery if you don't have a country to defend?

If we get our sense of proportion right, $3.7 million to contribute towards the unity of the country is a small amount to pay compared to the way we spend money on some other things. That would be my justification for it. I hope we contribute to the solution.

Produced by Queen's JOURNAL*Entertainment*Cano and FM dazzle Grant Hall audience

Eric Evans

The audience in Grant Hall for the FM and Cano concert did not fill the place, but it did not regret going either. The QEA must be congratulated for bringing one of the finest concerts Queen's has seen in recent years.

FM, a very electronic, progressive rock band with three members led off the concert. Playing all of the songs from their album Black Noise except for the title track, they were impressive in their versatility. Cameron Hawkins on synthesizer and bass was excellent as the band presented their very science fiction oriented material. Not unlike Genesis, FM was able to change the tempo and direction of their music in mid-song, moving in one song, "One O'clock Tomorrow", from the subtle and light and eventually arriving at driving, hard rock.

FM's performance was at times confusing, as the band fought between hard and progressive rock, and they did lose some of their music's precision and quality out of the studio - not that Grant Hall's acoustics helped much. As with most bands that use complex electronic music, FM was forced to use tapes to augment certain songs, but this did not detract from the overall quality of the band's performance. In fact, not having heard Cano except on albums, I was sure as FM left the stage after their encore that the audience would not be receptive to "French Canadian folk-jazz". The audience had obviously enjoyed FM and songs like Phasors on Stun, and Aldebaran. However, while FM loses something out of the studio, Cano gains immensely from performing before a live audience.

Cano is not "just" a "French Canadian folk-jazz" band. It is a very tightly wrapped entertainment package that can not help but impress. The band's energy, talent and obvious enjoyment in performing combined to grab the audience and hold them for close to two hours. Weaving together theatrics, instrumental solos and vocals in both official languages, the band well earned its two encores.

Cameron Hawkins of FM.

It is hard to pick out anything about Cano's performance that is not worth mentioning. John Doern on bass earned applause in mid-song for one solo, and the blending of David Burt's lead guitar with Wasy Kohut's violin left no doubt as to their combined talent. If the strongest point of the concert had to be named though, it would have to be the vocals of Rachel Paiement. Her haunting voice on "Cercles de la Nuit" and the song for her brother, "It's Cold Outside" were beautiful.

The enjoyable mix of French, English, and in the case of the song "Pywhnyok", Ukrainian, did not seem at all in conflict on the stage with Cano. Their sound is uniquely their own, a blend of jazz, folk and at times, very impressive rock. But in Grant Hall Wednesday night, it was nothing short of excellent.

Peterson, Gray a hit

Julian Cunningham

Conversations in the washroom of RMC's sprawling Normandy Hall, during the intermission of Theatre Passe Muraille's Billy Bishop Goes to War: "He's just amazing. I really sympathize with him." "When he first came on, it was so real." "That guy's incredible." "C'mon. Let's get back to our seats."

The RMC students were referring to one Eric Peterson, whose whirlpool vitality effortlessly drew his audience into the turbulent life and times of Billy Bishop, Canada's greatest war hero. He was just perfect.

It's not Peterson's technique that marks him out as a virtuoso. After all, he can't sing. Yet he could have made you believe he was Frank Sinatra. He speaks with a poorly modulated high-pitch rasp. But if he had said he was Sir John Geilgud, I really couldn't have disagreed.

His secret is his energy. He commands an audience with an internal power that is so precisely focused, that it can cut and shape empty space into any image his mind may conceive. It allows him to carry a normal conversation, with himself, as two different characters. The effect is miraculous at times.

The only other man onstage Wednesday night was John Gray at the piano. He wrote, scored, directed, sang and accompanied Billy Bishop. The mood of his music shifted from reckless bravura to pensive lyricism as freely as Peterson shifted in character from Billy Bishop to King George V. Their Flanders and Swan rapport gave the production a special warmth.

"We shall dance in the sky. Who knows why?" The song quietly breathed. An aging Billy Bishop politely said goodnight, and the audience rose to their feet in a spontaneous burst of gratitude. Next to Vincent Price, Peterson and Gray are the best thing to hit Kingston this season. You can see them in Toronto.

Record Reviews

Kate Bush: Lionheart
reviewed by Bruce Stratton

Kate Bush is not a normal person. One need only see a picture of her hair to realize this. If one is lucky enough to have heard her voice it becomes even more obvious.

For Kate Bush has a voice unlike that of any other. To say that her voice is high is to understate the case. Horribly "distinctive" and "arresting" are words which also spring to mind when one is confronted with Bush's singing for the first time. It is hard to imagine a neutral reaction to Kate Bush.

Yet her latest album, "Lionheart", somehow fails to be as effective as an entire project seems to be very toned down. Perhaps her producer Andrew Powell felt that a restrained Kate Bush was necessary to make the album commercially viable. Or perhaps it's that Bush's voice is just not powerful enough to be spotlighted. In any case, on "Lionheart" Bush's voice is so subdued as to be virtually devoid of emotion. The technique is there, and it is very impressive, but this is not enough to save the album from the one fate it should by rights have avoided at all costs—mediocrity.

Bush's voice, whether or not it is appealing, is at least worthy of attention. Her songs, however, are deserving of no such interest. How can one listen to Bush singing "WOW, WOW, WOW, WOW, WOW, WOW, Unbelievable" without wondering how she ever managed to convince EMI to print her lyrics in full on the album jacket? Musically, Bush's songs are rather bland, uniform, and lean too heavily on electric keyboards.

But she does have a unique, and at times, enthralling voice. It is unlikely that anyone who has heard her will forget Kate Bush—and that, in this age of disposable pop personalities, is something to boast about.

The Babys: Head First
reviewed by Julia Grunau

"Head First", the Babys' third album in as many years, won't be a surprise to grown-ups who have been following their progress. After a surprisingly good, raunchy, and energetic debut, they settled into teen-age idolism with their "Broken Heart" LP. Evidently they receive more attention as idols than as raunchy and hard-driving novices. "Head First" is an extension of "Broken Heart", but has its bright spots.

Lead singer and bassist John Waite's voice has more discipline and range than ever before, while his songs (he authors or co-authors seven of the album's nine tracks) are more melodic and memorable. The group's musicianship is unquestionable. Wally Stocker's guitar is genuinely rough when it has to be. And Hit Parader called Tony Brock the best rock drummer in the world; he isn't, but he's competition. Michael Corby's status as Baby grand pianist is left up in the air with this LP—his picture is not on the album but he plays on five tracks and helped write two—but his keyboard work is excellent, especially on "You (Got It)".

The Babys use lots of strings, but are adamant about having control over their albums, so the strings seem to be what they want. The Babys are good at what they do. They write crotch rock ("Silk stockings can't be found on my floor no more...I love the way you taste") for virgins. They are MOR with a tongue. "Head First" is an album for boyfriends and girlfriends and late nights in living rooms.

The Kinks: Misfits
reviewed by Jim Cormier

At some point in 1978, while bands were either merely staying alive or de-evolving or some such thing, there emerged a highly accessible humanitarian statement: The Kinks' Misfits.

Musically, this album is just the right weight of clean, uncluttered rock, complementing and showcasing Ray Davies' sincere, conversational lyrical style. The Kinks play economically, featuring Davies' high smooth vocals above what is always a balanced blend of guitars, piano and drums. The songs are melodic, imprinted with Davies' idiosyncratic leaps in pitch which may add both to the humour or pathos of his subject matter. In a word, the Kinks express passion through melody rather than noise level.

Moods vary on the album. The whimsical "Out of the Wardrobe" is a tale of a transvestite chick named Dick who is "not a faggot as you might suppose" but "just feels restricted in conventional clothes". The poignant "A Rock and Roll Fantasy" is a gripping statement of Ray Davies' disillusionment with his own career. Running throughout is a unifying theme: the confrontation of the individual with the alien forces of this wicked old world, whether these be social convention, career problems, hay fever, "crooked politicians and the unemployment queue", racial inequality or just life in general.

Although his album is jammed full of absurdly satisfying lyrical observations—"Oh, life's a mother"—and infectious musical eccentricities—occasional lapses into beach music parody, Dixieland horns creeping out of nowhere—it is the overall spirit which most impresses. The Kinks, like the rest of us, inhabit a "mixed up, muddled up, shook up world". As the cover art suggests, Ray Davies' head is pulled in different directions by this world but he never ignores life's problems enough to become a balloon-headed "Bee Gee", nor lets them repress him enough to become a "Taling Head". So...if you're still suffering from Saturday Night Fever and if most of the new wave seems too bitter a pill to swallow, buy this album. It may well be the perfect antidote.

Claude Chabrol. For years this remarkable director remained in the shadows of his French New Wave colleagues, judged by critics to be merely a skilled craftsman who possessed little of this inspired genius widely recognized in Jean-Luc Godard and Francois Truffaut. Chabrol made the first of the New Wave films in 1957 and gradually became adept at churning out psychological thrillers. In the late 1960's though, he came into his own, his technique finely honed and a critical eye that zeroed in on the French petit-bourgeois family in all its repressed glory. In 1977, he made two French-Canadian co-productions. Violette Noziete is clearly a fine film winning top awards at Cannes and elsewhere. Trailing closely in its wake was Blood Relatives, which recently opened at the Capitol Theatre.

Starring Donald Sutherland, Aude Landry, Lisa Langois, and Stephane Audran, Blood Relatives is an expertly designed murder-thriller set (and shot) in Montreal. A young girl of 17 is brutally murdered in a grimy alleyway, the only witness being her cousin who runs to the police in a state of shock. Donald Sutherland plays Inspector Carella, the detective who takes the case, as Chabrol leads us through a series of flashbacks and questioning of suspects. The result is a thorough examination of the family with whom the dead cousin lived. Without laying blame on any particular individual, the interrelationships and psyches of these people are methodically observed. Chabrol definitely views the nuclear family as a seething nest of repressed desire with various forms of self-destructive tendencies.

Chabrol on location: Filmwork is no picnic

her testimony to name her brother as the twisted killer. We subsequently discover that this brother and his cousin have been involved in a clandestine affair, without the knowledge of the puritanical father and a mother who is inseparable from her bottle. When the affair ends painfully, it seems logical that the love-crazy boy may have murdered out of jealousy. Who can we believe? Chabrol is extremely subtle and stingy with the clues, forcing one to suspect that the murder isn't the only aspect of the plot he is concerned with.

Petit-bourgeois hypocrisy, narrow-mindedness, and fear of sexual expression become the main focal points of the rationale that cause tension and violence to arise from the family structure. With an unobtrusive cinematic style, Chabrol (gaining valuable insights from his mentors Fritz Lang and Alfred Hitchcock) constructs a narrative built upon a multitude of detail. The dialogue is worked out so that relatively few words carry enough information to complement the camerawork. Every aspect of family life and the communication of its members add to the thickening plot.

When Inspector Carella discovers the cousin's diary, the life of the detective and his strong-willed wife also become significant. He becomes fascinated with the private past of this girl, driving him to push further into the lives of her relatives. In fact the Sutherland character provides our entry as well, and our position assumes importance. The audience's observational place within the film begins to desire answers to the questions Chabrol poses.

These aspects of Blood Relatives are really added extras though Chabrol is a maker of entertainment first and foremost, probably the main reason why he tends to get snubbed by the critics looking for "high culture" or blatantly profound films. He can make the banal and routing absolutely fascinating, as he continues his cinematic probing into our most fundamental social structure. His often black sense of humour cuts through the manners and habits of cultural veneer, revealing the human essence beneath. People's fears, paranoias, and obsessions are the things Chabrol is concerned with— aspects of living everyone must cope with. His contribution to contemporary cinema shouldn't be doubted, he is a master of his own genre.

Ravens bounce Gaels 109-67

Ron Jamula

Inconsistency has plagued the Queen's Golden Gaels basketball team all year and Tuesday night's home contest with the powerful Carleton Ravens was another example. At times the Gaels looked outstanding but most times they were sloppy and lackluster.

Carleton took advantage of the Gaels inconsistent play and demolished the Gaels 109-67 before a sparse crowd at the Bartlett gymnasium.

Coach Tom Frood cannot understand his team's home performances. "We seem to play terrible at home, this is where we should be playing our best ball," The Gaels played well the last two away games against Laurentian and University of Toronto losing tight battles.

The game itself was an outside shooting clinic by guards Pat Stokka and Rick Powers of the Carleton Ravens. The two veteran guards broke the Gaels 2-12 zone defence wide open, hitting on jumpers from the top of the key and baseline. The Gaels were never in this contest as Carleton took advantage of missed goal shots and numerous turnovers to pen up a 12-2 lead four minutes into the game. The Gaels started to chip away at the Raven lead however every time the Gaels got within striking distance Carleton would pull away. Using a variety of full court zone presses the Ravens kept the Gaels off balance. Queen's was guilty of dribbling into traps, throwing cross court passes and showed a general lack of discipline. Carleton went into the dressing room at the half with a well deserved 57-29 lead.

The second half was a continuation of the Gaels poor play. The Golden Gaels were doing basic things wrong. They were not boxing out on defense, not coming back to the ball to receive passes and committing numerous bad fouls. It was not until the final five minutes that the Gaels began to play well.

Pat Stokka was outstanding for Carleton scoring 28 points. His partner at guard, Rick Powers chipped in 16. Jeff Folkard was man for Queen's scoring 17.

A bright spot in the Gael lineup was the play of 6'4" freshmen Rick Emerson. Coming off a leg injury the strong forward scored eight points as well as rebounding well. Carleton guard Pat Stokka is not only a basketball player he was protected by the Ottawa Rough Riders of the CFL.

The Gaels travel to Ottawa Saturday for a rematch with the Ravens.

Gaels host rival Blues

Chris Cuthbert

The Queen's Golden Gaels have been mathematically eliminated from post season competition but there's still a lot at stake when they host the University of Toronto Blues this weekend.

The Blues, perennial OUA A champions, invade Jock Hartly Arena for games Friday night at 8:00pm and Saturday afternoon at 1:30pm with both matches broadcast on CFRC 1490AM.

Queen's and Toronto will renew a traditional rivalry which was born over 60 years ago. Although the school rivalry has been weakened in recent years by OUA A football divisional realignment, the two schools are still pitted against each other in the eastern division of the OUA A hockey league. Therefore, school bragging rights are at stake everytime the two teams clash.

On paper the two teams compare like Mutt and Jeff. The Varsity Blues, front runners in the OUA A east, boast a tremendously deep roster with a junior varsity club that could whip most OUA A entries. The Gaels, on the other hand, are mixed in the division basement, victims of injuries, lack of depth and inconsistency.

The Golden Gaels, however have an uncanny knack of playing the Blues tough. In 1976 before a capacity crowd at Jock Hartly Arena the Gaels upset the Toronto side 3-2, last year the Gaels were the first team to blemish Varsity's perfect record with a 4-4 tie at home and again this season the Gaels claimed the first regular season point from Toronto with a 6-6 tie at Varsity Arena.

As well, two Gaels in particular should be reeved up for the weekend twinbill. Queen's forwards Paul Stothart and John MacIntyre are perched at the top of the OUA A east scoring race with 22 points each. Dan D'Alvise and Cary Farelli of Toronto, Lou Clements and Cam Campbell of Laurentian are right on their heels.

Gaels blast RMC

The Queen's Golden Gaels took a trip crosstown Tuesday evening and came up with a lopsided 12-0 romp over the Royal Military College.

Steve Watt and Paul Stothart led the scoring parade with three goals apiece. Ron Davidson and Kevin Treacy each registered a pair with Gary Brandt and John MacIntyre firing singles.

For the second consecutive exhibition match the Gaels' netminding duties were split by Barry Ashby and Dan Galbraith.

Gaels came up flat against Carleton before a sparse home crowd.

Gym men host OUAA's

This weekend Queen's will host the OUAA men's gymnastics finals. The competition will take place in the Bartlett gymnasium at 6:00pm Saturday February 10.

The top eight teams from across Ontario will be present. Favoured to win the team competition is the perennial Canadian champion, York University. However the rivalry for second spot between Toronto and Queen's is an intense one. The Golden Gaels are looking strong this year and should do well with the backing of a good home crowd.

Individually Ontario gymnasts are the finest in Canada. Saturday's meet is a qualifying meet for the Canadian championships, where last year 17 of the 18 top placings were from Ontario. Saturday's competition, then presents an excellent opportunity to see the best in Canada at this dynamic and interesting sport.

Marilyn Snell

The Queen's figure skating team competed in the McMaster Invitational last weekend and came away with second place honours.

The strong contingent from the University of Western Ontario placed first in the meet with a total of 172 points overall, Queen's followed with 155 and Toronto took third place with 132 points. The other two schools in the competition McMaster and York placed well behind.

Three firsts were recorded by Queen's skaters. Pattie MacDonald and Marilyn Snell captured top spot in the Senior Similar pairs, Carolyn Clayson was first in the Junior Ladies Singles and Pam Booth and Brenda Cossman grabbed first place honours in the Novice Similar Dance.

As well Queen's figure skaters registered three second place finishes; Julie Ringma and Pete Sibbald in the Novice Mixed Dance, Cathy Hunt and Dave Jackson in the Junior Mixed Dance and Hunt again in the Senior Dance Competition.

Queen's skaters also captured 7 third place finishes; Julie Ringma-Novice Ladies Singles, Ann Stuart-Junior Ladies Singles, Marilyn Snell-Intermediate Ladies Singles, Ruth MacDougall-Senior Ladies Singles, Julie Ringma and Marg Davies-Novice Similar Dance, Sarah Boyes and Carolyn Clayson-Junior Similar Pairs and Sarah Boyes and Christy Gunton-Similar Dance.

Synchro girls win again

Wendy White

Congratulations to the members of the Queen's Synchro team whose excellent performances regained the Eastern Regional Team Title for the seventh consecutive year. In the meet held at McGill last week-end, the 12 membered team accumulated a total of 69 points, followed by McGill with 39, U of T with 29, and Ottawa U with 9. This truly was a team effort with everyone turning in their best performances this season.

In the Novice Figures Competition all four Queen's entrants worked hard with placings going to Linda Wiskin (16th), Jeannie Hughes (5th), Audrey Nicholson (2nd), and Cathy Beaumont, "way up there in the clouds" with a first. Queen's swimmers also dominated the figures competition in the Senior category, with rookies Barb Elliot and Linda Abbott placing 7th and 5th respectively, and Celeste Jennings and Janet Fix taking the second and third spots.

In the routine competitions, Queen's made a clean sweep of the top two positions in both the solo and duet categories. In solo Wendy White won the event for Queen's, followed by a strong performance by team mate Laura Birtwhistle, while in duet Karen Russell and Celeste Jennings placed first, once again followed by the dynamic duo of Audrey Nicholson and Cathy Beaumont. A special congratulations goes to the eight swimmer routine of, Linda Abbott, Laura Birtwhistle, Barb Elliot, Janet Fix, Jeannie Hughes, Mary Jackson, Karen Russell and Wendy White whose combined efforts with coach Sheila Murphy and manager Joanne King earned them a well deserved first place.

The Ontario finals will be held at McMaster during the last week-end of reading week, and for anyone in the vicinity, spectator support would be appreciated. The team will be defending their seventh straight title and are expecting some extremely tough competition from the Western Universities. If you are unable to make this, a demonstration will take place at the Queen's pool Wednesday Feb. 14th, at 8.45.

Sky divers plunge to victory

Julie Bratton

The Queen's Parachuting Club stomped on their competitors at the "hit and run" jumping competition held during the Gananoque Winter Carnival. The activities were held on February 3rd and 4th on the St. Lawrence River by the Gananoque firehall in brilliant sunshine on Saturday and blowing snow Sunday. The Queen's Club vied against jumpers from Western University and various other clubs.

In jumping competitions the accuracy of the jumper is measured by how close to a target he lands. Before take-off the jumper must calculate the wind drift he and his parachute will experience in the air and jump from the plane with that information in mind. He can then steer his parachute by pulling on the steering lines. This competition was held on ice making landings slightly treacherous. Winners are usually chosen by the one landing nearest the target, however in "hit and run", places are determined by the time it takes the jumper in landing to reach the target.

Last weekend, each jumper was slated for five jumps, however the inclement weather on Sunday forced this number to be reduced to four each. The final standings were based on the best three times of each person. There were three divisions to the competition based partly on experience and partly on the type of parachute used. In the Junior division the parachutes were round, in the Senior Division there were two classes: round and square canopies.

In the Junior division Queen's jumpers wiped out the competition; Michael Evans was first, Jim Taylor second, Margaret King third and Joyce Fleming fourth. In the Senior round division, Doug Scott of Queen's placed third and in the Square canopy division, Sandy MacHattie did very well for Queen's, placing second in twenty jumpers.

Queen's skaters should be close to the top this weekend at the OWIAA's.

Similar Pairs and Sarah Boyes and Christy Gunton-Similar Dance. For the McMaster Invitational each university was allowed up to 3 entries in each event. In the upcoming OWIAA championship, Friday, February 9 at McMaster, only 1 entry per university per category will be allowed. Interestingly, if 1 entry had been allowed per category at this meet Queen's would have placed first overall ahead of Western.

The team, then, is confident of a strong showing at the OWIAA's this weekend.

Athlete of the week

JANE FORBES-ROBERTS from the Women's Squash Team is this week's Athlete of the Week. Last weekend she continued her string of impressive performances at Waterloo, where she outclassed representatives of York, U of T, McMaster and Waterloo. In fact, Jane did not lose any games in this five school tournament as the Queen's number one seed led the Squash Team to victory.

Queen's has now won both of the designated tournaments on route to the OWIAA Championships. Jane, in third-year law, came back this fall after not competing last year. Her undefeated showing thus far in the year has made her the number one ranked women's squash player in Ontario universities.

Honourable mention goes to BRIAN MCLEOD of the Golden Gaels Volleyball Team. Brian was outstanding as part of a spectacular team effort in defeating York to allow the Volleyball team to remain undefeated and in first place.

NOTE: Nominations for Athlete of the Week can be submitted to the Athletics Events Manager any time before Tuesday morning.

Badminton men take east finals

Richard Hughes

This past weekend Queen's Men's Badminton Team competed in the Eastern Ontario Finals at York University.

The team came out in first place over Ryerson, Carleton and U of T. This qualifies the men to advance to the OUA finals against the winner of the western section this weekend at Ryerson.

This is Queen's 3rd. tournament victory of the season following previous wins at the York and Queen's Invitationals.

Queen's Recreation is accepting employment applications for the following

Bews News

Mark Pentland

The Cross-Country ski meet, held last week was a tremendous success. One hundred and fifty-one participants competed on a well-kept course at West Campus.

Meds emerged the champions, with PHE and Commerce 81 finishing a close second and third respectively. Mechanical stick Rob Muddiman managed to persuade 40 skiers to participate and his effort was much appreciated. Pat McLellan (Mining) had the fastest time for the 5km. race, with a time of 18 minutes, 59 seconds. Dave Thompson (Arts 82) was only 7 seconds behind and Rob Livingston (Commerce 81) finished third. Peter Kopp, race convenor, did a tremendous job of organizing the meet and his expertise ensured a smooth successful event.

The annual Bews Swim Meet has been going on all week with the usual fantastic turn-out by all units. This popular event is a spectacle for both the competitors and observers and is indicative of the participating competitiveness of the intramural program.

Hockey, Basketball and Broomball will be finishing their regular seasons next week with play-offs beginning the week after Reading Week. Ball Hockey, Curling and Bowling continue their schedules immediately following the break and play-offs will commence at their end. Meanwhile the Squash, Racquetball, Handball, Freethrow and Table-tennis tournament continue to narrow towards their championship titles.

Gaelic football at Queen's

The first annual Canadian University Gaelic Football Championship (winter rules) will be played here at Queen's this Saturday, Feb. 10. The match pits the Queen's Rugby Gaels against the Queen's Soccer Gaels.

For those of you who are not familiar with the game, the Encyclopaedia of Sports has the following to say about it.

"Ireland isn't the only place where Gaelic football is played, but the Irish seem to be the only ones who play it twice, or more.

"Sports enthusiasts who have seen all forms of football, and judged impartially, declare that Gaelic football is the game of games if you are seeking swift-changing panoramas, brilliant speed, reckless daring, wild courage and sustained action."

Kick-off for this spectacular event will be 11:30 a.m. on Tindall Field.

CFRC: broadcasting for you

C. Fuyarchuk

CFRC, Queen's Radio, is determined to provide Queen's and the Kingston community with the kind of broadcasting they want to hear. While only able to operate four days a week at present due to interference with the Engineering Department, CFRC attempts to provide the widest variety of programming possible in that short space of time. Rock, folk, jazz, pops, comedy, public affairs and lots more, that's what this volunteer, non-profit station presents. Today in the Journal, a few highlights of this weekend's programming:

FRIDAY - on CFRC 1490, CONTEMPORARY FOLK at 6:30, this week with Cathy Fuyarchuk, features a variety of recently released albums. Stan Rogers, Bruce Cockburn, Leo Kottke, and Kate and Anna McGarrigle, to mention a few. GOLDEN GEL HOCKEY - Queen's vs. U of T - will be broadcast live at 8 p.m. by CFRC's super sportscasters. After the game, tune in to NOCTURNE with Rick Choma. At midnight NOCTURNE goes simulcast - all your favourites till 2 a.m. with Jon Spencer.

On CFRC 91.9 FM, MOTIFS, a classical programme based on a specific period, style, or composer, will feature Richard Strauss's "Salome" along with more of Arthur Zimmerman's, and your most loved music. For science fiction lovers, listen to Reid Hart on THE AN-VISUALIS EFFECT at 9:30 JAZZ FM at 10:00 brings you two hours of mellow music.

SATURDAY - at 1490 from noon until 6 (except for this week's GOLDEN GEL HOCKEY game at 1:30) SATURDAY SOUNDS brings you a wide variety of music from CFRC's pops library. Barbara Streisand, Roger Whittaker, Dan Hill, Billy Joel, Diana Ross, JOIE DE VIVRE at 6:30 is "une émission entièrement en français - musique, poésie, n'importe quoi!" At 8:30 its NOCTURNE again, this time with Cheri Aspinall and Dave Moyer. At midnight call in for your favourites on the NOCTURNE REQUEST SHOW - till 3 a.m.

On FM from noon until 4, PORTFOLIO this week features Jack Kenny, President of the Ontario Jockey Club on "Let's Discuss It." At one o'clock ITALIA SENZA VELI brings you the sound of today's Italy; at 1:30 Monica Vogelbusch presents a half-hour of German music and news - and no, that doesn't mean polka! At 2, become enlightened with THE CALL OF THE FLUTE, music from India. And at 3 p.m., get a good chuckle out of Leonard Segall's comedy hour. All this put together for you by William Dresser. At 4, COTTIN' PICKIN', two lively ours of bluegrass with Brian Freeman, will focus on Bob Wills and the Texas Playboys, the man who created Western Swing. OVERVIEW, from 6 till 6:30, with Colin Brown, is a public affairs programme of topics and issues of direct concern to Queen's and Kingston listeners. READ TO ME at 8 features May Sinclair's story, "Where Their Fire is Not Quenched", read for you by Canadian broadcaster Alan Maitland. JAZZ FM again at 10:00 is followed at midnight by the NOCTURNE REQUEST SHOW.

SUNDAY - Begin Sunday the right way with light popular music on AM or with a survey of classical music from the medieval to the modern era on FM, both starting at 8 a.m. At noon, three hours of CLASSICS BY REQUEST hosted this Sunday by Graham Sellars. BOOKENDS at 3, features Susan Reid reading "The Loons" by Margaret Laurence and Edgar Allan Poe's "The Mask of the Red Death." KALEIDOSCOPE, from 4 till 7, brings you the golden oldies and the latest hits of pops, rock, jazz, folk and classics. Bill Cosby and Monty Python visit occasionally. At 8:30 Brian Freeman's FOLKWAYS focuses on Leadbelly, that one-man "Archives" of American folk music who died a pauper in 1949 leaving behind a heritage well worth listening to. At midnight, listen to post-Bee Bop on JAZZ SUITE. This week William Dresser takes you up to 2 a.m. rounding out CFRC's weekend of alternative broadcasting.

CFRC is your station. Tune in... and if you don't hear what you want to, pick up your telephone 547-6677. CFRC is broadcasting for you.

AMS Housing Lottery

Monday, Feb. 12

Doors open 6 - 7 p.m.

Rules and Procedures

1. The lottery establishes only a position on the waiting list. The number of units available of any size depends on the number of renewals. There is usually a 50 percent turnover. We will know which apartments and houses will be available on March 1, at which time you will be informed if you have a unit.

2. The lottery is open only to Queen's students who will be registered as full time students for the academic year 1978-1979. Student cards must be presented at the lottery or at the AMS office by 5 p.m. Thurs. March 1, if a place on the list is obtained. You don't have to stay for the draw, but it is up to you to find out if your name is selected. A list of those names will be posted on the bulletin board outside the AMS office.

3. Each student is entitled to only one ballot, available at the door, which can be applied to only one type of dwelling unit. If two ballots are found in the same name both will be destroyed. However, if you are applying for a five-man house, for example, all five prospective tenants may apply. Bring your own pencil to sign ballot.

4. An inc. "dual whose name is drawn and who chooses to accept the dwelling must" a tenant of the unit, and must have his name on the lease (and be legally bound by the terms of the lease.)

5. Units leased through AMS Housing based on number single bedrooms.
